NATIONAL UCC FINANCING STATEMENT AMENDMENT ADDENDUM (FORM UCC3Ad) (REV. 07/29/98)

Official Comment

1. Source. New.

2. "Safe Harbor" Written Forms. Although Section 9-520 limits the bases upon which the filing office can refuse to accept records, this section provides sample written forms that must be accepted in every filing office in the country, as long as the filing office's rules permit it to accept written communications. By completing one of the forms in this section, a secured party can be certain that the filing office is obligated to accept it.

The forms in this section are based upon national financing statement forms that were in use under former Article 9. Those forms were developed over an extended period and reflect the comments and suggestions of filing officers, secured parties and their counsel, and service companies. The formatting of those forms and of the ones in this section has been designed to reduce error by both filers and filing offices.

A filing office that accepts written communications may not reject, on grounds of form or format, a filing using these forms. Although filers are not required to use the forms, they are encouraged and can be expected to do so, inasmuch as the forms are well designed and avoid the risk of rejection on the basis of form or format. As their use expands, the forms will rapidly become familiar to both filers and filing-office personnel. Filing offices may and should encourage the use of these forms by declaring them to be the "standard" (but not exclusive) forms for each jurisdiction, albeit without in any way suggesting that alternative forms are unacceptable.

The multi-purpose form in subsection (b) covers changes with respect to the debtor, the secured party, the collateral, and the status of the financing statement (termination and continuation). A single form may be used for several different types of amendments at once (e.g., both to change a debtor's name and continue the effectiveness of the financing statement).

§ 9-522. Maintenance and Destruction of Records.

[Alternative A]

(a) [Post-lapse maintenance and retrieval of information.] The filing office shall maintain a record of the information provided in a filed financing statement for at least one year after the effectiveness of the financing statement has lapsed under Section 9-515 with respect to all secured parties of record. The record must be retrievable by using the name of the debtor and by using the file number assigned to the initial financing statement to which the record relates.

[Alternative B]

(a) [Post-lapse maintenance and retrieval of information.] The filing office shall maintain a record of the information provided in a filed financing statement for at least one year after the effectiveness of the financing statement has lapsed under Section 9-515 with respect to all secured parties of record. The record must be retrievable by using the name of the debtor and:

(1) if the record was filed [or recorded] in the filing office described in Section 9-501(a)(1), by using the file number assigned to the initial financing statement to which the record relates and the date [and time] that the record was filed [or recorded]; or

(2) if the record was filed in the filing office described in Section 9-501(a)(2), by using the file number assigned to the initial financing statement to which the record relates.

[End of Alternatives]

(b) [Destruction of written records.] Except to the extent that a statute governing disposition of public records provides otherwise, the filing office immediately may destroy any written record evidencing a financing statement. However, if the filing office destroys a written record, it shall maintain another record of the financing statement which complies with subsection (a).

Legislative Note: States whose real-estate filing offices require additional information in amendments and cannot search their records by both the name of the debtor and the file number should enact Alternative B to Sections 9-512(a), 9-518(b), 9-519(f) and 9-522(a).

Official Comment

1. Source. Former Section 9-403(3), revised substantially.

2. Maintenance of Records. Section 9-523 requires the filing office to provide information concerning certain lapsed financing statements. Accordingly, subsection (a) requires the filing office to maintain a record of the information in a financing statement for at least one year after lapse. During that time, the filing office may not delete any information with respect to a filed financing statement; it may only add information. This approach relieves the filing office from any duty to determine whether to substitute or delete information upon receipt of an amendment. It also assures searchers that they will receive all information with respect to financing statements filed against a debtor and thereby be able themselves to determine the state of the public record.

The filing office may maintain this information in any medium. Subsection (b) permits the filing office immediately to destroy written records evidencing a financing statement, provided that the filing office maintains another record of the information contained in the financing statement as required by subsection (a).

§ 9-523. Information From Filing Office; Sale or License of Records.

(a) [Acknowledgment of filing written record.] If a person that files a written record requests an acknowledgment of the filing, the filing office shall send to the person an image of the record showing the number assigned to the record pursuant to Section 9-519(a)(1) and the date and time of the filing of the record. However, if the person furnishes a copy of the record to the filing office, the filing office may instead:

(1) note upon the copy the number assigned to the record pursuant to Section 9-519(a)(1) and the date and time of the filing of the record; and

(2) send the copy to the person.

(b) [Acknowledgment of filing other record.] If a person files a record other than a written record, the filing office shall communicate to the person an acknowledgment that provides:

(1) the information in the record;

(2) the number assigned to the record pursuant to Section 9-519(a)(1); and

(3) the date and time of the filing of the record.

(c) [Communication of requested information.] The filing office shall communicate or otherwise make available in a record the following information to any person that requests it:

(1) whether there is on file on a date and time specified by the filing office, but not a date earlier than three business days before the filing office receives the request, any financing statement that:

(A) designates a particular debtor [or, if the request so states, designates a particular debtor at the address specified in the request];

(B) has not lapsed under Section 9-515 with respect to all secured parties of record; and

(C) if the request so states, has lapsed under Section 9-515 and a record of which is maintained by the filing office under Section 9-522(a);

(2) the date and time of filing of each financing statement; and

(3) the information provided in each financing statement.

(d) [Medium for communicating information.] In complying with its duty under subsection (c), the filing office may communicate information in any medium. However, if requested, the filing office shall communicate information by issuing [its written certificate] [a record that can be admitted into evidence in the courts of this State without extrinsic evidence of its authenticity].

(e) [Timeliness of filing office performance.] The filing office shall perform the acts required by subsections (a) through (d) at the time and in the manner prescribed by filing-office rule, but not later than two business days after the filing office receives the request.

(f) [Public availability of records.] At least weekly, the [insert appropriate official or governmental agency] [filing office] shall offer to sell or license to the public on a nonexclusive basis, in bulk, copies of all records filed in it under this part, in every medium from time to time available to the filing office.

Legislative Notes:

1. States whose filing office does not offer the additional service of responding to search requests limited to a particular address should omit the bracketed language in subsection (c)(1)(A).

2. A State that elects not to require real-estate filing offices to comply with either or both of subsections (e) and (f) should specify in the appropriate subsection(s) only the filing office described in Section 9-501(a)(2).

Official Comment

1. Source. Former Section 9-407; subsections (d) and (e) are new.

2. Filing Office's Duty to Provide Information. Former Section 9-407, dealing with obtaining information from the filing office, was bracketed to suggest to legislatures that its enactment was optional. Experience has shown that the method by which interested persons can obtain information concerning the public records should be uniform. Accordingly, the analogous provisions of this Article are not in brackets.

Most of the other changes from former Section 9-407 are for clarification, to embrace medium-neutral drafting, or to impose standards of performance on the filing office.

3. Acknowledgments of Filing. Subsections (a) and (b) require the filing office to acknowledge the filing of a record. Under subsection (a), the filing office is required to acknowledge the filing of a written record only upon request of the filer. Subsection (b) requires the filing office to acknowledge the filing of a non-written record even in the absence of a request from the filer.

4. Response to Search Request. Subsection (c)(3) requires the filing office to provide "the information contained in each financing statement" to a person who requests it. This requirement can be satisfied by providing copies, images, or reports. The requirement does not in any manner inhibit the filing office from also offering to provide less than all of the information (presumably for a lower fee) to a person who asks for less. Thus, subsection (c) accommodates the practice of providing only the type of record (e.g., initial financing statement, continuation statement), number assigned to the record, date and time of filing, and names and addresses of the debtor and secured party when a requesting person asks for no more (i.e., when the person does not ask for copies of financing statements). In contrast, the filing office's obligation under subsection (b) to provide an acknowledgment containing "the information contained in the record" is not defined by a customer's request. Thus unless the filer stipulates otherwise, to comply with subsection (b) the filing office's acknowledgment must contain all of the information in a record.

Subsection (c) assures that a minimum amount of information about filed records will be available to the public. It does not preclude a filing office from offering additional services.

5. Lapsed and Terminated Financing Statements. This section reflects the policy that terminated financing statements will remain part of the filing office's data base. The filing office may remove from the data base only lapsed financing statements, and then only when at least a year has passed after lapse. See Section 9-519(g). Subsection (c)(1)(C) requires a filing office to conduct a search and report as to lapsed financing statements that have not been removed from the data base, when requested.

6. Search by Debtor's Address. Subsection (c)(1)(A) contemplates that, by making a single request, a searcher will receive the results of a search of the entire public record maintained by any given filing office. Addition of the bracketed language in subsection (c)(1)(A) would permit a search report limited to financing statements showing a particular address for the debtor, but only if the search request is so limited. With or without the bracketed language, this subsection does not permit the filing office to compel a searcher to limit a request by address.

7. Medium of Communication; Certificates. Former Article 9 provided that the filing office respond to a request for information by providing a certificate. The principle of medium-neutrality would suggest that the statute not require a written certificate. Subsection (d) follows this principle by permitting the filing office to respond by communicating "in any medium." By permitting communication "in any medium," subsection (d) is not inconsistent with a system in which persons other than filing office staff conduct searches of the filing office's (computer) records.

Some searchers find it necessary to introduce the results of their search into evidence. Because official written certificates might be introduced into evidence more easily than official communications in another medium, subsection (d) affords States the option of requiring the filing office to issue written certificates upon request. The alternative bracketed language in subsection (d) recognizes that some States may prefer to permit the filing office to respond in another medium, as long as the response can be admitted into evidence in the courts of that State without extrinsic evidence of its authenticity.

8. Performance Standard. The utility of the filing system depends on the ability of searchers to get current information quickly. Accordingly, subsection (e) requires that the filing office respond to a request for information no later than two business days after it receives the request. The information contained in the response must be current as of a date no earlier than three business days before the filing office receives the request. See subsection (c)(1). The failure of the filing office to comply with performance standards, such as subsection (e), has no effect on the private rights of persons affected by the filing of records.

9. Sales of Records in Bulk. Subsection (f), which is new, mandates that the appropriate official or the filing office sell or license the filing records to the public in bulk, on a nonexclusive basis, in every medium available to the filing office. The details of implementation are left to filing-office rules.

§ 9-524. Delay by Filing Office.

Delay by the filing office beyond a time limit prescribed by this part is excused if:

(1) the delay is caused by interruption of communication or computer facilities, war, emergency conditions, failure of equipment, or other circumstances beyond control of the filing office; and

(2) the filing office exercises reasonable diligence under the circumstances.

§ 9-525. Fees.

(a) [Initial financing statement or other record: general rule.] Except as otherwise provided in subsection (e), the fee for filing and indexing a record under this part, other than an initial financing statement of the kind described in subsection (b), is [the amount specified in subsection (c), if applicable, plus]:

(1) $[X] if the record is communicated in writing and consists of one or two pages;

(2) $[2X] if the record is communicated in writing and consists of more than two pages; and

(3) $[½X] if the record is communicated by another medium authorized by filing-office rule.

(b) [Initial financing statement: public-finance and manufactured-housing transactions.] Except as otherwise provided in subsection (e), the fee for filing and indexing an initial financing statement of the following kind is [the amount specified in subsection (c), if applicable, plus]:

(1) $_____ if the financing statement indicates that it is filed in connection with a public-finance transaction;

(2) $_____ if the financing statement indicates that it is filed in connection with a manufactured-home transaction.

[Alternative A]

(c) [Number of names.] The number of names required to be indexed does not affect the amount of the fee in subsections (a) and (b).

[Alternative B]

(c) [Number of names.] Except as otherwise provided in subsection (e), if a record is communicated in writing, the fee for each name more than two required to be indexed is $_____.

[End of Alternatives]

(d) [Response to information request.] The fee for responding to a request for information from the filing office, including for [issuing a certificate showing] [communicating] whether there is on file any financing statement naming a particular debtor, is:

(1) $_____ if the request is communicated in writing; and

(2) $_____ if the request is communicated by another medium authorized by filing-office rule.

(e) [Record of mortgage.] This section does not require a fee with respect to a record of a mortgage which is effective as a financing statement filed as a fixture filing or as a financing statement covering as-extracted collateral or timber to be cut under Section 9-502(c). However, the recording and satisfaction fees that otherwise would be applicable to the record of the mortgage apply.

Legislative Notes:

1. To preserve uniformity, a State that places the provisions of this section together with statutes setting fees for other services should do so without modification.

2. A State should enact subsection (c), Alternative A, and omit the bracketed language in subsections (a) and (b) unless its indexing system entails a substantial additional cost when indexing additional names.

As amended in 2000.

See Appendix P for material relating to changes made in text in 2000.

Official Comment

1. Source. Various sections of former Part 4.

2. Fees. This section contains all fee requirements for filing, indexing, and responding to requests for information. Uniformity in the fee structure (but not necessarily in the amount of fees) makes this Article easier for secured parties to use and reduces the likelihood that a filed record will be rejected for failure to pay at least the correct amount of the fee. See Section 9-516(b)(2).

The costs of processing electronic records are less than those with respect to written records. Accordingly, this section mandates a lower fee as an incentive to file electronically and imposes the additional charge (if any) for multiple debtors only with respect to written records. When written records are used, this Article encourages the use of the uniform forms in Section 9-521. The fee for filing these forms should be no greater than the fee for other written records.

To make the relevant information included in a filed record more accessible once the record is found, this section mandates a higher fee for longer written records than for shorter ones. Finally, recognizing that financing statements naming more than one debtor are most often filed against a husband and wife, any additional charge for multiple debtors applies to records filed with respect to more than two debtors, rather than with respect to more than one.

§ 9-526. Filng-Office Rules.

(a) [Adoption of filing-office rules.] The [insert appropriate governmental official or agency] shall adopt and publish rules to implement this article. The filing-office rules must be[:

(1)] consistent with this article[; and

(2) adopted and published in accordance with the [insert any applicable state administrative procedure act]].

(b) [Harmonization of rules.] To keep the filing-office rules and practices of the filing office in harmony with the rules and practices of filing offices in other jurisdictions that enact substantially this part, and to keep the technology used by the filing office compatible with the technology used by filing offices in other jurisdictions that enact substantially this part, the [insert appropriate governmental official or agency], so far as is consistent with the purposes, policies, and provisions of this article, in adopting, amending, and repealing filing-office rules, shall:

(1) consult with filing offices in other jurisdictions that enact substantially this part; and

(2) consult the most recent version of the Model Rules promulgated by the International Association of Corporate Administrators or any successor organization; and

(3) take into consideration the rules and practices of, and the technology used by, filing offices in other jurisdictions that enact substantially this part.

Official Comment

1. Source. New; subsection (b) derives in part from the Uniform Consumer Credit Code (1974).

2. Rules Required. Operating a filing office is a complicated business, requiring many more rules and procedures than this Article can usefully provide. Subsection (a) requires the adoption of rules to carry out the provisions of Article 9. The filing-office rules must be consistent with the provisions of the statute and adopted in accordance with local procedures. The publication requirement informs secured parties about filing-office practices, aids secured parties in evaluating filing-related risks and costs, and promotes regularity of application within the filing office.

3. Importance of Uniformity. In today's national economy, uniformity of the policies and practices of the filing offices will reduce the costs of secured transactions substantially. The International Association of Corporate Administrators (IACA), referred to in subsection (b), is an organization whose membership includes filing officers from every State. These individuals are responsible for the proper functioning of the Article 9 filing system and have worked diligently to develop model filing-office rules, with a view toward efficiency and uniformity.

Although uniformity is an important desideratum, subsection (a) affords considerable flexibility in the adoption of filing-office rules. Each State may adopt a version of subsection (a) that reflects the desired relationship between the statewide filing office described in Section 9-501(a)(2) and the local filing offices described in Section 9-501(a)(1) and that takes into account the practices of its filing offices. Subsection (a) need not designate a single official or agency to adopt rules applicable to all filing offices, and the rules applicable to the statewide filing office need not be identical to those applicable to the local filing office. For example, subsection (a) might provide for the statewide filing office to adopt filing-office rules, and, if not prohibited by other law, the filing office might adopt one set of rules for itself and another for local offices. Or, subsection (a) might designate one official or agency to adopt rules for the statewide filing office and another to adopt rules for local filing offices.

§ 9-527. Duty to Report.

The [insert appropriate governmental official or agency] shall report [annually on or before _____] to the [Governor and Legislature] on the operation of the filing office. The report must contain a statement of the extent to which:

(1) the filing-office rules are not in harmony with the rules of filing offices in other jurisdictions that enact substantially this part and the reasons for these variations; and

(2) the filing-office rules are not in harmony with the most recent version of the Model Rules promulgated by the International Association of Corporate Administrators, or any successor organization, and the reasons for these variations.

Official Comment

1. Source. New; derived in part from the Uniform Consumer Credit Code (1974).

2. Duty to Report. This section is designed to promote compliance with the standards of performance imposed upon the filing office and with the requirement that the filing office's policies, practices, and technology be consistent and compatible with the policies, practices, and technology of other filing offices.

PART 6. DEFAULT

[SUBPART 1. DEFAULT AND ENFORCEMENT OF SECURITY INTEREST]

§ 9-601. Rights After Default; Judicial Enforcement; Consignor or Buyer of Accounts, Chattel Paper, Payment Intangibles, or Promissory Notes.

(a) [Rights of secured party after default.] After default, a secured party has the rights provided in this part and, except as otherwise provided in Section 9-602, those provided by agreement of the parties. A secured party:

(1) may reduce a claim to judgment, foreclose, or otherwise enforce the claim, security interest, or agricultural lien by any available judicial procedure; and

(2) if the collateral is documents, may proceed either as to the documents or as to the goods they cover.

(b) [Rights and duties of secured party in possession or control.] A secured party in possession of collateral or control of collateral under Section 7-106, 9-104, 9-105, 9-106, or 9-107 has the rights and duties provided in Section 9-207.

(c) [Rights cumulative; simultaneous exercise.] The rights under subsections (a) and (b) are cumulative and may be exercised simultaneously.

(d) [Rights of debtor and obligor.] Except as otherwise provided in subsection (g) and Section 9-605, after default, a debtor and an obligor have the rights provided in this part and by agreement of the parties.

(e) [Lien of levy after judgment.] If a secured party has reduced its claim to judgment, the lien of any levy that may be made upon the collateral by virtue of an execution based upon the judgment relates back to the earliest of:

(1) the date of perfection of the security interest or agricultural lien in the collateral;

(2) the date of filing a financing statement covering the collateral; or

(3) any date specified in a statute under which the agricultural lien was created.

(f) [Execution sale.] A sale pursuant to an execution is a foreclosure of the security interest or agricultural lien by judicial procedure within the meaning of this section. A secured party may purchase at the sale and thereafter hold the collateral free of any other requirements of this article.

(g) [Consignor or buyer of certain rights to payment.] Except as otherwise provided in Section 9-607(c), this part imposes no duties upon a secured party that is a consignor or is a buyer of accounts, chattel paper, payment intangibles, or promissory notes.

As amended in 2003.

See Appendix I contained within revised Article 7 for material relating to changes made in text in 2003.

Official Comment

1. Source. Former Section 9-501(1), (2), (5).

2. Enforcement: In General. The rights of a secured party to enforce its security interest in collateral after the debtor's default are an important feature of a secured transaction. (Note that the term "rights," as defined in Section 1-201, includes "remedies.") This Part provides those rights as well as certain limitations on their exercise for the protection of the defaulting debtor, other creditors, and other affected persons. However, subsections (a) and (d) make clear that the rights provided in this Part do not exclude other rights provided by agreement.

3. When Remedies Arise. Under subsection (a) the secured party's rights arise "[a]fter default." As did former Section 9-501, this Article leaves to the agreement of the parties the circumstances giving rise to a default. This Article does not determine whether a secured party's post-default conduct can constitute a waiver of default in the face of an agreement stating that such conduct shall not constitute a waiver. Rather, it continues to leave to the parties' agreement, as supplemented by law other than this Article, the determination whether a default has occurred or has been waived. See Section 1-103.

4. Possession of Collateral; Section 9-207. After a secured party takes possession of collateral following a default, there is no longer any distinction between a security interest that before default was nonpossessory and a security interest that was possessory before default, as under a common-law pledge. This Part generally does not distinguish between the rights of a secured party with a nonpossessory security interest and those of a secured party with a possessory security interest. However, Section 9-207 addresses rights and duties with respect to collateral in a secured party's possession. Under subsection (b) of this section, Section 9-207 applies not only to possession before default but also to possession after default. Subsection (b) also has been conformed to Section 9-207, which, unlike former Section 9-207, applies to secured parties having control of collateral.

5. Cumulative Remedies. Former Section 9-501(1) provided that the secured party's remedies were cumulative, but it did not explicitly provide whether the remedies could be exercised simultaneously. Subsection (c) permits the simultaneous exercise of remedies if the secured party acts in good faith. The liability scheme of Subpart 2 affords redress to an aggrieved debtor or obligor. Moreover, permitting the simultaneous exercise of remedies under subsection (c) does not override any non-UCC law, including the law of tort and statutes regulating collection of debts, under which the simultaneous exercise of remedies in a particular case constitutes abusive behavior or harassment giving rise to liability.

6. Judicial Enforcement. Under subsection (a) a secured party may reduce its claim to judgment or foreclose its interest by any available procedure outside this Article under applicable law. Subsection (e) generally follows former Section 9-501(5). It makes clear that any judicial lien that the secured party may acquire against the collateral effectively is a continuation of the original security interest (if perfected) and not the acquisition of a new interest or a transfer of property on account of a preexisting obligation. Under former Section 9-501(5), the judicial lien was stated to relate back to the date of perfection of the security interest. Subsection (e), however, provides that the lien relates back to the earlier of the date of filing or the date of perfection. This provides a secured party who enforces a security interest by judicial process with the benefit of the "first-to-file-or-perfect" priority rule of Section 9-322(a)(1).

7. Agricultural Liens. Part 6 provides parallel treatment for the enforcement of agricultural liens and security interests. Because agricultural liens are statutory rather than consensual, this Article does draw a few distinctions between these liens and security interests. Under subsection (e), the statute creating an agricultural lien would govern whether and the date to which an execution lien relates back. Section 9-606 explains when a "default" occurs in the agricultural lien context.

8. Execution Sales. Subsection (f) also follows former Section 9-501(5). It makes clear that an execution sale is an appropriate method of foreclosure contemplated by this Part. However, the sale is governed by other law and not by this Article, and the limitations under Section 9-610 on the right of a secured party to purchase collateral do not apply.

9. Sales of Receivables; Consignments. Subsection (g) provides that, except as provided in Section 9-607(c), the duties imposed on secured parties do not apply to buyers of accounts, chattel paper, payment intangibles, or promissory notes. Although denominated "secured parties," these buyers own the entire interest in the property sold and so may enforce their rights without regard to the seller ("debtor") or the seller's creditors. Likewise, a true consignor may enforce its ownership interest under other law without regard to the duties that this Part imposes on secured parties. Note, however, that Section 9-615 governs cases in which a consignee's secured party (other than a consignor) is enforcing a security interest that is senior to the security interest (i.e., ownership interest) of a true consignor.

§ 9-602. Waiver and Variance of Rights and Duties.

Except as otherwise provided in Section 9-624, to the extent that they give rights to a debtor or obligor and impose duties on a secured party, the debtor or obligor may not waive or vary the rules stated in the following listed sections:

(1) Section 9-207(b)(4)(C), which deals with use and operation of the collateral by the secured party;

(2) Section 9-210, which deals with requests for an accounting and requests concerning a list of collateral and statement of account;

(3) Section 9-607(c), which deals with collection and enforcement of collateral;

(4) Sections 9-608(a) and 9-615(c) to the extent that they deal with application or payment of noncash proceeds of collection, enforcement, or disposition;

(5) Sections 9-608(a) and 9-615(d) to the extent that they require accounting for or payment of surplus proceeds of collateral;

(6) Section 9-609 to the extent that it imposes upon a secured party that takes possession of collateral without judicial process the duty to do so without breach of the peace;

(7) Sections 9-610(b), 9-611, 9-613, and 9-614, which deal with disposition of collateral;

(8) Section 9-615(f), which deals with calculation of a deficiency or surplus when a disposition is made to the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor;

(9) Section 9-616, which deals with explanation of the calculation of a surplus or deficiency;

(10) Sections 9-620, 9-621, and 9-622, which deal with acceptance of collateral in satisfaction of obligation;

(11) Section 9-623, which deals with redemption of collateral;

(12) Section 9-624, which deals with permissible waivers; and

(13) Sections 9-625 and 9-626, which deal with the secured party's liability for failure to comply with this article.

1. Source. Former Section 9-501(3).

2. Waiver: In General. Section 1-102(3) addresses which provisions of the UCC are mandatory and which may be varied by agreement. With exceptions relating to good faith, diligence, reasonableness, and care, immediate parties, as between themselves, may vary its provisions by agreement. However, in the context of rights and duties after default, our legal system traditionally has looked with suspicion on agreements that limit the debtor's rights and free the secured party of its duties. As stated in former Section 9-501, Comment 4, "no mortgage clause has ever been allowed to clog the equity of redemption." The context of default offers great opportunity for overreaching. The suspicious attitudes of the courts have been grounded in common sense. This section, like former Section 9-501(3), codifies this long-standing and deeply rooted attitude. The specified rights of the debtor and duties of the secured party may not be waived or varied except as stated. Provisions that are not specified in this section are subject to the general rules in Section 1-102(3).

3. Nonwaivable Rights and Duties. This section revises former Section 9-501(3) by restricting the ability to waive or modify additional specified rights and duties: (i) duties under Section 9-207(b)(4)(C), which deals with the use and operation of consumer goods, (ii) the right to a response to a request for an accounting, concerning a list of collateral, or concerning a statement of account (Section 9-210), (iii) the duty to collect collateral in a commercially reasonable manner (Section 9-607), (iv) the implicit duty to refrain from a breach of the peace in taking possession of collateral under Section 9-609, (v) the duty to apply noncash proceeds of collection or disposition in a commercially reasonable manner (Sections 9-608 and 9-615), (vi) the right to a special method of calculating a surplus or deficiency in certain dispositions to a secured party, a person related to secured party, or a secondary obligor (Section 9-615), (vii) the duty to give an explanation of the calculation of a surplus or deficiency (Section 9-616), (viii) the right to limitations on the effectiveness of certain waivers (Section 9-624), and (ix) the right to hold a secured party liable for failure to comply with this Article (Sections 9-625 and 9-626). For clarity and consistency, this Article uses the term "waive or vary" instead of "renounc[e] or modify[]," which appeared in former Section 9-504(3).

This section provides generally that the specified rights and duties "may not be waived or varied." However, it does not restrict the ability of parties to agree to settle, compromise, or renounce claims for past conduct that may have constituted a violation or breach of those rights and duties, even if the settlement involves an express "waiver."

4. Waiver by Debtors and Obligors. The restrictions on waiver contained in this section apply to obligors as well as debtors. This resolves a question under former Article 9 as to whether secondary obligors, assuming that they were "debtors" for purposes of former Part 5, were permitted to waive, under the law of suretyship, rights and duties under that Part.

5. Certain Post-Default Waivers. Section 9-624 permits post-default waivers in limited circumstances. These waivers must be made in agreements that are authenticated. Under Section 1-201, an " 'agreement' means the bargain of the parties in fact." In considering waivers under Section 9-624 and analogous agreements in other contexts, courts should carefully scrutinize putative agreements that appear in records that also address many additional or unrelated matters.

§ 9-603. Agreement on Standards Concerning Rights and Duties.

(a) [Agreed standards.] The parties may determine by agreement the standards measuring the fulfillment of the rights of a debtor or obligor and the duties of a secured party under a rule stated in Section 9-602 if the standards are not manifestly unreasonable.

(b) [Agreed standards inapplicable to breach of peace.] Subsection (a) does not apply to the duty under Section 9-609 to refrain from breaching the peace.

1. Source. Former Section 9-501(3).

2. Limitation on Ability to Set Standards. Subsection (a), like former Section 9-501(3), permits the parties to set standards for compliance with the rights and duties under this Part if the standards are not "manifestly unreasonable." Under subsection (b), the parties are not permitted to set standards measuring fulfillment of the secured party's duty to take collateral without breaching the peace.

§ 9-604. Procedure if Security Agreement Covers Real Property or Fixtures.

(a) [Enforcement: personal and real property.] If a security agreement covers both personal and real property, a secured party may proceed:

(1) under this part as to the personal property without prejudicing any rights with respect to the real property; or

(2) as to both the personal property and the real property in accordance with the rights with respect to the real property, in which case the other provisions of this part do not apply.

(b) [Enforcement: fixtures.] Subject to subsection (c), if a security agreement covers goods that are or become fixtures, a secured party may proceed:

(1) under this part; or

(2) in accordance with the rights with respect to real property, in which case the other provisions of this part do not apply.

(c) [Removal of fixtures.] Subject to the other provisions of this part, if a secured party holding a security interest in fixtures has priority over all owners and encumbrancers of the real property, the secured party, after default, may remove the collateral from the real property.

(d) [Injury caused by removal.] A secured party that removes collateral shall promptly reimburse any encumbrancer or owner of the real property, other than the debtor, for the cost of repair of any physical injury caused by the removal. The secured party need not reimburse the encumbrancer or owner for any diminution in value of the real property caused by the absence of the goods removed or by any necessity of replacing them. A person entitled to reimbursement may refuse permission to remove until the secured party gives adequate assurance for the performance of the obligation to reimburse.

Official Comment

1. Source. Former Sections 9-501(4), 9-313(8).

2. Real-Property-Related Collateral. The collateral in many transactions consists of both real and personal property. In the interest of simplicity, speed, and economy, subsection (a), like former Section 9-501(4), permits (but does not require) the secured party to proceed as to both real and personal property in accordance with its rights and remedies with respect to the real property. Subsection (a) also makes clear that a secured party who exercises rights under Part 6 with respect to personal property does not prejudice any rights under real-property law.

This Article does not address certain other real-property-related problems. In a number of States, the exercise of remedies by a creditor who is secured by both real property and non-real property collateral is governed by special legal rules. For example, under some anti-deficiency laws, creditors risk loss of rights against personal property collateral if they err in enforcing their rights against the real property. Under a "one-form-of-action" rule (or rule against splitting a cause of action), a creditor who judicially enforces a real property mortgage and does not proceed in the same action to enforce a security interest in personalty may (among other consequences) lose the right to proceed against the personalty. Although statutes of this kind create impediments to enforcement of security interests, this Article does not override these limitations under other law.

3. Fixtures. Subsection (b) is new. It makes clear that a security interest in fixtures may be enforced either under real-property law or under any of the applicable provisions of Part 6, including sale or other disposition either before or after removal of the fixtures (see subsection (c)). Subsection (b) also serves to overrule cases holding that a secured party's only remedy after default is the removal of the fixtures from the real property. See, e.g., Maplewood Bank & Trust v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 625 A.2d 537 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1993).

Subsection (c) generally follows former Section 9-313(8). It gives the secured party the right to remove fixtures under certain circumstances. A secured party whose security interest in fixtures has priority over owners and encumbrancers of the real property may remove the collateral from the real property. However, subsection (d) requires the secured party to reimburse any owner (other than the debtor) or encumbrancer for the cost of repairing any physical injury caused by the removal. This right to reimbursement is implemented by the last sentence of subsection (d), which gives the owner or encumbrancer a right to security or indemnity as a condition for giving permission to remove.

§ 9-605. Unknown Debtor or Secondary Obligor.

A secured party does not owe a duty based on its status as secured party:

(1) to a person that is a debtor or obligor, unless the secured party knows:

(A) that the person is a debtor or obligor;

(B) the identity of the person; and

(C) how to communicate with the person; or

(2) to a secured party or lienholder that has filed a financing statement against a person, unless the secured party knows:

(A) that the person is a debtor; and

(B) the identity of the person.

1. Source. New.

2. Duties to Unknown Persons. This section relieves a secured party from duties owed to a debtor or obligor, if the secured party does not know about the debtor or obligor. Similarly, it relieves a secured party from duties owed to a secured party or lienholder who has filed a financing statement against the debtor, if the secured party does not know about the debtor. For example, a secured party may be unaware that the original debtor has sold the collateral subject to the security interest and that the new owner has become the debtor. If so, the secured party owes no duty to the new owner (debtor) or to a secured party who has filed a financing statement against the new owner. This section should be read in conjunction with the exculpatory provisions in Section 9-628. Note that it relieves a secured party not only from duties arising under this Article but also from duties arising under other law by virtue of the secured party's status as such under this Article, unless the other law otherwise provides.

§ 9-606. Time of Default for Agricultural Lien.

For purposes of this part, a default occurs in connection with an agricultural lien at the time the secured party becomes entitled to enforce the lien in accordance with the statute under which it was created.

Official Comment

1. Source. New.

2. Time of Default. Remedies under this Part become available upon the debtor's "default." See Section 9-601. This section explains when "default" occurs in the agricultural-lien context. It requires one to consult the enabling statute to determine when the lienholder is entitled to enforce the lien.

§ 9-607. Collection and Enforcement by Secured Party.

(a) [Collection and enforcement generally.] If so agreed, and in any event after default, a secured party:

(1) may notify an account debtor or other person obligated on collateral to make payment or otherwise render performance to or for the benefit of the secured party;

(2) may take any proceeds to which the secured party is entitled under Section 9-315;

(3) may enforce the obligations of an account debtor or other person obligated on collateral and exercise the rights of the debtor with respect to the obligation of the account debtor or other person obligated on collateral to make payment or otherwise render performance to the debtor, and with respect to any property that secures the obligations of the account debtor or other person obligated on the collateral;

(4) if it holds a security interest in a deposit account perfected by control under Section 9-104(a)(1), may apply the balance of the deposit account to the obligation secured by the deposit account; and

(5) if it holds a security interest in a deposit account perfected by control under Section 9-104(a)(2) or (3), may instruct the bank to pay the balance of the deposit account to or for the benefit of the secured party.

(b) [Nonjudicial enforcement of mortgage.] If necessary to enable a secured party to exercise under subsection (a)(3) the right of a debtor to enforce a mortgage nonjudicially, the secured party may record in the office in which a record of the mortgage is recorded:

(1) a copy of the security agreement that creates or provides for a security interest in the obligation secured by the mortgage; and

(2) the secured party's sworn affidavit in recordable form stating that:

(A) a default has occurred; and

(B) the secured party is entitled to enforce the mortgage nonjudicially.

(c) [Commercially reasonable collection and enforcement.] A secured party shall proceed in a commercially reasonable manner if the secured party:

(1) undertakes to collect from or enforce an obligation of an account debtor or other person obligated on collateral; and

(2) is entitled to charge back uncollected collateral or otherwise to full or limited recourse against the debtor or a secondary obligor.

(d) [Expenses of collection and enforcement.] A secured party may deduct from the collections made pursuant to subsection (c) reasonable expenses of collection and enforcement, including reasonable attorney's fees and legal expenses incurred by the secured party.

(e) [Duties to secured party not affected.] This section does not determine whether an account debtor, bank, or other person obligated on collateral owes a duty to a secured party.

Official Comment

1. Source. Former Section 9-502; subsections (b), (d), and (e) are new.

2. Collections: In General. Collateral consisting of rights to payment is not only the most liquid asset of a typical debtor's business but also is property that may be collected without any interruption of the debtor's business This situation is far different from that in which collateral is inventory or equipment, whose removal may bring the business to a halt. Furthermore, problems of valuation and identification, present with collateral that is tangible personal property, frequently are not as serious in the case of rights to payment and other intangible collateral. Consequently, this section, like former Section 9-502, recognizes that financing through assignments of intangibles lacks many of the complexities that arise after default in other types of financing. This section allows the assignee to liquidate collateral by collecting whatever may become due on the collateral, whether or not the method of collection contemplated by the security arrangement before default was direct (i.e., payment by the account debtor to the assignee, "notification" financing) or indirect (i.e., payment by the account debtor to the assignor, "nonnotification" financing).

3. Scope. The scope of this section is broader than that of former Section 9-502. It applies not only to collections from account debtors and obligors on instruments but also to enforcement more generally against all persons obligated on collateral. It explicitly provides for the secured party's enforcement of the debtor's rights in respect of the account debtor's (and other third parties') obligations and for the secured party's enforcement of supporting obligations with respect to those obligations. (Supporting obligations are components of the collateral under Section 9-203(f).) The rights of a secured party under subsection (a) include the right to enforce claims that the debtor may enjoy against others. For example, the claims might include a breach-of-warranty claim arising out of a defect in equipment that is collateral or a secured party's action for an injunction against infringement of a patent that is collateral. Those claims typically would be proceeds of original collateral under Section 9-315.

4. Collection and Enforcement Before Default. Like Part 6 generally, this section deals with the rights and duties of secured parties following default. However, as did former Section 9-502 with respect to collection rights, this section also applies to the collection and enforcement rights of secured parties even if a default has not occurred, as long as the debtor has so agreed. It is not unusual for debtors to agree that secured parties are entitled to collect and enforce rights against account debtors prior to default.

5. Collections by Junior Secured Party. A secured party who holds a security interest in a right to payment may exercise the right to collect and enforce under this section, even if the security interest is subordinate to a conflicting security interest in the same right to payment. Whether the junior secured party has priority in the collected proceeds depends on whether the junior secured party qualifies for priority as a purchaser of an instrument (e.g., the account debtor's check) under Section 9-330(d), as a holder in due course of an instrument under Sections 3-305 and 9-331(a), or as a transferee of money under Section 9-332(a). See Sections 9-330, Comment 7; 9-331, Comment 5; and 9-332.

6. Relationship to Rights and Duties of Persons Obligated on Collateral. This section permits a secured party to collect and enforce obligations included in collateral in its capacity as a secured party. It is not necessary for a secured party first to become the owner of the collateral pursuant to a disposition or acceptance. However, the secured party's rights, as between it and the debtor, to collect from and enforce collateral against account debtors and others obligated on collateral under subsection (a) are subject to Section 9-341, Part 4, and other applicable law. Neither this section nor former Section 9-502 should be understood to regulate the duties of an account debtor or other person obligated on collateral. Subsection (e) makes this explicit. For example, the secured party may be unable to exercise the debtor's rights under an instrument if the debtor is in possession of the instrument, or under a non-transferable letter of credit if the debtor is the beneficiary. Unless a secured party has control over a letter-of-credit right and is entitled to receive payment or performance from the issuer or a nominated person under Article 5, its remedies with respect to the letter-of-credit right may be limited to the recovery of any identifiable proceeds from the debtor. This section establishes only the baseline rights of the secured party vis-a-vis the debtor—the secured party is entitled to enforce and collect after default or earlier if so agreed.

7. Deposit Account Collateral. Subsections (a)(4) and (5) set forth the self-help remedy for a secured party whose collateral is a deposit account. Subsection (a)(4) addresses the rights of a secured party that is the bank with which the deposit account is maintained. That secured party automatically has control of the deposit account under Section 9-104(a)(1). After default, and otherwise if so agreed, the bank/secured party may apply the funds on deposit to the secured obligation.

If a security interest of a third party is perfected by control (Section 9-104(a)(2) or (a)(3)), then after default, and otherwise if so agreed, the secured party may instruct the bank to pay out the funds in the account. If the third party has control under Section 9-104(a)(3), the depositary institution is obliged to obey the instruction because the secured party is its customer. See Section 4-401. If the third party has control under Section 9-104(a)(2), the control agreement determines the depositary institution's obligation to obey.

If a security interest in a deposit account is unperfected, or is perfected by filing by virtue of the proceeds rules of Section 9-315, the depositary institution ordinarily owes no obligation to obey the secured party's instructions. See Section 9-341. To reach the funds without the debtor's cooperation, the secured party must use an available judicial procedure.

8. Rights Against Mortgagor of Real Property. Subsection (b) addresses the situation in which the collateral consists of a mortgage note (or other obligation secured by a mortgage on real property). After the debtor's (mortgagee's) default, the secured party (assignee) may wish to proceed with a nonjudicial foreclosure of the mortgage securing the note but may be unable to do so because it has not become the assignee of record. The assignee/secured party may not have taken a recordable assignment at the commencement of the transaction (perhaps the mortgage note in question was one of hundreds assigned to the secured party as collateral). Having defaulted, the mortgagee may be unwilling to sign a recordable assignment. This section enables the secured party (assignee) to become the assignee of record by recording in the applicable real-property records the security agreement and an affidavit certifying default. Of course, the secured party's rights derive from those of its debtor. Subsection (b) would not entitle the secured party to proceed with a foreclosure unless the mortgagor also were in default or the debtor (mortgagee) otherwise enjoyed the right to foreclose.

9. Commercial Reasonableness. Subsection (c) provides that the secured party's collection and enforcement rights under subsection (a) must be exercised in a commercially reasonable manner. These rights include the right to settle and compromise claims against the account debtor. The secured party's failure to observe the standard of commercial reasonableness could render it liable to an aggrieved person under Section 9-625, and the secured party's recovery of a deficiency would be subject to Section 9-626. Subsection (c) does not apply if, as is characteristic of most sales of accounts, chattel paper, payment intangibles, and promissory notes, the secured party (buyer) has no right of recourse against the debtor (seller) or a secondary obligor. However, if the secured party does have a right of recourse, the commercial-reasonableness standard applies to collection and enforcement even though the assignment to the secured party was a "true" sale. The obligation to proceed in a commercially reasonable manner arises because the collection process affects the extent of the seller's recourse liability, not because the seller retains an interest in the sold collateral (the seller does not). Concerning classification of a transaction, see Section 9-109, Comment 4.

10. Attorney's Fees and Legal Expenses. The phrase "reasonable attorney's fees and legal expenses," which appears in subsection (d), includes only those fees and expenses incurred in proceeding against account debtors or other third parties. The secured party's right to recover these expenses from the collections arises automatically under this section. The secured party also may incur other attorney's fees and legal expenses in proceeding against the debtor or obligor. Whether the secured party has a right to recover those fees and expenses depends on whether the debtor or obligor has agreed to pay them, as is the case with respect to attorney's fees and legal expenses under Sections 9-608(a)(1)(A) and 9-615(a)(1). The parties also may agree to allocate a portion of the secured party's overhead to collection and enforcement under subsection (d) or Section 9-608(a).

As amended in 2000.

See Appendix P for material relating to changes made in Official Comment in 2000.

§ 9-608. Application of Proceeds of Collection or Enforcement; Liability for Deficiency and Right to Surplus.

(a) [Application of proceeds, surplus, and deficiency if obligation secured.] If a security interest or agricultural lien secures payment or performance of an obligation, the following rules apply:

(1) A secured party shall apply or pay over for application the cash proceeds of collection or enforcement under Section 9-607 in the following order to:

(A) the reasonable expenses of collection and enforcement and, to the extent provided for by agreement and not prohibited by law, reasonable attorney's fees and legal expenses incurred by the secured party;

(B) the satisfaction of obligations secured by the security interest or agricultural lien under which the collection or enforcement is made; and

(C) the satisfaction of obligations secured by any subordinate security interest in or other lien on the collateral subject to the security interest or agricultural lien under which the collection or enforcement is made if the secured party receives an authenticated demand for proceeds before distribution of the proceeds is completed.

(2) If requested by a secured party, a holder of a subordinate security interest or other lien shall furnish reasonable proof of the interest or lien within a reasonable time. Unless the holder complies, the secured party need not comply with the holder's demand under paragraph (1)(C).

(3) A secured party need not apply or pay over for application noncash proceeds of collection and enforcement under Section 9-607 unless the failure to do so would be commercially unreasonable. A secured party that applies or pays over for application noncash proceeds shall do so in a commercially reasonable manner.

(4) A secured party shall account to and pay a debtor for any surplus, and the obligor is liable for any deficiency.

(b) [No surplus or deficiency in sales of certain rights to payment.] If the underlying transaction is a sale of accounts, chattel paper, payment intangibles, or promissory notes, the debtor is not entitled to any surplus, and the obligor is not liable for any deficiency.

As amended in 2000.

See Appendix P for material relating to changes made in text in 2000.

Official Comment

1. Source. Subsection (a) is new; subsection (b) derives from former Section 9-502(2).

2. Modifications of Prior Law. Subsections (a) and (b) modify former Section 9-502(2) by explicitly providing for the application of proceeds recovered by the secured party in substantially the same manner as provided in Section 9-615(a) and (e) for dispositions of collateral.

3. Surplus and Deficiency. Subsections (a)(4) and (b) omit, as unnecessary, the references contained in former Section 9-502(2) to agreements varying the baseline rules on surplus and deficiency. The parties are always free to agree that an obligor will not be liable for a deficiency, even if the collateral secures an obligation, and that an obligor is liable for a deficiency, even if the transaction is a sale of receivables. For parallel provisions, see Section 9-615(d) and (e).

4. Noncash Proceeds. Subsection (a)(3) addresses the situation in which an enforcing secured party receives noncash proceeds.

> Example: An enforcing secured party receives a promissory note from an account debtor who is unable to pay an account when it is due. The secured party accepts the note in exchange for extending the date on which the account debtor's obligation is due. The secured party may wish to credit its debtor (the assignor) with the principal amount of the note upon receipt of the note, but probably will prefer to credit the debtor only as and when the note is paid.

Under subsection (a)(3), the secured party is under no duty to apply the note or its value to the outstanding obligation unless its failure to do so would be commercially unreasonable. If the secured party does apply the note to the outstanding obligation, however, it must do so in a commercially reasonable manner. The parties may provide for the method of application of noncash proceeds by agreement, if the method is not manifestly unreasonable. See Section 9-603. This section does not explain when the failure to apply noncash proceeds would be commercially unreasonable; it leaves that determination to case-by-case adjudication. In the example, the secured party appears to have accepted the account debtor's note in order to increase the likelihood of payment and decrease the likelihood that the account debtor would dispute its obligation. Under these circumstances, it may well be commercially reasonable for the secured party to credit its debtor's obligations only as and when cash proceeds are collected from the account debtor, especially given the uncertainty that attends the account debtor's eventual payment. For an example of a secured party's receipt of noncash proceeds in which it may well be commercially unreasonable for the secured party to delay crediting its debtor's obligations with the value of noncash proceeds, see Section 9-615, Comment 3.

When the secured party is not required to "apply or pay over for application noncash proceeds," the proceeds nonetheless remain collateral subject to this Article. If the secured party were to dispose of them, for example, appropriate notification would be required (see Section 9-611), and the disposition would be subject to the standards provided in this Part (see Section 9-610). Moreover, a secured party in possession of the noncash proceeds would have the duties specified in Section 9-207.

5. No Effect on Priority of Senior Security Interest. The application of proceeds required by subsection (a) does not affect the priority of a security interest in collateral which is senior to the interest of the secured party who is collecting or enforcing collateral under Section 9-607. Although subsection (a) imposes a duty to apply proceeds to the enforcing secured party's expenses and to the satisfaction of the secured obligations owed to it and to subordinate secured parties, that duty applies only among the enforcing secured party and those persons. Concerning the priority of a junior secured party who collects and enforces collateral, see Section 9-607, Comment 5.

(a) [Possession; rendering equipment unusable; disposition on debtor's premises.] After default, a secured party:

(1) may take possession of the collateral; and

(2) without removal, may render equipment unusable and dispose of collateral on a debtor's premises under Section 9-610.

(b) [Judicial and nonjudicial process.] A secured party may proceed under subsection (a):

(1) pursuant to judicial process; or

(2) without judicial process, if it proceeds without breach of the peace.

(c) [Assembly of collateral.] If so agreed, and in any event after default, a secured party may require the debtor to assemble the collateral and make it available to the secured party at a place to be designated by the secured party which is reasonably convenient to both parties.

1. Source. Former Section 9-503.

2. Secured Party's Right to Possession. This section follows former Section 9-503 and earlier uniform legislation. It provides that the secured party is entitled to take possession of collateral after default.

3. Judicial Process; Breach of Peace. Subsection (b) permits a secured party to proceed under this section without judicial process if it does so "without breach of the peace." Although former Section 9-503 placed the same condition on a secured party's right to take possession of collateral, subsection (b) extends the condition to the right provided in subsection (a)(2) as well. Like former Section 9-503, this section does not define or explain the conduct that will constitute a breach of the peace, leaving that matter for continuing development by the courts. In considering whether a secured party has engaged in a breach of the peace, however, courts should hold the secured party responsible for the actions of others taken on the secured party's behalf, including independent contractors engaged by the secured party to take possession of collateral.

This section does not authorize a secured party who repossesses without judicial process to utilize the assistance of a law-enforcement officer. A number of cases have held that a repossessing secured party's use of a law-enforcement officer without benefit of judicial process constituted a failure to comply with former Section 9-503.

4. Damages for Breach of Peace. Concerning damages that may be recovered based on a secured party's breach of the peace in connection with taking possession of collateral, see Section 9-625, Comment 3.

5. Multiple Secured Parties. More than one secured party may be entitled to take possession of collateral under this section. Conflicting rights to possession among secured parties are resolved by the priority rules of this Article. Thus, a senior secured party is entitled to possession as against a junior claimant. Non-UCC law governs whether a junior secured party in possession of collateral is liable to the senior in conversion. Normally, a junior who refuses to relinquish possession of collateral upon the demand of a secured party having a superior possessory right to the collateral would be liable in conversion.

6. Secured Party's Right to Disable and Dispose of Equipment on Debtor's Premises. In the case of some collateral, such as heavy equipment, the physical removal from the debtor's plant and the storage of the collateral pending disposition may be impractical or unduly expensive. This section follows former Section 9-503 by providing that, in lieu of removal, the secured party may render equipment unusable or may dispose of collateral on the debtor's premises. Unlike former Section 9-503, however, this section explicitly conditions these rights on the debtor's default. Of course, this section does not validate unreasonable action by a secured party. Under Section 9-610, all aspects of a disposition must be commercially reasonable.

7. Debtor's Agreement to Assemble Collateral. This section follows former Section 9-503 also by validating a debtor's agreement to assemble collateral and make it available to a secured party at a place that the secured party designates. Similar to the treatment of agreements to permit collection prior to default under Section 9-607 and former 9-502, however, this section validates these agreements whether or not they are conditioned on the debtor's default. For example, a debtor might agree to make available to a secured party, from time to time, any instruments or negotiable documents that the debtor receives on account of collateral. A court should not infer from this section's validation that a debtor's agreement to assemble and make available collateral would not be enforceable under other applicable law.

8. Agreed Standards. Subject to the limitation imposed by Section 9-603(b), this section's provisions concerning agreements to assemble and make available collateral and a secured party's right to disable equipment and dispose of collateral on a debtor's premises are likely topics for agreement on standards as contemplated by Section 9-603.

§ 9-610. Disposition of Collateral After Default.

(a) [Disposition after default.] After default, a secured party may sell, lease, license, or otherwise dispose of any or all of the collateral in its present condition or following any commercially reasonable preparation or processing.

(b) [Commercially reasonable disposition.] Every aspect of a disposition of collateral, including the method, manner, time, place, and other terms, must be commercially reasonable. If commercially reasonable, a secured party may dispose of collateral by public or private proceedings, by one or more contracts, as a unit or in parcels, and at any time and place and on any terms.

(c) [Purchase by secured party.] A secured party may purchase collateral:

(1) at a public disposition; or

(2) at a private disposition only if the collateral is of a kind that is customarily sold on a recognized market or the subject of widely distributed standard price quotations.

(d) [Warranties on disposition.] A contract for sale, lease, license, or other disposition includes the warranties relating to title, possession, quiet enjoyment, and the like which by operation of law accompany a voluntary disposition of property of the kind subject to the contract.

(e) [Disclaimer of warranties.] A secured party may disclaim or modify warranties under subsection (d):

(1) in a manner that would be effective to disclaim or modify the warranties in a voluntary disposition of property of the kind subject to the contract of disposition; or

(2) by communicating to the purchaser a record evidencing the contract for disposition and including an express disclaimer or modification of the warranties.

(f) [Record sufficient to disclaim warranties.] A record is sufficient to disclaim warranties under subsection (e) if it indicates "There is no warranty relating to title, possession, quiet enjoyment, or the like in this disposition" or uses words of similar import.

1. Source. Former Section 9-504(1), (3)

2. Commercially Reasonable Dispositions. Subsection (a) follows former Section 9-504 by permitting a secured party to dispose of collateral in a commercially reasonable manner following a default. Although subsection (b) permits both public and private dispositions, "every aspect of a disposition . . . must be commercially reasonable." This section encourages private dispositions on the assumption that they frequently will result in higher realization on collateral for the benefit of all concerned. Subsection (a) does not restrict dispositions to sales; collateral may be sold, leased, licensed, or otherwise disposed. Section 9-627 provides guidance for determining the circumstances under which a disposition is "commercially reasonable."

3. Time of Disposition. This Article does not specify a period within which a secured party must dispose of collateral. This is consistent with this Article's policy to encourage private dispositions through regular commercial channels. It may, for example, be prudent not to dispose of goods when the market has collapsed. Or, it might be more appropriate to sell a large inventory in parcels over a period of time instead of in bulk. Of course, under subsection (b) every aspect of a disposition of collateral must be commercially reasonable. This requirement explicitly includes the "method, manner, time, place and other terms." For example, if a secured party does not proceed under Section 9-620 and holds collateral for a long period of time without disposing of it, and if there is no good reason for not making a prompt disposition, the secured party may be determined not to have acted in a "commercially reasonable" manner. See also Section 1-203 (general obligation of good faith).

4. Pre-Disposition Preparation and Processing. Former Section 9-504(1) appeared to give the secured party the choice of disposing of collateral either "in its then condition or following any commercially reasonable preparation or processing." Some courts held that the "commercially reasonable" standard of former Section 9-504(3) nevertheless could impose an affirmative duty on the secured party to process or prepare the collateral prior to disposition. Subsection (a) retains the substance of the quoted language. Although courts should not be quick to impose a duty of preparation or processing on the secured party, subsection (a) does not grant the secured party the right to dispose of the collateral "in its then condition" under all circumstances. A secured party may not dispose of collateral "in its then condition" when, taking into account the costs and probable benefits of preparation or processing and the fact that the secured party would be advancing the costs at its risk, it would be commercially unreasonable to dispose of the collateral in that condition.

5. Disposition by Junior Secured Party. Disposition rights under subsection (a) are not limited to first-priority security interests. Rather, any secured party as to whom there has been a default enjoys the right to dispose of collateral under this subsection. The exercise of this right by a secured party whose security interest is subordinate to that of another secured party does not of itself constitute a conversion or otherwise give rise to liability in favor of the holder of the senior security interest. Section 9-615 addresses application of the proceeds of a disposition by a junior secured party. Under Section 9-615(a), a junior secured party owes no obligation to apply the proceeds of disposition to the satisfaction of obligations secured by a senior security interest. Section 9-615(g) builds on this general rule by protecting certain juniors from claims of a senior concerning cash proceeds of the disposition. Even if a senior were to have a non-Article 9 claim to proceeds of a junior's disposition, Section 9-615(g) would protect a junior that acts in good faith and without knowledge that its actions violate the rights of a senior party. Because the disposition by a junior would not cut off a senior's security interest or other lien (see Section 9-617), in many (probably most) cases the junior's receipt of the cash proceeds would not violate the rights of the senior.

The holder of a senior security interest is entitled, by virtue of its priority, to take possession of collateral from the junior secured party and conduct its own disposition, provided that the senior enjoys the right to take possession of the collateral from the debtor. See Section 9-609. The holder of a junior security interest normally must notify the senior secured party of an impending disposition. See Section 9-611. Regardless of whether the senior receives a notification from the junior, the junior's disposition does not of itself discharge the senior's security interest. See Section 9-617. Unless the senior secured party has authorized the disposition free and clear of its security interest, the senior's security interest ordinarily will survive the disposition by the junior and continue under Section 9-315(a). If the senior enjoys the right to repossess the collateral from the debtor, the senior likewise may recover the collateral from the transferee.

When a secured party's collateral is encumbered by another security interest or other lien, one of the claimants may seek to invoke the equitable doctrine of marshaling. As explained by the Supreme Court, that doctrine "rests upon the principle that a creditor having two funds to satisfy his debt, may not by his application of them to his demand, defeat another creditor, who may resort to only one of the funds." Meyer v. United States, 375 U.S. 233, 236 (1963), quoting Sowell v. Federal Reserve Bank, 268 U.S. 449, 456–57 (1925). The purpose of the doctrine is "to prevent the arbitrary action of a senior lienor from destroying the rights of a junior lienor or a creditor having less security." Id. at 237. Because it is an equitable doctrine, marshaling "is applied only when it can be equitably fashioned as to all of the parties" having an interest in the property. Id. This Article leaves courts free to determine whether marshaling is appropriate in any given case. See Section 1-103.

6. Security Interests of Equal Rank. Sometimes two security interests enjoy the same priority. This situation may arise by contract, e.g., pursuant to "equal and ratable" provisions in indentures, or by operation of law. See Section 9-328(6). This Article treats a security interest having equal priority like a senior security interest in many respects. Assume, for example, that SP-X and SP-Y enjoy equal priority, SP-W is senior to them, and SP-Z is junior. If SP-X disposes of the collateral under this section, then (i) SP-W's and SP-Y's security interests survive the disposition but SP-Z's does not, see Section 9-617, and (ii) neither SP-W nor SP-Y is entitled to receive a distribution of proceeds, but SP-Z is. See Section 9-615(a)(3).

When one considers the ability to obtain possession of the collateral, a secured party with equal priority is unlike a senior secured party. As the senior secured party, SP-W should enjoy the right to possession as against SP-X. See Section 9-609, Comment 5. If SP-W takes possession and disposes of the collateral under this section, it is entitled to apply the proceeds to satisfy its secured claim. SP-Y, however, should not have such a right to take possession from SP-X; otherwise, once SP-Y took possession from SP-X, SP-X would have the right to get possession from SP-Y, which would be obligated to redeliver possession to SP-X, and so on. Resolution of this problem is left to the parties and, if necessary, the courts.

7. Public vs. Private Dispositions. This Part maintains two distinctions between "public" and other dispositions: (i) the secured party may buy at the former, but normally not at the latter (Section 9-610(c)), and (ii) the debtor is entitled to notification of "the time and place of a public disposition" and notification of "the time after which" a private disposition or other intended disposition is to be made (Section 9-613(1)(E)). It does not retain the distinction under former Section 9-504(4), under which transferees in a noncomplying public disposition could lose protection more easily than transferees in other noncomplying dispositions. Instead, Section 9-617(b) adopts a unitary standard. Although the term is not defined, as used in this Article, a "public disposition" is one at which the price is determined after the public has had a meaningful opportunity for competitive bidding. "Meaningful opportunity" is meant to imply that some form of advertisement or public notice must precede the sale (or other disposition) and that the public must have access to the sale (disposition).

8. Investment Property. Dispositions of investment property may be regulated by the federal securities laws. Although a "public" disposition of securities under this Article may implicate the registration requirements of the Securities Act of 1933, it need not do so. A disposition that qualifies for a "private placement" exemption under the Securities Act of 1933 nevertheless may constitute a "public" disposition within the meaning of this section. Moreover, the "commercially reasonable" requirements of subsection (b) need not prevent a secured party from conducting a foreclosure sale without the issuer's compliance with federal registration requirements.

9. "Recognized Market." A "recognized market," as used in subsection (c) and Section 9-611(d), is one in which the items sold are fungible and prices are not subject to individual negotiation. For example, the New York Stock Exchange is a recognized market. A market in which prices are individually negotiated or the items are not fungible is not a recognized market, even if the items are the subject of widely disseminated price guides or are disposed of through dealer auctions.

10. Relevance of Price. While not itself sufficient to establish a violation of this Part, a low price suggests that a court should scrutinize carefully all aspects of a disposition to ensure that each aspect was commercially reasonable. Note also that even if the disposition is commercially reasonable, Section 9-615(f) provides a special method for calculating a deficiency or surplus if (i) the transferee in the disposition is the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor, and (ii) the amount of proceeds of the disposition is significantly below the range of proceeds that a complying disposition to a person other than the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor would have brought.

11. Warranties. Subsection (d) affords the transferee in a disposition under this section the benefit of any title, possession, quiet enjoyment, and similar warranties that would have accompanied the disposition by operation of non-Article 9 law had the disposition been conducted under other circumstances. For example, the Article 2 warranty of title would apply to a sale of goods, the analogous warranties of Article 2A would apply to a lease of goods, and any common-law warranties of title would apply to dispositions of other types of collateral. See, e.g., Restatement (2d), Contracts § 333 (warranties of assignor).

Subsection (e) explicitly provides that these warranties can be disclaimed either under other applicable law or by communicating a record containing an express disclaimer. The record need not be written, but an oral communication would not be sufficient. See Section 9-102 (definition of "record"). Subsection (f) provides a sample of wording that will effectively exclude the warranties in a disposition under this section, whether or not the exclusion would be effective under non-Article 9 law.

The warranties incorporated by subsection (d) are those relating to "title, possession, quiet enjoyment, and the like." Depending on the circumstances, a disposition under this section also may give rise to other statutory or implied warranties, e.g., warranties of quality or fitness for purpose. Law other than this Article determines whether such other warranties apply to a disposition under this section. Other law also determines issues relating to disclaimer of such warranties. For example, a foreclosure sale of a car by a car dealer could give rise to an implied warranty of merchantability (Section 2-314) unless effectively disclaimed or modified (Section 2-316).

This section's approach to these warranties conflicts with the former Comment to Section 2-312. This Article rejects the baseline assumption that commercially reasonable dispositions under this section are out of the ordinary commercial course or peculiar. The Comment to Section 2-312 has been revised accordingly.

(a) ["Notification date."] In this section, "notification date" means the earlier of the date on which:

(1) a secured party sends to the debtor and any secondary obligor an authenticated notification of disposition; or

(2) the debtor and any secondary obligor waive the right to notification.

(b) [Notification of disposition required.] Except as otherwise provided in subsection (d), a secured party that disposes of collateral under Section 9-610 shall send to the persons specified in subsection (c) a reasonable authenticated notification of disposition.

(c) [Persons to be notified.] To comply with subsection (b), the secured party shall send an authenticated notification of disposition to:

(1) the debtor;

(2) any secondary obligor; and

(3) if the collateral is other than consumer goods:

(A) any other person from which the secured party has received, before the notification date, an authenticated notification of a claim of an interest in the collateral;

(B) any other secured party or lienholder that, 10 days before the notification date, held a security interest in or other lien on the collateral perfected by the filing of a financing statement that:

(i) identified the collateral;

(ii) was indexed under the debtor's name as of that date; and

(iii) was filed in the office in which to file a financing statement against the debtor covering the collateral as of that date; and

(C) any other secured party that, 10 days before the notification date, held a security interest in the collateral perfected by compliance with a statute, regulation, or treaty described in Section 9-311(a).

(d) [Subsection (b) inapplicable: perishable collateral; recognized market.] Subsection (b) does not apply if the collateral is perishable or threatens to decline speedily in value or is of a type customarily sold on a recognized market.

(e) [Compliance with subsection (c)(3)(B).] A secured party complies with the requirement for notification prescribed by subsection (c)(3)(B) if:

(1) not later than 20 days or earlier than 30 days before the notification date, the secured party requests, in a commercially reasonable manner, information concerning financing statements indexed under the debtor's name in the office indicated in subsection (c)(3)(B); and

(2) before the notification date, the secured party:

(A) did not receive a response to the request for information; or

(B) received a response to the request for information and sent an authenticated notification of disposition to each secured party or other lienholder named in that response whose financing statement covered the collateral.

1. Source. Former Section 9-504(3).

2. Reasonable Notification. This section requires a secured party who wishes to dispose of collateral under Section 9-610 to send "a reasonable authenticated notification of disposition" to specified interested persons, subject to certain exceptions. The notification must be reasonable as to the manner in which it is sent, its timeliness (i.e., a reasonable time before the disposition is to take place), and its content. See Sections 9-612 (timeliness of notification), 9-613 (contents of notification generally), 9-614 (contents of notification in consumer-goods transactions).

3. Notification to Debtors and Secondary Obligors. This section imposes a duty to send notification of a disposition not only to the debtor but also to any secondary obligor. Subsections (b) and (c) resolve an uncertainty under former Article 9 by providing that secondary obligors (sureties) are entitled to receive notification of an intended disposition of collateral, regardless of who created the security interest in the collateral. If the surety created the security interest, it would be the debtor. If it did not, it would be a secondary obligor. (This Article also resolves the question of the secondary obligor's ability to waive, pre-default, the right to notification—waiver generally is not permitted. See Section 9-602.) Section 9-605 relieves a secured party from any duty to send notification to a debtor or secondary obligor unknown to the secured party.

Under subsection (b), the principal obligor (borrower) is not always entitled to notification of disposition.

Example: Behnfeldt borrows on an unsecured basis, and Bruno grants a security interest in her car to secure the debt. Behnfeldt is a primary obligor, not a secondary obligor. As such, she is not entitled to notification of disposition under this section.

4. Notification to Other Secured Parties. Prior to the 1972 amendments to Article 9, former Section 9-504(3) required the enforcing secured party to send reasonable notification of the disposition:

> except in the case of consumer goods to any other person who has a security interest in the collateral and who has duly filed a financing statement indexed in the name of the debtor in this State or who is known by the secured party to have a security interest in the collateral.

The 1972 amendments eliminated the duty to give notice to secured parties other than those from whom the foreclosing secured party had received written notice of a claim of an interest in the collateral.

Many of the problems arising from dispositions of collateral encumbered by multiple security interests can be ameliorated or solved by informing all secured parties of an intended disposition and affording them the opportunity to work with one another. To this end, subsection (c)(3)(B) expands the duties of the foreclosing secured party to include the duty to notify (and the corresponding burden of searching the files to discover) certain competing secured parties. The subsection imposes a search burden that in some cases may be greater than the pre-1972 burden on foreclosing secured parties but certainly is more modest than that faced by a new secured lender.

To determine who is entitled to notification, the foreclosing secured party must determine the proper office for filing a financing statement as of a particular date, measured by reference to the "notification date," as defined in subsection (a). This determination requires reference to the choice-of-law provisions of Part 3. The secured party must ascertain whether any financing statements covering the collateral and indexed under the debtor's name, as the name existed as of that date, in fact were filed in that office. The foreclosing secured party generally need not notify secured parties whose effective financing statements have become more difficult to locate because of changes in the location of the debtor, proceeds rules, or changes in the debtor's name.

Under subsection (c)(3)(C), the secured party also must notify a secured party who has perfected a security interest by complying with a statute or treaty described in Section 9-311(a), such as a certificate-of-title statute.

Subsection (e) provides a "safe harbor" that takes into account the delays that may be attendant to receiving information from the public filing offices. It provides, generally, that the secured party will be deemed to have satisfied its notification duty under subsection (c)(3)(B) if it requests a search from the proper office at least 20 but not more than 30 days before sending notification to the debtor and if it also sends a notification to all secured parties (and other lienholders) reflected on the search report. The secured party's duty under subsection (c)(3)(B) also will be satisfied if the secured party requests but does not receive a search report before the notification is sent to the debtor. Thus, if subsection (e) applies, a secured party who is entitled to notification under subsection (c)(3)(B) has no remedy against a foreclosing secured party who does not send the notification. The foreclosing secured party has complied with the notification requirement. Subsection (e) has no effect on the requirements of the other paragraphs of subsection (c). For example, if the foreclosing secured party received a notification from the holder of a conflicting security interest in accordance with subsection (c)(3)(A) but failed to send to the holder a notification of the disposition, the holder of the conflicting security interest would have the right to recover any loss under Section 9-625(b).

5. Authentication Requirement. Subsections (b) and (c) explicitly provide that a notification of disposition must be "authenticated." Some cases read former Section 9-504(3) as validating oral notification.

6. Second Try. This Article leaves to judicial resolution, based upon the facts of each case, the question whether the requirement of "reasonable notification" requires a "second try," i.e., whether a secured party who sends notification and learns that the debtor did not receive it must attempt to locate the debtor and send another notification.

7. Recognized Market; Perishable Collateral. New subsection (d) makes it clear that there is no obligation to give notification of a disposition in the case of perishable collateral or collateral customarily sold on a recognized market (e.g., marketable securities). Former Section 9-504(3) might be read (incorrectly) to relieve the secured party from its duty to notify a debtor but not from its duty to notify other secured parties in connection with dispositions of such collateral.

8. Failure to Conduct Notified Disposition. Nothing in this Article prevents a secured party from electing not to conduct a disposition after sending a notification. Nor does this Article prevent a secured party from electing to send a revised notification if its plans for disposition change. This assumes, however, that the secured party acts in good faith, the revised notification is reasonable, and the revised plan for disposition and any attendant delay are commercially reasonable.

9. Waiver. A debtor or secondary obligor may waive the right to notification under this section only by a post-default authenticated agreement. See Section 9-624(a).

§ 9-612. Timeliness of Notification Before Disposition of Collateral.

(a) [Reasonable time is question of fact.] Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b), whether a notification is sent within a reasonable time is a question of fact.

(b) [10-day period sufficient in non-consumer transaction.] In a transaction other than a consumer transaction, a notification of disposition sent after default and 10 days or more before the earliest time of disposition set forth in the notification is sent within a reasonable time before the disposition.

1. Source. New.

2. Reasonable Notification. Section 9-611(b) requires the secured party to send a "reasonable authenticated notification." Under that section, as under former Section 9-504(3), one aspect of a reasonable notification is its timeliness. This generally means that the notification must be sent at a reasonable time in advance of the date of a public disposition or the date after which a private disposition is to be made. A notification that is sent so near to the disposition date that a notified person could not be expected to act on or take account of the notification would be unreasonable.

3. Timeliness of Notification: Safe Harbor. The 10-day notice period in subsection (b) is intended to be a "safe harbor" and not a minimum requirement. To qualify for the "safe harbor" the notification must be sent after default. A notification also must be sent in a commercially reasonable manner. See Section 9-611(b) ("reasonable authenticated notification"). These requirements prevent a secured party from taking advantage of the "safe harbor" by, for example, giving the debtor a notification at the time of the original extension of credit or sending the notice by surface mail to a debtor overseas.

§ 9-613. Contents and Form of Notification Before Disposition of Collateral: General.

Except in a consumer-goods transaction, the following rules apply:

(1) The contents of a notification of disposition are sufficient if the notification:

(A) describes the debtor and the secured party;

(B) describes the collateral that is the subject of the intended disposition;

(C) states the method of intended disposition;

(D) states that the debtor is entitled to an accounting of the unpaid indebtedness and states the charge, if any, for an accounting; and

(E) states the time and place of a public disposition or the time after which any other disposition is to be made.

(2) Whether the contents of a notification that lacks any of the information specified in paragraph (1) are nevertheless sufficient is a question of fact.

(3) The contents of a notification providing substantially the information specified in paragraph (1) are sufficient, even if the notification includes:

(A) information not specified by that paragraph; or

(B) minor errors that are not seriously misleading.

(4) A particular phrasing of the notification is not required.

(5) The following form of notification and the form appearing in Section 9-614(3), when completed, each provides sufficient information:

NOTIFICATION OF DISPOSITION OF COLLATERAL

To: [Name of debtor, obligor, or other person to which the notification is sent]

From: [Name, address, and telephone number of secured party]
Name of Debtor(s): [Include only if debtor(s) are not an addressee]

[For a public disposition:]

We will sell [or lease or license, as applicable] the [describe collateral] [to the highest qualified bidder] in public as follows:

Day and Date: _____

Time: _____

Place: _____

[For a private disposition:]

We will sell [or lease or license, as applicable] the [describe collateral] privately sometime after [day and date].

You are entitled to an accounting of the unpaid indebtedness secured by the property that we intend to sell [or lease or license, as applicable] [for a charge of $_____]. You may request an accounting by calling us at [telephone number]

Official Comment

1. Source. New.

2. Contents of Notification. To comply with the "reasonable authenticated notification" requirement of Section 9-611(b), the contents of a notification must be reasonable. Except in a consumer-goods transaction, the contents of a notification that includes the information set forth in paragraph (1) are sufficient as a matter of law, unless the parties agree otherwise. (The reference to "time" of disposition means here, as it did in former Section 9-504(3), not only the hour of the day but also the date.) Although a secured party may choose to include additional information concerning the transaction or the debtor's rights and obligations, no additional information is required unless the parties agree otherwise. A notification that lacks some of the information set forth in paragraph (1) nevertheless may be sufficient if found to be reasonable by the trier of fact, under paragraph (2). A properly completed sample form of notification in paragraph (5) or in Section 9-614(a)(3) is an example of a notification that would contain the information set forth in paragraph (1). Under paragraph (4), however, no particular phrasing of the notification is required.

§ 9-614. Contents and Form of Notification Before Disposition of Collateral: Consumer-Goods Transaction.

In a consumer-goods transaction, the following rules apply:

(1) A notification of disposition must provide the following information:

(A) the information specified in Section 9-613(1);

(B) a description of any liability for a deficiency of the person to which the notification is sent;

(C) a telephone number from which the amount that must be paid to the secured party to redeem the collateral under Section 9-623 is available; and

(D) a telephone number or mailing address from which additional information concerning the disposition and the obligation secured is available.

(2) A particular phrasing of the notification is not required.

(3) The following form of notification, when completed, provides sufficient information:

[Name and address of secured party]
[Date]

NOTICE OF OUR PLAN TO SELL PROPERTY

[Name and address of any obligor who is also a debtor]
Subject: [Identification of Transaction]

We have your [describe collateral], because you broke promises in our agreement.

[For a public disposition:]

We will sell [describe collateral] at public sale. A sale could include a lease or license. The sale will be held as follows:

Date: _____
Time: _____
Place: _____

You may attend the sale and bring bidders if you want.

[For a private disposition:]

We will sell [describe collateral] at private sale sometime after [date]. A sale could include a lease or license.

The money that we get from the sale (after paying our costs) will reduce the amount you owe. If we get less money than you owe, you [will or will not, as applicable] still owe us the difference. If we get more money than you owe, you will get the extra money, unless we must pay it to someone else.

You can get the property back at any time before we sell it by paying us the full amount you owe (not just the past due payments), including our expenses. To learn the exact amount you must pay, call us at [telephone number].

If you want us to explain to you in writing how we have figured the amount that you owe us, you may call us at [telephone number] [or write us at [secured party's address]] and request a written explanation. [We will charge you $for the explanation if we sent you another written explanation of the amount you owe us within the last six months.]

If you need more information about the sale call us at [telephone number] [or write us at [secured party's address]].

We are sending this notice to the following other people who have an interest in [describe collateral] or who owe money under your agreement:

[Names of all other debtors and obligors, if any]

[End of Form]

(4) A notification in the form of paragraph (3) is sufficient, even if additional information appears at the end of the form.

(5) A notification in the form of paragraph (3) is sufficient, even if it includes errors in information not required by paragraph (1), unless the error is misleading with respect to rights arising under this article.

(6) If a notification under this section is not in the form of paragraph (3), law other than this article determines the effect of including information not required by paragraph (1).

Official Comment

1. Source. New.

2. Notification in Consumer-Goods Transactions. Paragraph (1) sets forth the information required for a reasonable notification in a consumer-goods transaction. A notification that lacks any of the information set forth in paragraph (1) is insufficient as a matter of law. Compare Section 9-613(2), under which the trier of fact may find a notification to be sufficient even if it lacks some information listed in paragraph (1) of that section.

3. Safe-Harbor Form of Notification; Errors in Information. Although paragraph (2) provides that a particular phrasing of a notification is not required, paragraph (3) specifies a safe-harbor form that, when properly completed, satisfies paragraph (1). Paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) contain special rules applicable to erroneous and additional information. Under paragraph (4), a notification in the safe-harbor form specified in paragraph (3) is not rendered insufficient if it contains additional information at the end of the form. Paragraph (5) provides that non-misleading errors in information contained in a notification are permitted if the safe-harbor form is used and if the errors are in information not required by paragraph (1). Finally, if a notification is in a form other than the paragraph (3) safe-harbor form, other law determines the effect of including in the notification information other than that required by paragraph (1).

(a) [Application of proceeds.] A secured party shall apply or pay over for application the cash proceeds of disposition under Section 9-610 in the following order to:

(1) the reasonable expenses of retaking, holding, preparing for disposition, processing, and disposing, and, to the extent provided for by agreement and not prohibited by law, reasonable attorney's fees and legal expenses incurred by the secured party;

(2) the satisfaction of obligations secured by the security interest or agricultural lien under which the disposition is made;

(3) the satisfaction of obligations secured by any subordinate security interest in or other subordinate lien on the collateral if:

(A) the secured party receives from the holder of the subordinate security interest or other lien an authenticated demand for proceeds before distribution of the proceeds is completed; and

(B) in a case in which a consignor has an interest in the collateral, the subordinate security interest or other lien is senior to the interest of the consignor; and

(4) a secured party that is a consignor of the collateral if the secured party receives from the consignor an authenticated demand for proceeds before distribution of the proceeds is completed.

(b) [Proof of subordinate interest.] If requested by a secured party, a holder of a subordinate security interest or other lien shall furnish reasonable proof of the interest or lien within a reasonable time. Unless the holder does so, the secured party need not comply with the holder's demand under subsection (a)(3).

(c) [Application of noncash proceeds.] A secured party need not apply or pay over for application noncash proceeds of disposition under Section 9-610 unless the failure to do so would be commercially unreasonable. A secured party that applies or pays over for application noncash proceeds shall do so in a commercially reasonable manner.

(d) [Surplus or deficiency if obligation secured.] If the security interest under which a disposition is made secures payment or performance of an obligation, after making the payments and applications required by subsection (a) and permitted by subsection (c):

(1) unless subsection (a)(4) requires the secured party to apply or pay over cash proceeds to a consignor, the secured party shall account to and pay a debtor for any surplus; and

(2) the obligor is liable for any deficiency.

(e) [No surplus or deficiency in sales of certain rights to payment.] If the underlying transaction is a sale of accounts, chattel paper, payment intangibles, or promissory notes:

(1) the debtor is not entitled to any surplus; and

(2) the obligor is not liable for any deficiency.

(f) [Calculation of surplus or deficiency in disposition to person related to secured party.] The surplus or deficiency following a disposition is calculated based on the amount of proceeds that would have been realized in a disposition complying with this part to a transferee other than the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor if:

(1) the transferee in the disposition is the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor; and

(2) the amount of proceeds of the disposition is significantly below the range of proceeds that a complying disposition to a person other than the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor would have brought.

(g) [Cash proceeds received by junior secured party.] A secured party that receives cash proceeds of a disposition in good faith and without knowledge that the receipt violates the rights of the holder of a security interest or other lien that is not subordinate to the security interest or agricultural lien under which the disposition is made:

(1) takes the cash proceeds free of the security interest or other lien;

(2) is not obligated to apply the proceeds of the disposition to the satisfaction of obligations secured by the security interest or other lien; and

(3) is not obligated to account to or pay the holder of the security interest or other lien for any surplus.

As amended in 2000.

See Appendix P for material relating to changes made in text in 2000.

Official Comment

1. Source. Former Section 9-504(1), (2).

2. Application of Proceeds. This section contains the rules governing application of proceeds and the debtor's liability for a deficiency following a disposition of collateral. Subsection (a) sets forth the basic order of application. The proceeds are applied first to the expenses of disposition, second to the obligation secured by the security interest that is being enforced, and third, in the specified circumstances, to interests that are subordinate to that security interest.

Subsections (a) and (d) also address the right of a consignor to receive proceeds of a disposition by a secured party whose interest is senior to that of the consignor. Subsection (a) requires the enforcing secured party to pay excess proceeds first to subordinate secured parties or lienholders whose interests are senior to that of a consignor and, finally, to a consignor. Inasmuch as a consignor is the owner of the collateral, secured parties and lienholders whose interests are junior to the consignor's interest will not be entitled to any proceeds. In like fashion, under subsection (d)(1) the debtor is not entitled to a surplus when the enforcing secured party is required to pay over proceeds to a consignor.

3. Noncash Proceeds. Subsection (c) addresses the application of noncash proceeds of a disposition, such as a note or lease. The explanation in Section 9-608, Comment 4, generally applies to this subsection.

> Example: A secured party in the business of selling or financing automobiles takes possession of collateral (an automobile) following its debtor's default. The secured party decides to sell the automobile in a private disposition under Section 9-610 and sends appropriate notification under Section 9-611. After undertaking its normal credit investigation and in accordance with its normal credit policies, the secured party sells the automobile on credit, on terms typical of the credit terms normally extended by the secured party in the ordinary course of its business. The automobile stands as collateral for the remaining balance of the price. The noncash proceeds received by the secured party are chattel paper. The secured party may wish to credit its debtor (the assignor) with the principal amount of the chattel paper or may wish to credit the debtor only as and when the payments are made on the chattel paper by the buyer.

Under subsection (c), the secured party is under no duty to apply the noncash proceeds (here, the chattel paper) or their value to the secured obligation unless its failure to do so would be commercially unreasonable. If a secured party elects to apply the chattel paper to the outstanding obligation, however, it must do so in a commercially reasonable manner. The facts in the example indicate that it would be commercially unreasonable for the secured party to fail to apply the value of the chattel paper to the original debtor's secured obligation. Unlike the example in Comment 4 to Section 9-608, the noncash proceeds received in this example are of the type that the secured party regularly generates in the ordinary course of its financing business in nonforeclosure transactions. The original debtor should not be exposed to delay or uncertainty in this situation. Of course, there will be many situations that fall between the examples presented in the Comment to Section 9-608 and in this Comment. This Article leaves their resolution to the court based on the facts of each case.

One would expect that where noncash proceeds are or may be material, the secured party and debtor would agree to more specific standards in an agreement entered into before or after default. The parties may agree to the method of application of noncash proceeds if the method is not manifestly unreasonable. See Section 9-603.

When the secured party is not required to "apply or pay over for application noncash proceeds," the proceeds nonetheless remain collateral subject to this Article. See Section 9-608, Comment 4.

4. Surplus and Deficiency. Subsection (d) deals with surplus and deficiency. It revises former Section 9-504(2) by imposing an explicit requirement that the secured party "pay" the debtor for any surplus, while retaining the secured party's duty to "account." Inasmuch as the debtor may not be an obligor, subsection (d) provides that the obligor (not the debtor) is liable for the deficiency. The special rule governing surplus and deficiency when receivables have been sold likewise takes into account the distinction between a debtor and an obligor. Subsection (d) also addresses the situation in which a consignor has an interest that is subordinate to the security interest being enforced.

5. Collateral Under New Ownership. When the debtor sells collateral subject to a security interest, the original debtor (creator of the security interest) is no longer a debtor inasmuch as it no longer has a property interest in the collateral; the buyer is the debtor. See Section 9-102. As between the debtor (buyer of the collateral) and the original debtor (seller of the collateral), the debtor (buyer) normally would be entitled to the surplus following a disposition. Subsection (d) therefore requires the secured party to pay the surplus to the debtor (buyer), not to the original debtor (seller) with which it has dealt. But, because this situation typically arises as a result of the debtor's wrongful act, this Article does not expose the secured party to the risk of determining ownership of the collateral. If the secured party does not know about the buyer and accordingly pays the surplus to the original debtor, the exculpatory provisions of this Article exonerate the secured party from liability to the buyer. See Sections 9-605, 9-628(a), (b). If a debtor sells collateral free of a security interest, as in a sale to a buyer in ordinary course of business (see Section 9-320(a)), the property is no longer collateral and the buyer is not a debtor.

6. Certain "Low-Price" Dispositions. Subsection (f) provides a special method for calculating a deficiency or surplus when the secured party, a person related to the secured party (defined in Section 9-102), or a secondary obligor acquires the collateral at a foreclosure disposition. It recognizes that when the foreclosing secured party or a related party is the transferee of the collateral, the secured party sometimes lacks the incentive to maximize the proceeds of disposition. As a consequence, the disposition may comply with the procedural requirements of this Article (e.g., it is conducted in a commercially reasonable manner following reasonable notice) but nevertheless fetch a low price.

Subsection (f) adjusts for this lack of incentive. If the proceeds of a disposition of collateral to a secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor are "significantly below the range of proceeds that a complying disposition to a person other than the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor would have brought," then instead of calculating a deficiency (or surplus) based on the actual net proceeds, the calculation is based upon the amount that would have been received in a commercially reasonable disposition to a person other than the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor. Subsection (f) thus rejects the view that the secured party's receipt of such a price necessarily constitutes noncompliance with Part 6. However, such a price may suggest the need for greater judicial scrutiny. See Section 9-610, Comment 10.

7. "Person Related To." Section 9-102 defines "person related to." That term is a key element of the system provided in subsection (f) for low-price dispositions. One part of the definition applies when the secured party is an individual, and the other applies when the secured party is an organization. The definition is patterned closely on the corresponding definition in Section 1.301(32) of the Uniform Consumer Credit Code.

§ 9-616. Explanation of Calculation of Surplus or Deficiency.

(a) [Definitions.] In this section:

(1) "Explanation" means a writing that:

(A) states the amount of the surplus or deficiency;

(B) provides an explanation in accordance with subsection (c) of how the secured party calculated the surplus or deficiency;

(C) states, if applicable, that future debits, credits, charges, including additional credit service charges or interest, rebates, and expenses may affect the amount of the surplus or deficiency; and

(D) provides a telephone number or mailing address from which additional information concerning the transaction is available.

(2) "Request" means a record:

(A) authenticated by a debtor or consumer obligor;

(B) requesting that the recipient provide an explanation; and

(C) sent after disposition of the collateral under Section 9-610.

(b) [Explanation of calculation.] In a consumer-goods transaction in which the debtor is entitled to a surplus or a consumer obligor is liable for a deficiency under Section 9-615, the secured party shall:

(1) send an explanation to the debtor or consumer obligor, as applicable, after the disposition and:

(A) before or when the secured party accounts to the debtor and pays any surplus or first makes written demand on the consumer obligor after the disposition for payment of the deficiency; and

(B) within 14 days after receipt of a request; or

(2) in the case of a consumer obligor who is liable for a deficiency, within 14 days after receipt of a request, send to the consumer obligor a record waiving the secured party's right to a deficiency.

(c) [Required information.] To comply with subsection (a)(1)(B), a writing must provide the following information in the following order:

(1) the aggregate amount of obligations secured by the security interest under which the disposition was made, and, if the amount reflects a rebate of unearned interest or credit service charge, an indication of that fact, calculated as of a specified date:

(A) if the secured party takes or receives possession of the collateral after default, not more than 35 days before the secured party takes or receives possession; or

(B) if the secured party takes or receives possession of the collateral before default or does not take possession of the collateral, not more than 35 days before the disposition;

(2) the amount of proceeds of the disposition;

(3) the aggregate amount of the obligations after deducting the amount of proceeds;

(4) the amount, in the aggregate or by type, and types of expenses, including expenses of retaking, holding, preparing for disposition, processing, and disposing of the collateral, and attorney's fees secured by the collateral which are known to the secured party and relate to the current disposition;

(5) the amount, in the aggregate or by type, and types of credits, including rebates of interest or credit service charges, to which the obligor is known to be entitled and which are not reflected in the amount in paragraph (1); and

(6) the amount of the surplus or deficiency.

(d) [Substantial compliance.] A particular phrasing of the explanation is not required. An explanation complying substantially with the requirements of subsection (a) is sufficient, even if it includes minor errors that are not seriously misleading.

(e) [Charges for responses.] A debtor or consumer obligor is entitled without charge to one response to a request under this section during any six-month period in which the secured party did not send to the debtor or consumer obligor an explanation pursuant to subsection (b)(1). The secured party may require payment of a charge not exceeding $25 for each additional response.

Official Comment

1. Source. New.

2. Duty to Send Information Concerning Surplus or Deficiency. This section reflects the view that, in every consumer-goods transaction, the debtor or obligor is entitled to know the amount of a surplus or deficiency and the basis upon which the surplus or deficiency was calculated. Under subsection (b)(1), a secured party is obligated to provide this information (an "explanation," defined in subsection (a)(1)) no later than the time that it accounts for and pays a surplus or the time of its first written attempt to collect the deficiency. The obligor need not make a request for an accounting in order to receive an explanation. A secured party who does not attempt to collect a deficiency in writing or account for and pay a surplus has no obligation to send an explanation under subsection (b)(1) and, consequently, cannot be liable for noncompliance.

A debtor or secondary obligor need not wait until the secured party commences written collection efforts in order to receive an explanation of how a deficiency or surplus was calculated. Subsection (b)(2) obliges the secured party to send an explanation within 14 days after it receives a "request" (defined in subsection (a)(2)).

3. Explanation of Calculation of Surplus or Deficiency. Subsection (c) contains the requirements for how a calculation of a surplus or deficiency must be explained in order to satisfy subsection (a)(1)(B). It gives a secured party some discretion concerning rebates of interest or credit service charges. The secured party may include these rebates in the aggregate amount of obligations secured, under subsection (c)(1), or may include them with other types of rebates and credits under subsection (c)(5). Rebates of interest or credit service charges are the only types of rebates for which this discretion is provided. If the secured party provides an explanation that includes rebates of pre-computed interest, its explanation must so indicate. The expenses and attorney's fees to be described pursuant to subsection (c)(4) are those relating to the most recent disposition, not those that may have been incurred in connection with earlier enforcement efforts and which have been resolved by the parties.

4. Liability for Noncompliance. A secured party who fails to comply with subsection (b)(2) is liable for any loss caused plus $500. See Section 9-625(b), (c), (e)(6). A secured party who fails to send an explanation under subsection (b)(1) is liable for any loss caused plus, if the noncompliance was "part of a pattern, or consistent with a practice of noncompliance," $500. See Section 9-625(b), (c), (e)(5). However, a secured party who fails to comply with this section is not liable for statutory minimum damages under Section 9-625(c)(2). See Section 9-628(d).

§ 9-617. Rights of Transferee of Collateral.

(a) [Effects of disposition.] A secured party's disposition of collateral after default:

(1) transfers to a transferee for value all of the debtor's rights in the collateral;

(2) discharges the security interest under which the disposition is made; and

(3) discharges any subordinate security interest or other subordinate lien [other than liens created under [cite acts or statutes providing for liens, if any, that are not to be discharged]].

(b) [Rights of good-faith transferee.] A transferee that acts in good faith takes free of the rights and interests described in subsection (a), even if the secured party fails to comply with this article or the requirements of any judicial proceeding.

(c) [Rights of other transferee.] If a transferee does not take free of the rights and interests described in subsection (a), the transferee takes the collateral subject to:

(1) the debtor's rights in the collateral;

(2) the security interest or agricultural lien under which the disposition is made; and

(3) any other security interest or other lien.

Official Comment

1. Source. Former Section 9-504(4).

2. Title Taken by Good-Faith Transferee. Subsection (a) sets forth the rights acquired by persons who qualify under subsection (b)—transferees who act in good faith. Such a person is a "transferee," inasmuch as a buyer at a foreclosure sale does not meet the definition of "purchaser" in Section 1-201 (the transfer is not, vis-a-vis the debtor, "voluntary"). By virtue of the expanded definition of the term "debtor" in Section 9-102, subsection (a) makes clear that the ownership interest of a person who bought the collateral subject to the security interest is terminated by a subsequent disposition under this Part. Such a person is a debtor under this Article. Under former Article 9, the result arguably was the same, but the statute was less clear. Under subsection (a), a disposition normally discharges the security interest being foreclosed and any subordinate security interests and other liens.

A disposition has the effect specified in subsection (a), even if the secured party fails to comply with this Article. An aggrieved person (e.g., the holder of a subordinate security interest to whom a notification required by Section 9-611 was not sent) has a right to recover any loss under Section 9-625(b).

3. Unitary Standard in Public and Private Dispositions. Subsection (b) now contains a unitary standard that applies to transferees in both private and public dispositions—acting in good faith. However, this change from former Section 9-504(4) should not be interpreted to mean that a transferee acts in good faith even though it has knowledge of defects or buys in collusion, standards applicable to public dispositions under the former section. Properly understood, those standards were specific examples of the absence of good faith.

4. Title Taken by Nonqualifying Transferee. Subsection (c) specifies the consequences for a transferee who does not qualify for protection under subsections (a) and (b) (i.e., a transferee who does not act in good faith). The transferee takes subject to the rights of the debtor, the enforcing secured party, and other security interests or other liens.

§ 9-618. Rights and Duties of Certain Secondary Obligors.

(a) [Rights and duties of secondary obligor.] A secondary obligor acquires the rights and becomes obligated to perform the duties of the secured party after the secondary obligor:

(1) receives an assignment of a secured obligation from the secured party;

(2) receives a transfer of collateral from the secured party and agrees to accept the rights and assume the duties of the secured party; or

(3) is subrogated to the rights of a secured party with respect to collateral.

(b) [Effect of assignment, transfer, or subrogation.] An assignment, transfer, or subrogation described in subsection (a):

(1) is not a disposition of collateral under Section 9-610; and

(2) relieves the secured party of further duties under this article.

Official Comment

1. Source. Former Section 9-504(5).

2. Scope of This Section. Under this section, assignments of secured obligations and other transactions (regardless of form) that function like assignments of secured obligations are not dispositions to which Part 6 applies. Rather, they constitute assignments of rights and (occasionally) delegations of duties. Application of this section may require an investigation into the agreement of the parties, which may not be reflected in the words of the repurchase agreement (e.g., when the agreement requires a recourse party to "purchase the collateral" but contemplates that the purchaser will then conduct an Article 9 foreclosure disposition).

This section, like former Section 9-504(5), does not constitute a general and comprehensive rule for allocating rights and duties upon assignment of a secured obligation. Rather, it applies only in situations involving a secondary obligor described in subsection (a). In other contexts, the agreement of the parties and applicable law other than Article 9 determine whether the assignment imposes upon the assignee any duty to the debtor and whether the assignor retains its duties to the debtor after the assignment.

Subsection (a)(1) applies when there has been an assignment of an obligation that is secured at the time it is assigned. Thus, if a secondary obligor acquires the collateral at a disposition under Section 9-610 and simultaneously or subsequently discharges the unsecured deficiency claim, subsection (a)(1) is not implicated. Similarly, subsection (a)(3) applies only when the secondary obligor is subrogated to the secured party's rights with respect to collateral. Thus, this subsection will not be implicated if a secondary obligor discharges the debtor's unsecured obligation for a post-disposition deficiency. Similarly, if the secured party disposes of some of the collateral and the secondary obligor thereafter discharges the remaining obligation, subsection (a) applies only with respect to rights and duties concerning the remaining collateral, and, under subsection (b), the subrogation is not a disposition of the remaining collateral.

As discussed more fully in Comment 3, a secondary obligor may receive a transfer of collateral in a disposition under Section 9-610 in exchange for a payment that is applied against the secured obligation. However, a secondary obligor who pays and receives a transfer of collateral does not necessarily become subrogated to the rights of the secured party as contemplated by subsection (a)(3). Only to the extent the secondary obligor makes a payment in satisfaction of its secondary obligation would it become subrogated. To the extent its payment constitutes the price of the collateral in a Section 9-610 disposition by the secured party, the secondary obligor would not be subrogated. Thus, if the amount paid by the secondary obligor for the collateral in a Section 9-610 disposition is itself insufficient to discharge the secured obligation, but the secondary obligor makes an additional payment that satisfies the remaining balance, the secondary obligor would be subrogated to the secured party's deficiency claim. However, the duties of the secured party as such would have come to an end with respect to that collateral. In some situations the capacity in which the payment is made may be unclear. Accordingly, the parties should in their relationship provide clear evidence of the nature and circumstances of the payment by the secondary obligor.

3. Transfer of Collateral to Secondary Obligor. It is possible for a secured party to transfer collateral to a secondary obligor in a transaction that is a disposition under Section 9-610 and that establishes a surplus or deficiency under Section 9-615. Indeed, this Article includes a special rule, in Section 9-615(f), for establishing a deficiency in the case of some dispositions to, inter alia, secondary obligors. This Article rejects the view, which some may have ascribed to former Section 9-504(5), that a transfer of collateral to a recourse party can never constitute a disposition of collateral which discharges a security interest. Inasmuch as a secured party could itself buy collateral at its own public sale, it makes no sense to prohibit a recourse party ever from buying at the sale.

4. Timing and Scope of Obligations. Under subsection (a), a recourse party acquires rights and incurs obligations only "after" one of the specified circumstances occurs. This makes clear that when a successor assignee, transferee, or subrogee becomes obligated it does not assume any liability for earlier actions or inactions of the secured party whom it has succeeded unless it agrees to do so. Once the successor becomes obligated, however, it is responsible for complying with the secured party's duties thereafter. For example, if the successor is in possession of collateral, then it has the duties specified in Section 9-207.

Under subsection (b), the same event (assignment, transfer, or subrogation) that gives rise to rights to, and imposes obligations on, a successor relieves its predecessor of any further duties under this Article. For example, if the security interest is enforced after the secured obligation is assigned, the assignee—but not the assignor—has the duty to comply with this Part. Similarly, the assignment does not excuse the assignor from liability for failure to comply with duties that arose before the event or impose liability on the assignee for the assignor's failure to comply.

§ 9-619. Transfer of Record or Legal Title.

(a) ["Transfer statement."] In this section, "transfer statement" means a record authenticated by a secured party stating:

(1) that the debtor has defaulted in connection with an obligation secured by specified collateral;

(2) that the secured party has exercised its post-default remedies with respect to the collateral;

(3) that, by reason of the exercise, a transferee has acquired the rights of the debtor in the collateral; and

(4) the name and mailing address of the secured party, debtor, and transferee.

(b) [Effect of transfer statement.] A transfer statement entitles the transferee to the transfer of record of all rights of the debtor in the collateral specified in the statement in any official filing, recording, registration, or certificate-of-title system covering the collateral. If a transfer statement is presented with the applicable fee and request form to the official or office responsible for maintaining the system, the official or office shall:

(1) accept the transfer statement;

(2) promptly amend its records to reflect the transfer; and

(3) if applicable, issue a new appropriate certificate of title in the name of the transferee.

(c) [Transfer not a disposition; no relief of secured party's duties.] A transfer of the record or legal title to collateral to a secured party under subsection (b) or otherwise is not of itself a disposition of collateral under this article and does not of itself relieve the secured party of its duties under this article.

1. Source. New.

2. Transfer of Record or Legal Title. Potential buyers of collateral that is covered by a certificate of title (e.g., an automobile) or is subject to a registration system (e.g., a copyright) typically require as a condition of their purchase that the certificate or registry reflect their ownership. In many cases, this condition can be met only with the consent of the record owner. If the record owner is the debtor and, as may be the case after the default, the debtor refuses to cooperate, the secured party may have great difficulty disposing of the collateral.

Subsection (b) provides a simple mechanism for obtaining record or legal title, for use primarily when other law does not provide one. Of course, use of this mechanism will not be effective to clear title to the extent that subsection (b) is preempted by federal law. Subsection (b) contemplates a transfer of record or legal title to a third party, following a secured party's exercise of its disposition or acceptance remedies under this Part, as well as a transfer by a debtor to a secured party prior to the secured party's exercise of those remedies. Under subsection (c), a transfer of record or legal title (under subsection (b) or under other law) to a secured party prior to the exercise of those remedies merely puts the secured party in a position to pass legal or record title to a transferee at foreclosure. A secured party who has obtained record or legal title retains its duties with respect to enforcement of its security interest, and the debtor retains its rights as well.

3. Title-Clearing Systems Under Other Law. Applicable non-UCC law (e.g., a certificate-of-title statute, federal registry rules, or the like) may provide a means by which the secured party may obtain or transfer record or legal title for the purpose of a disposition of the property under this Article. The mechanism provided by this section is in addition to any title-clearing provision under law other than this Article.

§ 9-620. Acceptance of Collateral in Full or Partial Satisfaction of Obligation; Compulsory Disposition of Collateral.

(a) [Conditions to acceptance in satisfaction.] Except as otherwise provided in subsection (g), a secured party may accept collateral in full or partial satisfaction of the obligation it secures only if:

(1) the debtor consents to the acceptance under subsection (c);

(2) the secured party does not receive, within the time set forth in subsection (d), a notification of objection to the proposal authenticated by:

(A) a person to which the secured party was required to send a proposal under Section 9-621; or

(B) any other person, other than the debtor, holding an interest in the collateral subordinate to the security interest that is the subject of the proposal;

(3) if the collateral is consumer goods, the collateral is not in the possession of the debtor when the debtor consents to the acceptance; and

(4) subsection (e) does not require the secured party to dispose of the collateral or the debtor waives the requirement pursuant to Section 9-624.

(b) [Purported acceptance ineffective.] A purported or apparent acceptance of collateral under this section is ineffective unless:

(1) the secured party consents to the acceptance in an authenticated record or sends a proposal to the debtor; and

(2) the conditions of subsection (a) are met.

(c) [Debtor's consent.] For purposes of this section:

(1) a debtor consents to an acceptance of collateral in partial satisfaction of the obligation it secures only if the debtor agrees to the terms of the acceptance in a record authenticated after default; and

(2) a debtor consents to an acceptance of collateral in full satisfaction of the obligation it secures only if the debtor agrees to the terms of the acceptance in a record authenticated after default or the secured party:

(A) sends to the debtor after default a proposal that is unconditional or subject only to a condition that collateral not in the possession of the secured party be preserved or maintained;

(B) in the proposal, proposes to accept collateral in full satisfaction of the obligation it secures; and

(C) does not receive a notification of objection authenticated by the debtor within 20 days after the proposal is sent.

(d) [Effectiveness of notification.] To be effective under subsection (a)(2), a notification of objection must be received by the secured party:

(1) in the case of a person to which the proposal was sent pursuant to Section 9-621, within 20 days after notification was sent to that person; and

(2) in other cases:

(A) within 20 days after the last notification was sent pursuant to Section 9-621; or

(B) if a notification was not sent, before the debtor consents to the acceptance under subsection (c).

(e) [Mandatory disposition of consumer goods.] A secured party that has taken possession of collateral shall dispose of the collateral pursuant to Section 9-610 within the time specified in subsection (f) if:

(1) 60 percent of the cash price has been paid in the case of a purchase-money security interest in consumer goods; or

(2) 60 percent of the principal amount of the obligation secured has been paid in the case of a non-purchase-money security interest in consumer goods.

(f) [Compliance with mandatory disposition requirement.] To comply with subsection (e), the secured party shall dispose of the collateral:

(1) within 90 days after taking possession; or

(2) within any longer period to which the debtor and all secondary obligors have agreed in an agreement to that effect entered into and authenticated after default.

(g) [No partial satisfaction in consumer transaction.] In a consumer transaction, a secured party may not accept collateral in partial satisfaction of the obligation it secures.

1. Source. Former Section 9-505.

2. Overview. This section and the two sections following deal with strict foreclosure, a procedure by which the secured party acquires the debtor's interest in the collateral without the need for a sale or other disposition under Section 9-610. Although these provisions derive from former Section 9-505, they have been entirely reorganized and substantially rewritten. The more straightforward approach taken in this Article eliminates the fiction that the secured party always will present a "proposal" for the retention of collateral and the debtor will have a fixed period to respond. By eliminating the need (but preserving the possibility) for proceeding in that fashion, this section eliminates much of the awkwardness of former Section 9-505. It reflects the belief that strict foreclosures should be encouraged and often will produce better results than a disposition for all concerned.

Subsection (a) sets forth the conditions necessary to an effective acceptance (formerly, retention) of collateral in full or partial satisfaction of the secured obligation. Section 9-621 requires in addition that a secured party who wishes to proceed under this section notify certain other persons who have or claim to have an interest in the collateral. Unlike the failure to meet the conditions in subsection (a), under Section 9-622(b) the failure to comply with the notification requirement of Section 9-621 does not render the acceptance of collateral ineffective. Rather, the acceptance can take effect notwithstanding the secured party's noncompliance. A person to whom the required notice was not sent has the right to recover damages under Section 9-625(b). Section 9-622(a) sets forth the effect of an acceptance of collateral.

3. Conditions to Effective Acceptance. Subsection (a) contains the conditions necessary to the effectiveness of an acceptance of collateral. Subsection (a)(1) requires the debtor's consent. Under subsections (c)(1) and (c)(2), the debtor may consent by agreeing to the acceptance in writing after default. Subsection (c)(2) contains an alternative method by which to satisfy the debtor's-consent condition in subsection (a)(1). It follows the proposal-and-objection model found in former Section 9-505: The debtor consents if the secured party sends a proposal to the debtor and does not receive an objection within 20 days. Under subsection (c)(1), however, that silence is not deemed to be consent with respect to acceptances in partial satisfaction. Thus, a secured party who wishes to conduct a "partial strict foreclosure" must obtain the debtor's agreement in a record authenticated after default. In all other respects, the conditions necessary to an effective partial strict foreclosure are the same as those governing acceptance of collateral in full satisfaction. (But see subsection (g), prohibiting partial strict foreclosure of a security interest in consumer transactions.)

The time when a debtor consents to a strict foreclosure is significant in several circumstances under this section and the following one. See Sections 9-620(a)(1), (d)(2), 9-621(a)(1), (a)(2), (a)(3). For purposes of determining the time of consent, a debtor's conditional consent constitutes consent.

Subsection (a)(2) contains the second condition to the effectiveness of an acceptance under this section—the absence of a timely objection from a person holding a junior interest in the collateral or from a secondary obligor. Any junior party—secured party or lienholder-is entitled to lodge an objection to a proposal, even if that person was not entitled to notification under Section 9-621. Subsection (d), discussed below, indicates when an objection is timely.

Subsections (a)(3) and (a)(4) contain special rules for transactions in which consumers are involved. See Comment 12.

4. Proposals. Section 9-102 defines the term "proposal." It is necessary to send a "proposal" to the debtor only if the debtor does not agree to an acceptance in an authenticated record as described in subsection (c)(1) or (c)(2). Section 9-621(a) determines whether it is necessary to send a proposal to third parties. A proposal need not take any particular form as long as it sets forth the terms under which the secured party is willing to accept collateral in satisfaction. A proposal to accept collateral should specify the amount (or a means of calculating the amount, such as by including a per diem accrual figure) of the secured obligations to be satisfied, state the conditions (if any) under which the proposal may be revoked, and describe any other applicable conditions. Note, however, that a conditional proposal generally requires the debtor's agreement in order to take effect. See subsection (c).

5. Secured Party's Agreement; No "Constructive" Strict Foreclosure. The conditions of subsection (a) relate to actual or implied consent by the debtor and any secondary obligor or holder of a junior security interest or lien. To ensure that the debtor cannot unilaterally cause an acceptance of collateral, subsection (b) provides that compliance with these conditions is necessary but not sufficient to cause an acceptance of collateral. Rather, under subsection (b), acceptance does not occur unless, in addition, the secured party consents to the acceptance in an authenticated record or sends to the debtor a proposal. For this reason, a mere delay in collection or disposition of collateral does not constitute a "constructive" strict foreclosure. Instead, delay is a factor relating to whether the secured party acted in a commercially reasonable manner for purposes of Section 9-607 or 9-610. A debtor's voluntary surrender of collateral to a secured party and the secured party's acceptance of possession of the collateral does not, of itself, necessarily raise an implication that the secured party intends or is proposing to accept the collateral in satisfaction of the secured obligation under this section.

6. When Acceptance Occurs. This section does not impose any formalities or identify any steps that a secured party must take in order to accept collateral once the conditions of subsections (a) and (b) have been met. Absent facts or circumstances indicating a contrary intention, the fact that the conditions have been met provides a sufficient indication that the secured party has accepted the collateral on the terms to which the secured party has consented or proposed and the debtor has consented or failed to object. Following a proposal, acceptance of the collateral normally is automatic upon the secured party's becoming bound and the time for objection passing. As a matter of good business practice, an enforcing secured party may wish to memorialize its acceptance following a proposal, such as by notifying the debtor that the strict foreclosure is effective or by placing a written record to that effect in its files. The secured party's agreement to accept collateral is self-executing and cannot be breached. The secured party is bound by its agreement to accept collateral and by any proposal to which the debtor consents.

7. No Possession Requirement. This section eliminates the requirement in former Section 9-505 that the secured party be "in possession" of collateral. It clarifies that intangible collateral, which cannot be possessed, may be subject to a strict foreclosure under this section. However, under subsection (a)(3), if the collateral is consumer goods, acceptance does not occur unless the debtor is not in possession.

8. When Objection Timely. Subsection (d) explains when an objection is timely and thus prevents an acceptance of collateral from taking effect. An objection by a person to which notification was sent under Section 9-621 is effective if it is received by the secured party within 20 days from the date the notification was sent to that person. Other objecting parties (i.e., third parties who are not entitled to notification) may object at any time within 20 days after the last notification is sent under Section 9-621. If no such notification is sent, third parties must object before the debtor agrees to the acceptance in writing or is deemed to have consented by silence. The former may occur any time after default, and the latter requires a 20-day waiting period. See subsection (c).

9. Applicability of Other Law. This section does not purport to regulate all aspects of the transaction by which a secured party may become the owner of collateral previously owned by the debtor. For example, a secured party's acceptance of a motor vehicle in satisfaction of secured obligations may require compliance with the applicable motor vehicle certificate-of-title law. State legislatures should conform those laws so that they mesh well with this section and Section 9-610, and courts should construe those laws and this section harmoniously. A secured party's acceptance of collateral in the possession of the debtor also may implicate statutes dealing with a seller's retention of possession of goods sold.

10. Accounts, Chattel Paper, Payment Intangibles, and Promissory Notes. If the collateral is accounts, chattel paper, payment intangibles, or promissory notes, then a secured party's acceptance of the collateral in satisfaction of secured obligations would constitute a sale to the secured party. That sale normally would give rise to a new security interest (the ownership interest) under Sections 1-201(37) and 9-109. In the case of accounts and chattel paper, the new security interest would remain perfected by a filing that was effective to perfect the secured party's original security interest. In the case of payment intangibles or promissory notes, the security interest would be perfected when it attaches. See Section 9-309. However, the procedures for acceptance of collateral under this section satisfy all necessary formalities and a new security agreement authenticated by the debtor would not be necessary.

11. Role of Good Faith. Section 1-203 imposes an obligation of good faith on a secured party's enforcement under this Article. This obligation may not be disclaimed by agreement. See Section 1-102. Thus, a proposal and acceptance made under this section in bad faith would not be effective. For example, a secured party's proposal to accept marketable securities worth $1,000 in full satisfaction of indebtedness in the amount of $100, made in the hopes that the debtor might inadvertently fail to object, would be made in bad faith. On the other hand, in the normal case proposals and acceptances should be not second-guessed on the basis of the "value" of the collateral involved. Disputes about valuation or even a clear excess of collateral value over the amount of obligations satisfied do not necessarily demonstrate the absence of good faith.

12. Special Rules in Consumer Cases. Subsection (e) imposes an obligation on the secured party to dispose of consumer goods under certain circumstances. Subsection (f) explains when a disposition that is required under subsection (e) is timely. An effective acceptance of collateral cannot occur if subsection (e) requires a disposition unless the debtor waives this requirement pursuant to Section 9-624(b). Moreover, a secured party who takes possession of collateral and unreasonably delays disposition violates subsection (e), if applicable, and may also violate Section 9-610 or other provisions of this Part. Subsection (e) eliminates as superfluous the express statutory reference to "conversion" found in former Section 9-505. Remedies available under other law, including conversion, remain available under this Article in appropriate cases. See Sections 1-103, 1-106.

Subsection (g) prohibits the secured party in consumer transactions from accepting collateral in partial satisfaction of the obligation it secures. If a secured party attempts an acceptance in partial satisfaction in a consumer transaction, the attempted acceptance is void.

§ 9-621. Notification of Proposal to Accept Collateral.

(a) [Persons to which proposal to be sent.] A secured party that desires to accept collateral in full or partial satisfaction of the obligation it secures shall send its proposal to:

(1) any person from which the secured party has received, before the debtor consented to the acceptance, an authenticated notification of a claim of an interest in the collateral;

(2) any other secured party or lienholder that, 10 days before the debtor consented to the acceptance, held a security interest in or other lien on the collateral perfected by the filing of a financing statement that:

(A) identified the collateral;

(B) was indexed under the debtor's name as of that date; and

(C) was filed in the office or offices in which to file a financing statement against the debtor covering the collateral as of that date; and

(3) any other secured party that, 10 days before the debtor consented to the acceptance, held a security interest in the collateral perfected by compliance with a statute, regulation, or treaty described in Section 9-311(a).

(b) [Proposal to be sent to secondary obligor in partial satisfaction.] A secured party that desires to accept collateral in partial satisfaction of the obligation it secures shall send its proposal to any secondary obligor in addition to the persons described in subsection (a).

1. Source. Former Section 9-505.

2. Notification Requirement. Subsection (a) specifies three classes of competing claimants to whom the secured party must send notification of its proposal: (i) those who notify the secured party that they claim an interest in the collateral, (ii) holders of certain security interests and liens who have filed against the debtor, and (iii) holders of certain security interests who have perfected by compliance with a statute (including a certificate-of-title statute), regulation, or treaty described in Section 9-311(a). With regard to (ii), see Section 9-611, Comment 4. Subsection (b) also requires notification to any secondary obligor if the proposal is for acceptance in partial satisfaction.

Unlike Section 9-611, this section contains no "safe harbor," which excuses an enforcing secured party from notifying certain secured parties and other lienholders. This is because, unlike Section 9-610, which requires that a disposition of collateral be commercially reasonable, Section 9-620 permits the debtor and secured party to set the amount of credit the debtor will receive for the collateral subject only to the requirement of good faith. An effective acceptance discharges subordinate security interests and other subordinate liens. See Section 9-622. If collateral is subject to several liens securing debts much larger than the value of the collateral, the debtor may be disinclined to refrain from consenting to an acceptance by the holder of the senior security interest, even though, had the debtor objected and the senior disposed of the collateral under Section 9-610, the collateral may have yielded more than enough to satisfy the senior security interest (but not enough to satisfy all the liens). Accordingly, this section imposes upon the enforcing secured party the risk of the filing office's errors and delay. The holder of a security interest who is entitled to notification under this section but does not receive it has the right to recover under Section 9-625(b) any loss resulting from the enforcing secured party's noncompliance with this section.

§ 9-622. Effect of Acceptance of Collateral.

(a) [Effect of acceptance.] A secured party's acceptance of collateral in full or partial satisfaction of the obligation it secures:

(1) discharges the obligation to the extent consented to by the debtor;

(2) transfers to the secured party all of a debtor's rights in the collateral;

(3) discharges the security interest or agricultural lien that is the subject of the debtor's consent and any subordinate security interest or other subordinate lien; and

(4) terminates any other subordinate interest.

(b) [Discharge of subordinate interest notwithstanding noncompliance.] A subordinate interest is discharged or terminated under subsection (a), even if the secured party fails to comply with this article.

Official Comment

1. Source. New.

2. Effect of Acceptance. Subsection (a) specifies the effect of an acceptance of collateral in full or partial satisfaction of the secured obligation. The acceptance to which it refers is an effective acceptance. If a purported acceptance is ineffective under Section 9-620, e.g., because the secured party receives a timely objection from a person entitled to notification, then neither this subsection nor subsection (b) applies. Paragraph (1) expresses the fundamental consequence of accepting collateral in full or partial satisfaction of the secured obligation—the obligation is discharged to the extent consented to by the debtor. Unless otherwise agreed, the obligor remains liable for any deficiency. Paragraphs (2) through (4) indicate the effects of an acceptance on various property rights and interests. Paragraph (2) follows Section 9-617(a) in providing that the secured party acquires "all of a debtor's rights in the collateral." Under paragraph (3), the effect of strict foreclosure on holders of junior security interests and other liens is the same regardless of whether the collateral is accepted in full or partial satisfaction of the secured obligation: all junior encumbrances are discharged. Paragraph (4) provides for the termination of other subordinate interests.

Subsection (b) makes clear that subordinate interests are discharged under subsection (a) regardless of whether the secured party complies with this Article. Thus, subordinate interests are discharged regardless of whether a proposal was required to be sent or, if required, was sent. However, a secured party's failure to send a proposal or otherwise to comply with this Article may subject the secured party to liability under Section 9-625.

§ 9-623. Right to Redeem Collateral.

(a) [Persons that may redeem.] A debtor, any secondary obligor, or any other secured party or lienholder may redeem collateral.

(b) [Requirements for redemption.] To redeem collateral, a person shall tender:

(1) fulfillment of all obligations secured by the collateral; and

(2) the reasonable expenses and attorney's fees described in Section 9-615(a)(1).

(c) [When redemption may occur.] A redemption may occur at any time before a secured party:

(1) has collected collateral under Section 9-607;

(2) has disposed of collateral or entered into a contract for its disposition under Section 9-610; or

(3) has accepted collateral in full or partial satisfaction of the obligation it secures under Section 9-622.

Official Comment

1. Source. Former Section 9-506.

2. Redemption Right. Under this section, as under former Section 9-506, the debtor or another secured party may redeem collateral as long as the secured party has not collected (Section 9-607), disposed of or contracted for the disposition of (Section 9-610), or accepted (Section 9-620) the collateral. Although this section generally follows former Section 9-506, it extends the right of redemption to holders of nonconsensual liens. To redeem the collateral a person must tender fulfillment of all obligations secured, plus certain expenses. If the entire balance of a secured obligation has been accelerated, it would be necessary to tender the entire balance. A tender of fulfillment obviously means more than a new promise to perform an existing promise. It requires payment in full of all monetary obligations then due and performance in full of all other obligations then matured. If unmatured secured obligations remain, the security interest continues to secure them (i.e., as if there had been no default).

3. Redemption of Remaining Collateral Following Partial Enforcement. Under Section 9-610 a secured party may make successive dispositions of portions of its collateral. These dispositions would not affect the debtor's, another secured party's, or a lienholder's right to redeem the remaining collateral.

4. Effect of "Repledging." Section 9-207 generally permits a secured party having possession or control of collateral to create a security interest in the collateral. As explained in the Comments to that section, the debtor's right (as opposed to its practical ability) to redeem collateral is not affected by, and does not affect, the priority of a security interest created by the debtor's secured party.

§ 9-624. Waiver.

(a) [Waiver of disposition notification.] A debtor or secondary obligor may waive the right to notification of disposition of collateral under Section 9-611 only by an agreement to that effect entered into and authenticated after default.

(b) [Waiver of mandatory disposition.] A debtor may waive the right to require disposition of collateral under Section 9-620(e) only by an agreement to that effect entered into and authenticated after default.

(c) [Waiver of redemption right.] Except in a consumer-goods transaction, a debtor or secondary obligor may waive the right to redeem collateral under Section 9-623 only by an agreement to that effect entered into and authenticated after default.

Official Comment

1. Source. Former Sections 9-504(3), 9-505, 9-506.

2. Waiver. This section is a limited exception to Section 9-602, which generally prohibits waiver by debtors and obligors. It makes no provision for waiver of the rule prohibiting a secured party from buying at its own private disposition. Transactions of this kind are equivalent to "strict foreclosures" and are governed by Sections 9-620, 9-621, and 9-622.

[SUBPART 2. NONCOMPLIANCE WITH ARTICLE]

§ 9-625. Remedies for Secured Party's Failure to Comply With Article.

(a) [Judicial orders concerning noncompliance.] If it is established that a secured party is not proceeding in accordance with this article, a court may order or restrain collection, enforcement, or disposition of collateral on appropriate terms and conditions.

(b) [Damages for noncompliance.] Subject to subsections (c), (d), and (f), a person is liable for damages in the amount of any loss caused by a failure to comply with this article. Loss caused by a failure to comply may include loss resulting from the debtor's inability to obtain, or increased costs of, alternative financing.

(c) [Persons entitled to recover damages; statutory damages in consumer-goods transaction.] Except as otherwise provided in Section 9-628:

(1) a person that, at the time of the failure, was a debtor, was an obligor, or held a security interest in or other lien on the collateral may recover damages under subsection (b) for its loss; and

(2) if the collateral is consumer goods, a person that was a debtor or a secondary obligor at the time a secured party failed to comply with this part may recover for that failure in any event an amount not less than the credit service charge plus 10 percent of the principal amount of the obligation or the time-price differential plus 10 percent of the cash price.

(d) [Recovery when deficiency eliminated or reduced.] A debtor whose deficiency is eliminated under Section 9-626 may recover damages for the loss of any surplus. However, a debtor or secondary obligor whose deficiency is eliminated or reduced under Section 9-626 may not otherwise recover under subsection (b) for noncompliance with the provisions of this part relating to collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance.

(e) [Statutory damages: noncompliance with specified provisions.] In addition to any damages recoverable under subsection (b), the debtor, consumer obligor, or person named as a debtor in a filed record, as applicable, may recover $500 in each case from a person that:

(1) fails to comply with Section 9-208;

(2) fails to comply with Section 9-209;

(3) files a record that the person is not entitled to file under Section 9-509(a);

(4) fails to cause the secured party of record to file or send a termination statement as required by Section 9-513(a) or (c);

(5) fails to comply with Section 9-616(b)(1) and whose failure is part of a pattern, or consistent with a practice, of noncompliance; or

(6) fails to comply with Section 9-616(b)(2).

(f) [Statutory damages: noncompliance with Section 9-210.] A debtor or consumer obligor may recover damages under subsection (b) and, in addition, $500 in each case from a person that, without reasonable cause, fails to comply with a request under Section 9-210. A recipient of a request under Section 9-210 which never claimed an interest in the collateral or obligations that are the subject of a request under that section has a reasonable excuse for failure to comply with the request within the meaning of this subsection.

(g) [Limitation of security interest: noncompliance with Section 9-210.] If a secured party fails to comply with a request regarding a list of collateral or a statement of account under Section 9-210, the secured party may claim a security interest only as shown in the list or statement included in the request as against a person that is reasonably misled by the failure.

As amended in 2000.

1. Source. Former Section 9-507.

2. Remedies for Noncompliance; Scope. Subsections (a) and (b) provide the basic remedies afforded to those aggrieved by a secured party's failure to comply with this Article. Like all provisions that create liability, they are subject to Section 9-628, which should be read in conjunction with Section 9-605. The principal limitations under this Part on a secured party's right to enforce its security interest against collateral are the requirements that it proceed in good faith (Section 1-203), in a commercially reasonable manner (Sections 9-607 and 9-610), and, in most cases, with reasonable notification (Sections 9-611 through 9-614). Following former Section 9-507, under subsection (a) an aggrieved person may seek injunctive relief, and under subsection (b) the person may recover damages for losses caused by noncompliance. Unlike former Section 9-507, however, subsections (a) and (b) are not limited to noncompliance with provisions of this Part of Article 9. Rather, they apply to noncompliance with any provision of this Article. The change makes this section applicable to noncompliance with Sections 9-207 (duties of secured party in possession of collateral), 9-208 (duties of secured party having control over deposit account), 9-209 (duties of secured party if account debtor has been notified of an assignment), 9-210 (duty to comply with request for accounting, etc.), 9-509(a) (duty to refrain from filing unauthorized financing statement), and 9-513(a) or (c) (duty to provide termination statement). Subsection (a) also modifies the first sentence of former Section 9-507(1) by adding the references to "collection" and "enforcement." Subsection (c)(2), which gives a minimum damage recovery in consumer-goods transactions, applies only to noncompliance with the provisions of this Part.

3. Damages for Noncompliance with This Article. Subsection (b) sets forth the basic remedy for failure to comply with the requirements of this Article: a damage recovery in the amount of loss caused by the noncompliance. Subsection (c) identifies who may recover under subsection (b). It affords a remedy to any aggrieved person who is a debtor or obligor.

However, a principal obligor who is not a debtor may recover damages only for noncompliance with Section 9-616, inasmuch as none of the other rights and duties in this Article run in favor of such a principal obligor. Such a principal obligor could not suffer any loss or damage on account of noncompliance with rights or duties of which it is not a beneficiary. Subsection (c) also affords a remedy to an aggrieved person who holds a competing security interest or other lien, regardless of whether the aggrieved person is entitled to notification under Part 6. The remedy is available even to holders of senior security interests and other liens. The exercise of this remedy is subject to the normal rules of pleading and proof. A person who has delegated the duties of a secured party but who remains obligated to perform them is liable under this subsection. The last sentence of subsection (d) eliminates the possibility of double recovery or other over-compensation arising out of a reduction or elimination of a deficiency under Section 9-626, based on noncompliance with the provisions of this Part relating to collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance. Assuming no double recovery, a debtor whose deficiency is eliminated under Section 9-626 may pursue a claim for a surplus. Because Section 9-626 does not apply to consumer transactions, the statute is silent as to whether a double recovery or other over-compensation is possible in a consumer transaction.

Damages for violation of the requirements of this Article, including Section 9-609, are those reasonably calculated to put an eligible claimant in the position that it would have occupied had no violation occurred. See Section 1-106. Subsection (b) supports the recovery of actual damages for committing a breach of the peace in violation of Section 9-609, and principles of tort law supplement this subsection. See Section 1-103. However, to the extent that damages in tort compensate the debtor for the same loss dealt with by this Article, the debtor should be entitled to only one recovery.

4. Minimum Damages in Consumer-Goods Transactions. Subsection (c)(2) provides a minimum, statutory, damage recovery for a debtor and secondary obligor in a consumer-goods transaction. It is patterned on former Section 9-507(1) and is designed to ensure that every noncompliance with the requirements of Part 6 in a consumer-goods transaction results in liability, regardless of any injury that may have resulted. Subsection (c)(2) leaves the treatment of statutory damages as it was under former Article 9. A secured party is not liable for statutory damages under this subsection more than once with respect to any one secured obligation (see Section 9-628(e)), nor is a secured party liable under this subsection for failure to comply with Section 9-616 (see Section 9-628(d)).

Following former Section 9-507(1), this Article does not include a definition or explanation of the terms "credit service charge," "principal amount," "time-price differential," or "cash price," as used in subsection (c)(2). It leaves their construction and application to the court, taking into account the subsection's purpose of providing a minimum recovery in consumer-goods transactions.

5. Supplemental Damages. Subsections (e) and (f) provide damages that supplement the recovery, if any, under subsection (b). Subsection (e) imposes an additional $500 liability upon a person who fails to comply with the provisions specified in that subsection, and subsection (f) imposes like damages on a person who, without reasonable excuse, fails to comply with a request for an accounting or a request regarding a list of collateral or statement of account under Section 9-210. However, under subsection (f), a person has a reasonable excuse for the failure if the person never claimed an interest in the collateral or obligations that were the subject of the request.

6. Estoppel. Subsection (g) limits the extent to which a secured party who fails to comply with a request regarding a list of collateral or statement of account may claim a security interest.

§ 9-626. Action in Which Deficiency or Surplus Is in Issue.

(a) [Applicable rules if amount of deficiency or surplus in issue.] In an action arising from a transaction, other than a consumer transaction, in which the amount of a deficiency or surplus is in issue, the following rules apply:

(1) A secured party need not prove compliance with the provisions of this part relating to collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance unless the debtor or a secondary obligor places the secured party's compliance in issue.

(2) If the secured party's compliance is placed in issue, the secured party has the burden of establishing that the collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance was conducted in accordance with this part.

(3) Except as otherwise provided in Section 9-628, if a secured party fails to prove that the collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance was conducted in accordance with the provisions of this part relating to collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance, the liability of a debtor or a secondary obligor for a deficiency is limited to an amount by which the sum of the secured obligation, expenses, and attorney's fees exceeds the greater of:

(A) the proceeds of the collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance; or

(B) the amount of proceeds that would have been realized had the noncomplying secured party proceeded in accordance with the provisions of this part relating to collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance.

(4) For purposes of paragraph (3)(B), the amount of proceeds that would have been realized is equal to the sum of the secured obligation, expenses, and attorney's fees unless the secured party proves that the amount is less than that sum.

(5) If a deficiency or surplus is calculated under Section 9-615(f), the debtor or obligor has the burden of establishing that the amount of proceeds of the disposition is significantly below the range of prices that a complying disposition to a person other than the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor would have brought.

(b) [Non-consumer transactions; no inference.] The limitation of the rules in subsection (a) to transactions other than consumer transactions is intended to leave to the court the determination of the proper rules in consumer transactions. The court may not infer from that limitation the nature of the proper rule in consumer transactions and may continue to apply established approaches.

Official Comment

1. Source. New.

2. Scope. The basic damage remedy under Section 9-625(b) is subject to the special rules in this section for transactions other than consumer transactions. This section addresses situations in which the amount of a deficiency or surplus is in issue, i.e., situations in which the secured party has collected, enforced, disposed of, or accepted the collateral. It contains special rules applicable to a determination of the amount of a deficiency or surplus. Because this section affects a person's liability for a deficiency, it is subject to Section 9-628, which should be read in conjunction with Section 9-605. The rules in this section apply only to noncompliance in connection with the "collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance" under Part 6. For other types of noncompliance with Part 6, the general liability rule of Section 9-625(b)—recovery of actual damages—applies. Consider, for example, a repossession that does not comply with Section 9-609 for want of a default. The debtor's remedy is under Section 9-625(b). In a proper case, the secured party also may be liable for conversion under non-UCC law. If the secured party thereafter disposed of the collateral, however, it would violate Section 9-610 at that time, and this section would apply.

3. Rebuttable Presumption Rule. Subsection (a) establishes the rebuttable presumption rule for transactions other than consumer transactions. Under paragraph (1), the secured party need not prove compliance with the relevant provisions of this Part as part of its prima facie case. If, however, the debtor or a secondary obligor raises the issue (in accordance with the forum's rules of pleading and practice), then the secured party bears the burden of proving that the collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance complied. In the event the secured party is unable to meet this burden, then paragraph (3) explains how to calculate the deficiency. Under this rebuttable presumption rule, the debtor or obligor is to be credited with the greater of the actual proceeds of the disposition or the proceeds that would have been realized had the secured party complied with the relevant provisions. If a deficiency remains, then the secured party is entitled to recover it. The references to "the secured obligation, expenses, and attorney's fees" in paragraphs (3) and (4) embrace the application rules in Sections 9-608(a) and 9-615(a).

Unless the secured party proves that compliance with the relevant provisions would have yielded a smaller amount, under paragraph (4) the amount that a complying collection, enforcement, or disposition would have yielded is deemed to be equal to the amount of the secured obligation, together with expenses and attorney's fees. Thus, the secured party may not recover any deficiency unless it meets this burden.

4. Consumer Transactions. Although subsection (a) adopts a version of the rebuttable presumption rule for transactions other than consumer transactions, with certain exceptions Part 6 does not specify the effect of a secured party's noncompliance in consumer transactions. (The exceptions are the provisions for the recovery of damages in Section 9-625.) Subsection (b) provides that the limitation of subsection (a) to transactions other than consumer transactions is intended to leave to the court the determination of the proper rules in consumer transactions. It also instructs the court not to draw any inference from the limitation as to the proper rules for consumer transactions and leaves the court free to continue to apply established approaches to those transactions.

Courts construing former Section 9-507 disagreed about the consequences of a secured party's failure to comply with the requirements of former Part 5. Three general approaches emerged. Some courts have held that a noncomplying secured party may not recover a deficiency (the "absolute bar" rule). A few courts held that the debtor can offset against a claim to a deficiency all damages recoverable under former Section 9-507 resulting from the secured party's noncompliance (the "offset" rule). A plurality of courts considering the issue held that the noncomplying secured party is barred from recovering a deficiency unless it overcomes a rebuttable presumption that compliance with former Part 5 would have yielded an amount sufficient to satisfy the secured debt. In addition to the nonuniformity resulting from court decisions, some States enacted special rules governing the availability of deficiencies.

5. Burden of Proof When Section 9-615(f) Applies. In a non-consumer transaction, subsection (a)(5) imposes upon a debtor or obligor the burden of proving that the proceeds of a disposition are so low that, under Section 9-615(f), the actual proceeds should not serve as the basis upon which a deficiency or surplus is calculated. Were the burden placed on the secured party, then debtors might be encouraged to challenge the price received in every disposition to the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor.

6. Delay in Applying This Section. There is an inevitable delay between the time a secured party engages in a noncomplying collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance and the time of a subsequent judicial determination that the secured party did not comply with Part 6. During the interim, the secured party, believing that the secured obligation is larger than it ultimately is determined to be, may continue to enforce its security interest in collateral. If some or all of the secured indebtedness ultimately is discharged under this section, a reasonable application of this section would impose liability on the secured party for the amount of any excess, unwarranted recoveries but would not make the enforcement efforts wrongful.

§ 9-627. Determination of Whether Conduct Was Commercially Reasonable.

(a) [Greater amount obtainable under other circumstances; no preclusion of commercial reasonableness.] The fact that a greater amount could have been obtained by a collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance at a different time or in a different method from that selected by the secured party is not of itself sufficient to preclude the secured party from establishing that the collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance was made in a commercially reasonable manner.

(b) [Dispositions that are commercially reasonable.] A disposition of collateral is made in a commercially reasonable manner if the disposition is made:

(1) in the usual manner on any recognized market;

(2) at the price current in any recognized market at the time of the disposition; or

(3) otherwise in conformity with reasonable commercial practices among dealers in the type of property that was the subject of the disposition.

(c) [Approval by court or on behalf of creditors.] A collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance is commercially reasonable if it has been approved:

(1) in a judicial proceeding;

(2) by a bona fide creditors' committee;

(3) by a representative of creditors; or

(4) by an assignee for the benefit of creditors.

(d) [Approval under subsection (c) not necessary; absence of approval has no effect.] Approval under subsection (c) need not be obtained, and lack of approval does not mean that the collection, enforcement, disposition, or acceptance is not commercially reasonable.

1. Source. Former Section 9-507(2).

2. Relationship of Price to Commercial Reasonableness. Some observers have found the notion contained in subsection (a) (derived from former Section 9-507(2)) (the fact that a better price could have been obtained does not establish lack of commercial reasonableness) to be inconsistent with that found in Section 9-610(b) (derived from former Section 9-504(3)) (every aspect of the disposition, including its terms, must be commercially reasonable). There is no such inconsistency. While not itself sufficient to establish a violation of this Part, a low price suggests that a court should scrutinize carefully all aspects of a disposition to ensure that each aspect was commercially reasonable.

The law long has grappled with the problem of dispositions of personal and real property which comply with applicable procedural requirements (e.g., advertising, notification to interested persons, etc.) but which yield a price that seems low. This Article addresses that issue in Section 9-615(f). That section applies only when the transferee is the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor. It contains a special rule for calculating a deficiency or surplus in a complying disposition that yields a price that is "significantly below the range of proceeds that a complying disposition to a person other than the secured party, a person related to the secured party, or a secondary obligor would have brought."

3. Determination of Commercial Reasonableness; Advance Approval. It is important to make clear the conduct and procedures that are commercially reasonable and to provide a secured party with the means of obtaining, by court order or negotiation with a creditors' committee or a representative of creditors, advance approval of a proposed method of enforcement as commercially reasonable. This section contains rules that assist in that determination and provides for advance approval in appropriate situations. However, none of the specific methods of disposition specified in subsection (b) is required or exclusive.

4. "Recognized Market." As in Sections 9-610(c) and 9-611(d), the concept of a "recognized market" in subsections (b)(1) and (2) is quite limited; it applies only to markets in which there are standardized price quotations for property that is essentially fungible, such as stock exchanges.

§ 9-628. Nonliability and Limitation on Liability of Secured Party; Liability of Secondary Obligor.

(a) [Limitation of liability of secured party for noncompliance with article.] Unless a secured party knows that a person is a debtor or obligor, knows the identity of the person, and knows how to communicate with the person:

(1) the secured party is not liable to the person, or to a secured party or lienholder that has filed a financing statement against the person, for failure to comply with this article; and

(2) the secured party's failure to comply with this article does not affect the liability of the person for a deficiency.

(b) [Limitation of liability based on status as secured party.] A secured party is not liable because of its status as secured party:

(1) to a person that is a debtor or obligor, unless the secured party knows:

(A) that the person is a debtor or obligor;

(B) the identity of the person; and

(C) how to communicate with the person; or

(2) to a secured party or lienholder that has filed a financing statement against a person, unless the secured party knows:

(A) that the person is a debtor; and

(B) the identity of the person.

(c) [Limitation of liability if reasonable belief that transaction not a consumer-goods transaction or consumer transaction.] A secured party is not liable to any person, and a person's liability for a deficiency is not affected, because of any act or omission arising out of the secured party's reasonable belief that a transaction is not a consumer-goods transaction or a consumer transaction or that goods are not consumer goods, if the secured party's belief is based on its reasonable reliance on:

(1) a debtor's representation concerning the purpose for which collateral was to be used, acquired, or held; or

(2) an obligor's representation concerning the purpose for which a secured obligation was incurred.

(d) [Limitation of liability for statutory damages.] A secured party is not liable to any person under Section 9-625(c)(2) for its failure to comply with Section 9-616.

(e) [Limitation of multiple liability for statutory damages.] A secured party is not liable under Section 9-625(c)(2) more than once with respect to any one secured obligation.

Official Comment

1. Source. New.

2. Exculpatory Provisions. Subsections (a), (b), and (c) contain exculpatory provisions that should be read in conjunction with Section 9-605. Without this group of provisions, a secured party could incur liability to unknown persons and under circumstances that would not allow the secured party to protect itself. The broadened definition of the term "debtor" underscores the need for these provisions.

If a secured party reasonably, but mistakenly, believes that a consumer transaction or consumer-goods transaction is a non-consumer transaction or non-consumer-goods transaction, and if the secured party's belief is based on its reasonable reliance on a representation of the type specified in subsection (c)(1) or (c)(2), then this Article should be applied as if the facts reasonably believed and the representation reasonably relied upon were true. For example, if a secured party reasonably believed that a transaction was a non-consumer transaction and its belief was based on reasonable reliance on the debtor's representation that the collateral secured an obligation incurred for business purposes, the secured party is not liable to any person, and the debtor's liability for a deficiency is not affected, because of any act or omission of the secured party which arises out of the reasonable belief. Of course, if the secured party's belief is not reasonable or, even if reasonable, is not based on reasonable reliance on the debtor's representation, this limitation on liability is inapplicable.

3. Inapplicability of Statutory Damages to Section 9-616. Subsection (d) excludes noncompliance with Section 9-616 entirely from the scope of statutory damage liability under Section 9-625(c)(2).

4. Single Liability for Statutory Minimum Damages. Subsection (e) ensures that a secured party will incur statutory damages only once in connection with any one secured obligation.

PART 7. TRANSITION

This [Act] takes effect on July 1, 2001.

Official Comment

A uniform law as complex as Article 9 necessarily gives rise to difficult problems and uncertainties during the transition to the new law. As is customary for uniform laws, this Article is based on the general assumption that all States will have enacted substantially identical versions. While always important, uniformity is essential to the success of this Article. If former Article 9 is in effect in some jurisdictions, and this Article is in effect in others, horrendous complications may arise. For example, the proper place in which to file to perfect a security interest (and thus the status of a particular security interest as perfected or unperfected) would depend on whether the matter was litigated in a State in which former Article 9 was in effect or a State in which this Article was in effect. Accordingly, this section contemplates that States will adopt a uniform effective date for this Article. Any one State's failure to adopt the uniform effective date will greatly increase the cost and uncertainty surrounding the transition.

Other problems arise from transactions and relationships that were entered into under former Article 9 or under non-UCC law and which remain outstanding on the effective date of this Article. The difficulties arise primarily because this Article expands the scope of former Article 9 to cover additional types of collateral and transactions and because it provides new methods of perfection for some types of collateral, different priority rules, and different choice-of-law rules governing perfection and priority. This Section and the other sections in this Part address primarily this second set of problems.

§ 9-702. Savings Clause.

(a) [Pre-effective-date transactions or liens.] Except as otherwise provided in this part, this [Act] applies to a transaction or lien within its scope, even if the transaction or lien was entered into or created before this [Act] takes effect.

(b) [Continuing validity.] Except as otherwise provided in subsection (c) and Sections 9-703 through 9-709:

(1) transactions and liens that were not governed by [former Article 9], were validly entered into or created before this [Act] takes effect, and would be subject to this [Act] if they had been entered into or created after this [Act] takes effect, and the rights, duties, and interests flowing from those transactions and liens remain valid after this [Act] takes effect; and

(2) the transactions and liens may be terminated, completed, consummated, and enforced as required or permitted by this [Act] or by the law that otherwise would apply if this [Act] had not taken effect.

(c) [Pre-effective-date proceedings.] This [Act] does not affect an action, case, or proceeding commenced before this [Act] takes effect.

As amended in 2000.

See Appendix P for material relating to changes made in text in 2000.

Official Comment

1. Pre-Effective-Date Transactions. Subsection (a) contains the general rule that this Article applies to transactions, security interests, and other liens within its scope (see Section 9-109), even if the transaction or lien was entered into or created before the effective date. Thus, secured transactions entered into under former Article 9 must be terminated, completed, consummated, and enforced under this Article. Subsection (b) is an exception to the general rule. It applies to valid, pre-effective-date transactions and liens that were not governed by former Article 9 but would be governed by this Article if they had been entered into or created after this Article takes effect. Under subsection (b), these valid transactions, such as the creation of agricultural liens and security interests in commercial tort claims, retain their validity under this Article and may be terminated, completed, consummated, and enforced under this Article. However, these transactions also may be terminated, completed, consummated, and enforced by the law that otherwise would apply had this Article not taken effect.

2. Judicial Proceedings Commenced Before Effective Date. As is usual in transition provisions, subsection (c) provides that this Article does not affect litigation pending on the effective date.

§ 9-703. Security Interest Perfected Before Effective Date.

(a) [Continuing priority over lien creditor: perfection requirements satisfied.] A security interest that is enforceable immediately before this [Act] takes effect and would have priority over the rights of a person that becomes a lien creditor at that time is a perfected security interest under this [Act] if, when this [Act] takes effect, the applicable requirements for enforceability and perfection under this [Act] are satisfied without further action.

(b) [Continuing priority over lien creditor: perfection requirements not satisfied.] Except as otherwise provided in Section 9-705, if, immediately before this [Act] takes effect, a security interest is enforceable and would have priority over the rights of a person that becomes a lien creditor at that time, but the applicable requirements for enforceability or perfection under this [Act] are not satisfied when this [Act] takes effect, the security interest:

(1) is a perfected security interest for one year after this [Act] takes effect;

(2) remains enforceable thereafter only if the security interest becomes enforceable under Section 9-203 before the year expires; and

(3) remains perfected thereafter only if the applicable requirements for perfection under this [Act] are satisfied before the year expires.

Official Comment

1. Perfected Security Interests Under Former Article 9 and This Article. This section deals with security interests that are perfected (i.e., that are enforceable and have priority over the rights of a lien creditor) under former Article 9 or other applicable law immediately before this Article takes effect. Subsection (a) provides, not surprisingly, that if the security interest would be a perfected security interest under this Article (i.e., if the transaction satisfies this Article's requirements for enforceability (attachment) and perfection), no further action need be taken for the security interest to be a perfected security interest.

2. Security Interests Enforceable and Perfected Under Former Article 9 but Unenforceable or Unperfected Under This Article. Subsection (b) deals with security interests that are enforceable and perfected under former Article 9 or other applicable law immediately before this Article takes effect but do not satisfy the requirements for enforceability (attachment) or perfection under this Article. Except as otherwise provided in Section 9-705, these security interests are perfected security interests for one year after the effective date. If the security interest satisfies the requirements for attachment and perfection within that period, the security interest remains perfected thereafter. If the security interest satisfies only the requirements for attachment within that period, the security interest becomes unperfected at the end of the one-year period.

Example 1: A pre-effective-date security agreement in a consumer transaction covers "all securities accounts." The security interest is properly perfected. The collateral description was adequate under former Article 9 (see former Section 9-115(3)) but is insufficient under this Article (see Section 9-108(e)(2)). Unless the debtor authenticates a new security agreement describing the collateral other than by "type" (or Section 9-203(b)(3) otherwise is satisfied) within the one-year period following the effective date, the security interest becomes unenforceable at the end of that period.

Other examples under former Article 9 or other applicable law that may be effective as attachment or enforceability steps but may be ineffective under this Article include an oral agreement to sell a payment intangible or possession by virtue of a notification to a bailee under former Section 9-305. Neither the oral agreement nor the notification would satisfy the revised Section 9-203 requirements for attachment.

Example 2: A pre-effective-date possessory security interest in instruments is perfected by a bailee's receipt of notification under former 9-305. The bailee has not, however, acknowledged that it holds for the secured party's benefit under revised Section 9-313. Unless the bailee authenticates a record acknowledging that it holds for the secured party (or another appropriate perfection step is taken) within the one-year period following the effective date, the security interest becomes unperfected at the end of that period.

3. Interpretation of Pre-Effective-Date Security Agreements. Section 9-102 defines "security agreement" as "an agreement that creates or provides for a security interest." Under Section 1-201(3), an "agreement" is a "bargain of the parties in fact." If parties to a pre-effective-date security agreement describe the collateral by using a term defined in former Article 9 in one way and defined in this Article in another way, in most cases it should be presumed that the bargain of the parties contemplated the meaning of the term under former Article 9.

Example 3: A pre-effective-date security agreement covers "all accounts" of a debtor. As defined under former Article 9, an "account" did not include a right to payment for lottery winnings. These rights to payment are "accounts" under this Article, however. The agreement of the parties presumptively created a security interest in "accounts" as defined in former Article 9. A different result might be appropriate, for example, if the security agreement explicitly contemplated future changes in the Article 9 definitions of types of collateral—e.g., " 'Accounts' means 'accounts' as defined in the UCC Article 9 of [State X], as that definition may be amended from time to time." Whether a different approach is appropriate in any given case depends on the bargain of the parties, as determined by applying ordinary principles of contract construction.

§ 9-704. Security Interest Unperfected Before Effective Date.

A security interest that is enforceable immediately before this [Act] takes effect but which would be subordinate to the rights of a person that becomes a lien creditor at that time:

(1) remains an enforceable security interest for one year after this [Act] takes effect;

(2) remains enforceable thereafter if the security interest becomes enforceable under Section 9-203 when this [Act] takes effect or within one year thereafter; and

(3) becomes perfected:

(A) without further action, when this [Act] takes effect if the applicable requirements for perfection under this [Act] are satisfied before or at that time; or

(B) when the applicable requirements for perfection are satisfied if the requirements are satisfied after that time.

Official Comment

This section deals with security interests that are enforceable but unperfected (i.e., subordinate to the rights of a person who becomes a lien creditor) under former Article 9 or other applicable law immediately before this Article takes effect. These security interests remain enforceable for one year after the effective date, and thereafter if the appropriate steps for attachment under this Article are taken before the one-year period expires. (This section's treatment of enforceability is the same as that of Section 9-703.) The security interest becomes a perfected security interest on the effective date if, at that time, the security interest satisfies the requirements for perfection under this Article. If the security interest does not satisfy the requirements for perfection until sometime thereafter, it becomes a perfected security interest at that later time.

Example: A security interest has attached under former Article 9 but is unperfected because the filed financing statement covers "all of debtor's personal property" and controlling case law in the applicable jurisdiction has determined that this identification of collateral in a financing statement is insufficient. Upon the effective date of this Article, the financing statement becomes sufficient under Section 9-504(2). On that date the security interest becomes perfected. (This assumes, of course, that the financing statement is filed in the proper filing office under this Article.)

§ 9-705. Effectiveness of Action Taken Before Effective Date.

(a) [Pre-effective-date action; one-year perfection period unless reperfected.] If action, other than the filing of a financing statement, is taken before this [Act] takes effect and the action would have resulted in priority of a security interest over the rights of a person that becomes a lien creditor had the security interest become enforceable before this [Act] takes effect, the action is effective to perfect a security interest that attaches under this [Act] within one year after this [Act] takes effect. An attached security interest becomes unperfected one year after this [Act] takes effect unless the security interest becomes a perfected security interest under this [Act] before the expiration of that period.

(b) [Pre-effective-date filing.] The filing of a financing statement before this [Act] takes effect is effective to perfect a security interest to the extent the filing would satisfy the applicable requirements for perfection under this [Act].

(c) [Pre-effective-date filing in jurisdiction formerly governing perfection.] This [Act] does not render ineffective an effective financing statement that, before this [Act] takes effect, is filed and satisfies the applicable requirements for perfection under the law of the jurisdiction governing perfection as provided in [former Section 9-103]. However, except as otherwise provided in subsections (d) and (e) and Section 9-706, the financing statement ceases to be effective at the earlier of:

(1) the time the financing statement would have ceased to be effective under the law of the jurisdiction in which it is filed; or

(2) June 30, 2006.

(d) [Continuation statement.] The filing of a continuation statement after this [Act] takes effect does not continue the effectiveness of the financing statement filed before this [Act] takes effect. However, upon the timely filing of a continuation statement after this [Act] takes effect and in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction governing perfection as provided in Part 3, the effectiveness of a financing statement filed in the same office in that jurisdiction before this [Act] takes effect continues for the period provided by the law of that jurisdiction.

(e) [Application of subsection (c)(2) to transmitting utility financing statement.] Subsection (c)(2) applies to a financing statement that, before this [Act] takes effect, is filed against a transmitting utility and satisfies the applicable requirements for perfection under the law of the jurisdiction governing perfection as provided in [former Section 9-103] only to the extent that Part 3 provides that the law of a jurisdiction other than the jurisdiction in which the financing statement is filed governs perfection of a security interest in collateral covered by the financing statement.

(f) [Application of Part 5.] A financing statement that includes a financing statement filed before this [Act] takes effect and a continuation statement filed after this [Act] takes effect is effective only to the extent that it satisfies the requirements of Part 5 for an initial financing statement.

Official Comment

1. General. This section addresses primarily the situation in which the perfection step is taken under former Article 9 or other applicable law before the effective date of this Article, but the security interest does not attach until after that date.

2. Perfection Other Than by Filing. Subsection (a) applies when the perfection step is a step other than the filing of a financing statement. If the step that would be a valid perfection step under former Article 9 or other law is taken before this Article takes effect, and if a security interest attaches within one year after this Article takes effect, then the security interest becomes a perfected security interest upon attachment. However, the security interest becomes unperfected one year after the effective date unless the requirements for attachment and perfection under this Article are satisfied within that period.

3. Perfection by Filing: Ineffective Filings Made Effective. Subsection (b) deals with financing statements that were filed under former Article 9 and which would not have perfected a security interest under the former Article (because, e.g., they did not accurately describe the collateral or were filed in the wrong place), but which would perfect a security interest under this Article. Under subsection (b), such a financing statement is effective to perfect a security interest to the extent it complies with this Article. Subsection (b) applies regardless of the reason for the filing. For example, a secured party need not wait until the effective date to respond to the change this Article makes with respect to the jurisdiction whose law governs perfection of certain security interests. Rather, a secured party may wish to prepare for this change by filing a financing statement before the effective date in the jurisdiction whose law governs perfection under this Article. When this Article takes effect, the filing becomes effective to perfect a security interest (assuming the filing satisfies the perfection requirements of this Article). Note, however, that Section 9-706 determines whether a financing statement filed before the effective date operates to continue the effectiveness of a financing statement filed in another office before the effective date.

4. Perfection by Filing: Change in Applicable Law or Filing Office. Subsection (c) provides that a financing statement filed in the proper jurisdiction under former Section 9-103 remains effective for all purposes, despite the fact that this Article would require filing of a financing statement in a different jurisdiction or in a different office in the same jurisdiction. This means that, during the early years of this Article's effectiveness, it may be necessary to search not only in the filing office of the jurisdiction whose law governs perfection under this Article but also (if different) in the jurisdiction(s) and filing office(s) designated by Article 9. To limit this burden, subsection (c) provides that a financing statement filed in the jurisdiction determined by former Section 9-103 becomes ineffective at the earlier of the time it would become ineffective under the law of that jurisdiction or June 30, 2006. The June 30, 2006, limitation addresses some nonuniform versions of former Article 9 that extended the effectiveness of a financing statement beyond five years. Note that a financing statement filed before the effective date may remain effective beyond June 30, 2006, if subsection (d) (concerning continuation statements) or (e) (concerning transmitting utilities) or Section 9-706 (concerning initial financing statements that operate to continue pre-effective-date financing statements) so provides.

Subsection (c) is an exception to Section 9-703(b). Under the general rule in Section 9-703(b), a security interest that is enforceable and perfected on the effective date of this Article is a perfected security interest for one year after this Article takes effect, even if the security interest is not enforceable under this Article and the applicable requirements for perfection under this Article have not been met. However, in some cases subsection (c) may shorten the one-year period of perfection; in others, if the security interest is enforceable under Section 9-203, it may extend the period of perfection.

Example 1: On July 3, 1996, D, a State X corporation, creates a security interest in certain manufacturing equipment located in State Y. On July 6, 1996, SP perfects a security interest in the equipment under former Article 9 by filing in the office of the State Y Secretary of State. See former Section 9-103(1)(b). This Article takes effect in States X and Y on July 1, 2001. Under Section 9-705(c), the financing statement remains effective until it lapses in July 2001. See former Section 9-403. Had SP continued the effectiveness of the financing statement by filing a continuation statement in State Y under former Article 9 before July 1, 2001, the financing statement would have remained effective to perfect the security interest through June 30, 2006. See subsection (c)(2). Alternatively, SP could have filed an initial financing statement in State X under subsection (b) or Section 9-706 before the State Y financing statement lapsed. Had SP done so, the security interest would have remained perfected without interruption until the State X financing statement lapsed.

5. Continuing Effectiveness of Filed Financing Statement. A financing statement filed before the effective date of this Article may be continued only by filing in the State and office designated by this Article. This result is accomplished in the following manner: Subsection (d) indicates that, as a general matter, a continuation statement filed after the effective date of this Article does not continue the effectiveness of a financing statement filed under the law designated by former Section 9-103. Instead, an initial financing statement must be filed under Section 9-706. The second sentence of subsection (d) contains an exception to the general rule. It provides that a continuation statement is effective to continue the effectiveness of a financing statement filed before this Article takes effect if this Article prescribes not only the same jurisdiction but also the same filing office.

Example 2: On November 8, 2000, D, a State X corporation, creates a security interest in certain manufacturing equipment located in State Y. On November 15, 2000, SP perfects a security interest in the equipment under former Article 9 by filing in office of the State Y Secretary of State. See former Section 9-103(1)(b). This Article takes effect in States X and Y on July 1, 2001. Under Section 9-705(c), the financing statement ceases to be effective in November, 2005, when it lapses. See Section 9-515. Under this Article, the law of D's location (State X, see Section 9-307) governs perfection. See Section 9-301. Thus, the filing of a continuation statement in State Y after the effective date would not continue the effectiveness of the financing statement. See subsection (d). However, the effectiveness of the financing statement could be continued under Section 9-706.

Example 3: The facts are as in Example 2, except that D is a State Y corporation. Assume State Y adopted former Section 9-401(1) (second alternative). State Y law governs perfection under Part 3 of this Article. (See Sections 9-301, 9-307.) Under the second sentence of subsection (d), the timely filing of a continuation statement in accordance with the law of State Y continues the effectiveness of the financing statement.

Example 4: The facts are as in Example 3, except that the collateral is equipment used in farming operations and, in accordance with former Section 9-401(1) (second alternative) as enacted in State Y, the financing statement was filed in State Y, in the office of the Shelby County Recorder of Deeds. Under this Article, a continuation statement must be filed in the office of the State Y Secretary of State. See Section 9-501(a)(2). Under the second sentence of subsection (d), the timely filing of a continuation statement in accordance with the law of State Y operates to continue a pre-effective-date financing statement only if the continuation statement is filed in the same office as the financing statement. Accordingly, the continuation statement is not effective in this case, but the financing statement may be continued under Section 9-706.

Example 5: The facts are as in Example 3, except that State Y enacted former Section 9-401(1) (third alternative). As required by former Section 9-401(1), SP filed financing statements in both the office of the State Y Secretary of State and the office of the Shelby County Recorder of Deeds. Under this Article, a continuation statement must be filed in the office of the State Y Secretary of State. See Section 9-501(a)(2). The timely filing of a continuation statement in that office after this Article takes effect would be effective to continue the effectiveness of the financing statement (and thus continue the perfection of the security interest), even if the financing statement filed with the County Recorder lapses.

6. Continuation Statements. In some cases, this Article reclassifies collateral covered by a financing statement filed under former Article 9. For example, collateral consisting of the right to payment for real property sold would be a "general intangible" under the former Article but an "account" under this Article. To continue perfection under those circumstances, a continuation statement must comply with the normal requirements for a continuation statement. See Section 9-515. In addition, the pre-effective-date financing statement and continuation statement, taken together, must satisfy the requirements of this Article concerning the sufficiency of the debtor's name, secured party's name, and indication of collateral. See subsection (f).

Example 6: A pre-effective-date financing statement covers "all general intangibles" of a debtor. As defined under former Article 9, a "general intangible," would include rights to payment for lottery winnings. These rights to payment are "accounts" under this Article, however. A post-effective-date continuation statement will not continue the effectiveness of the pre-effective-date financing statement with respect to lottery winnings unless it amends the indication of collateral covered to include lottery winnings (e.g., by adding "accounts," "rights to payment for lottery winnings," or the like). If the continuation statement does not amend the indication of collateral, the continuation statement will be effective to continue the effectiveness of the financing statement only with respect to "general intangibles" as defined in this Article.

Example 7: The facts are as in Example 6, except that the pre-effective-date financing statement covers "all accounts and general intangibles." Even though rights to payment for lottery winnings are "general intangibles" under former Article 9 and "accounts" under this Article, a post-effective-date continuation statement would continue the effectiveness of the pre-effective-date financing statement with respect to lottery winnings. There would be no need to amend the indication of collateral covered, inasmuch as the indication ("accounts") satisfies the requirements of this Article.

§ 9-706. When Initial Financing Statement Suffices to Continue Effectiveness of Financing Statement.

(a) [Initial financing statement in lieu of continuation statement.] The filing of an initial financing statement in the office specified in Section 9-501 continues the effectiveness of a financing statement filed before this [Act] takes effect if:

(1) the filing of an initial financing statement in that office would be effective to perfect a security interest under this [Act];

(2) the pre-effective-date financing statement was filed in an office in another State or another office in this State; and

(3) the initial financing statement satisfies subsection (c).

(b) [Period of continued effectiveness.] The filing of an initial financing statement under subsection (a) continues the effectiveness of the pre-effective-date financing statement:

(1) if the initial financing statement is filed before this [Act] takes effect, for the period provided in [former Section 9-403] with respect to a financing statement; and

(2) if the initial financing statement is filed after this [Act] takes effect, for the period provided in Section 9-515 with respect to an initial financing statement.

(c) [Requirements for initial financing statement under subsection (a).] To be effective for purposes of subsection (a), an initial financing statement must:

(1) satisfy the requirements of Part 5 for an initial financing statement;

(2) identify the pre-effective-date financing statement by indicating the office in which the financing statement was filed and providing the dates of filing and file numbers, if any, of the financing statement and of the most recent continuation statement filed with respect to the financing statement; and

(3) indicate that the pre-effective-date financing statement remains effective.

Official Comment

1. Continuation of Financing Statements Not Filed in Proper Filing Office Under This Article. This section deals with continuing the effectiveness of financing statements that are filed in the proper State and office under former Article 9, but which would be filed in the wrong State or in the wrong office of the proper State under this Article. Section 9-705(d) provides that, under these circumstances, filing a continuation statement after the effective date of this Article in the office designated by former Article 9 would not be effective. This section provides the means by which the effectiveness of such a financing statement can be continued if this Article governs perfection under the applicable choice-of-law rule: filing an initial financing statement in the office specified by Section 9-501.

Although it has the effect of continuing the effectiveness of a pre-effective-date financing statement, an initial financing statement described in this section is not a continuation statement. Rather, it is governed by the rules applicable to initial financing statements. (However, the debtor need not authorize the filing. See Section 9-708.) Unlike a continuation statement, the initial financing statement described in this section may be filed any time during the effectiveness of the pre-effective-date financing statement—even before this Article is enacted—and not only within the six months immediately prior to lapse. In contrast to a continuation statement, which extends the lapse date of a filed financing statement for five years, the initial financing statement has its own lapse date, which bears no relation to the lapse date of the pre-effective-date financing statement whose effectiveness the initial financing statement continues. See subsection (b).

As subsection (a) makes clear, the filing of an initial financing statement under this section continues the effectiveness of a pre-effective-date financing statement. If the effectiveness of a pre-effective-date financing statement lapses before the initial financing statement is filed, the effectiveness of the pre-effective-date financing statement cannot be continued. Rather, unless the security interest is perfected otherwise, there will be a period during which the security interest is unperfected before becoming perfected again by the filing of the initial financing statement under this section.

If an initial financing statement is filed under this section before the effective date of this Article, it takes effect when this Article takes effect (assuming that it is ineffective under former Article 9). Note, however, that former Article 9 determines whether the filing office is obligated to accept such an initial financing statement. For the reason given in the preceding paragraph, an initial financing statement filed before the effective date of this Article does not continue the effectiveness of a pre-effective-date financing statement unless the latter remains effective on the effective date of this Article. Thus, for example, if the effectiveness of the pre-effective-date financing statement lapses before this Article takes effect, the initial financing statement would not continue its effectiveness.

2. Requirements of Initial Financing Statement Filed in Lieu of Continuation Statement. Subsection (c) sets forth the requirements for the initial financing statement under subsection (a). These requirements are needed to inform searchers that the initial financing statement operates to continue a financing statement filed elsewhere and to enable searchers to locate and discover the attributes of the other financing statement. A single initial financing statement may continue the effectiveness of more than one financing statement filed before this Article's effective date. See Section 1-102(5)(a) (words in the singular include the plural). If a financing statement has been filed in more than one office in a given jurisdiction, as may be the case if the jurisdiction had adopted former Section 9-401(1), third alternative, then an identification of the filing in the central filing office suffices for purposes of subsection (c)(2). If under this Article the collateral is of a type different from its type under former Article 9—as would be the case, e.g., with a right to payment of lottery winnings (a "general intangible" under former Article 9 and an "account" under this Article), then subsection (c) requires that the initial financing statement indicate the type under this Article.

§ 9-707. Amendment of Pre-Effective-Date Financing Statement.

(a) ["Pre-effective-date financing statement".] In this section, "Pre-effective-date financing statement" means a financing statement filed before this [Act] takes effect.

(b) [Applicable law.] After this [Act] takes effect, a person may add or delete collateral covered by, continue or terminate the effectiveness of, or otherwise amend the information provided in, a pre-effective-date financing statement only in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction governing perfection as provided in Part 3. However, the effectiveness of a pre-effective-date financing statement also may be terminated in accordance with the law of the ¸jurisdiction in which the financing statement is filed.

(c) [Method of amending: general rule.] Except as otherwise provided in subsection (d), if the law of this State governs perfection of a security interest, the information in a pre-effective-date financing statement may be amended after this [Act] takes effect only if:

(1) the pre-effective-date financing statement and an amendment are filed in the office specified in Section 9-501;

(2) an amendment is filed in the office specified in Section 9-501 concurrently with, or after the filing in that office of, an initial financing statement that satisfies Section 9-706(c); or

(3) an initial financing statement that provides the information as amended and satisfies Section 9-706(c) is filed in the office specified in Section 9-501.

(d) [Method of amending: continuation.] If the law of this State governs perfection of a security interest, the effectiveness of a pre-effective-date financing statement may be continued only under Section 9-705(d) and (f) or 9-706.

(e) [Method of amending: additional termination rule.] Whether or not the law of this State governs perfection of a security interest, the effectiveness of a pre-effective-date financing statement filed in this State may be terminated after this [Act] takes effect by filing a termination statement in the office in which the pre-effective-date financing statement is filed, unless an initial financing statement that satisfies Section 9-706(c) has been filed in the office specified by the law of the jurisdiction governing perfection as provided in Part 3 as the office in which to file a financing statement.

As added in 2000.

See Appendix P for material relating to adoption of section in 2000.

Official Comment

1. Scope of This Section. This section addresses post-effective-date amendments to pre-effective-date financing statements.

2. Applicable Law. Determining how to amend a pre-effective-date financing statement requires one first to determine the jurisdiction whose law applies. Subsection (b) provides that, as a general matter, post-effective-date amendments to pre-effective-date financing statements are effective only if they are accomplished in accordance with the substantive (or local) law of the jurisdiction governing perfection under Part 3 of this Article. However, under certain circumstances, the effectiveness of a financing statement may be terminated in accordance with the substantive law of the jurisdiction in which the financing statement is filed. See Comment 5, below.

Example 1: D is a corporation organized under the law of State Y. It owns equipment located in State X. Under former Article 9, SP properly perfected a security interest in the equipment by filing a financing statement in State X. Under this Article, the law of State Y governs perfection of the security interest. See Sections 9-301, 9-307. After this Article takes effect, SP wishes to amend the financing statement to reflect a change in D's name. Under subsection (b), the financing statement may be amended in accordance with the law of State Y, i.e., in accordance with subsection (c) as enacted in State Y.

Example 2: The facts are as in Example 1, except that SP wishes to terminate the effectiveness of the State X filing. The first sentence of subsection (b) provides that the financing statement may be terminated after the effective date of this Article in accordance with the law of State Y, i.e., in accordance with subsection (c) as enacted in State Y. However, the second sentence provides that the financing statement also may be terminated in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction in which it is filed, i.e., in accordance with subsection (e) as enacted in State X. If the pre-effective-date financing statement is filed in the jurisdiction whose law governs perfection (here, State Y), then both sentences would designate the law of State Y as applicable to the termination of the financing statement. That is, the financing statement could be terminated in accordance with subsection (c) or (e) as enacted in State Y.

3. Method of Amending. Subsection (c) provides three methods of effectuating a post-effective-date amendment to a pre-effective-date financing statement. Under subsection (c)(1), if the financing statement is filed in the jurisdiction and office determined by this Article, then an effective amendment may be filed in the same office.

Example 3: D is a corporation organized under the law of State Z. It owns equipment located in State Z. Before the effective date of this Article, SP perfected a security interest in the equipment by filing in two offices in State Z, a local filing office and the office of the Secretary of State. See former Section 9-401(1) (third alternative). State Z enacts this Article and specifies in Section 9-501 that a financing statement covering equipment is to be filed in the office of the Secretary of State. SP wishes to assign its power as secured party of record. Under subsection (b), the substantive law of State Z applies. Because the pre-effective-date financing statement is filed in the office specified in subsection (c)(1) as enacted by State Z, SP may effectuate the assignment by filing an amendment under Section 9-514 with the office of the Secretary of State. SP need not amend the local filing, and the priority of the security interest perfected by the filing of the financing statement would not be affected by the failure to amend the local filing.

If a pre-effective-date financing statement is filed in an office other than the one specified by Section 9-501 of the relevant jurisdiction, then ordinarily an amendment filed in that office is ineffective. (Subsection (e) provides an exception for termination statements.) Rather, the amendment must be effectuated by a filing in the jurisdiction and office determined by this Article. That filing may consist of an initial financing statement followed by an amendment, an initial financing statement together with an amendment, or an initial financing statement that indicates the information provided in the financing statement, as amended. Subsection (c)(2) encompasses the first two options; subsection (c)(3) contemplates the last. In each instance, the initial financing statement must satisfy Section 9-706(c).

4. Continuation. Subsection (d) refers to the two methods by which a secured party may continue the effectiveness of a pre-effective-date financing statement under this Part. The Comments to Sections 9-705 and 9-706 explain these methods.

5. Termination. The effectiveness of a pre-effective-date financing statement may be terminated pursuant to subsection (c). This section also provides an alternative method for accomplishing this result: filing a termination statement in the office in which the financing statement is filed. The alternative method becomes unavailable once an initial financing statement that relates to the pre-effective-date financing statement and satisfies Section 9-706(c) is filed in the jurisdiction and office determined by this Article.

Example 4: The facts are as in Example 1, except that SP wishes to terminate a financing statement filed in State X. As explained in Example 1, the financing statement may be amended in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction governing perfection under this Article, i.e., in accordance with the substantive law of State Y. As enacted in State Y, subsection (c)(1) is inapplicable because the financing statement was not filed in the State Y filing office specified in Section 9-501. Under subsection (c)(2), the financing statement may be amended by filing in the State Y filing office an initial financing statement followed by a termination statement. The filing of an initial financing statement together with a termination statement also would be legally sufficient under subsection (c)(2), but Section 9-512(a)(1) may render this method impractical. The financing statement also may be amended under subsection (c)(3), but the resulting initial financing statement is likely to be very confusing. In each instance, the initial financing statement must satisfy Section 9-706(c). Applying the law of State Y, subsection (e) is inapplicable, because the financing statement was not filed in "this State," i.e., State Y.

This section affords another option to SP. Subsection (b) provides that the effectiveness of a financing statement may be terminated either in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction governing perfection (here, State Y) or in accordance with the substantive law of the jurisdiction in which the financing statement is filed (here, State X). Applying the law of State X, the financing statement is filed in "this State," i.e., State X, and subsection (e) applies. Accordingly, the effectiveness of the financing statement can be terminated by filing a termination statement in the State X office in which the financing statement is filed, unless an initial financing statement that relates to the financing statement and satisfies Section 9-706(c) as enacted in State X has been filed in the jurisdiction and office determined by this Article (here, the State Y filing office).

As amended in 2000.

See Appendix P for material relating to changes made in Official Comment in 2000.

§ 9-708. Persons Entitled to File Initial Financing Statement or Continuation Statement.

A person may file an initial financing statement or a continuation statement under this part if:

(1) the secured party of record authorizes the filing; and

(2) the filing is necessary under this part:

(A) to continue the effectiveness of a financing statement filed before this [Act] takes effect; or

(B) to perfect or continue the perfection of a security interest.

As amended in 2000.

See Appendix P for material relating to changes made in 2000.

Official Comment

This section permits a secured party to file an initial financing statement or continuation statement necessary under this Part to continue the effectiveness of a financing statement filed before this Article takes effect or to perfect or otherwise continue the perfection of a security interest. Because a filing described in this section typically operates to continue the effectiveness of a financing statement whose filing the debtor already has authorized, this section does not require authorization from the debtor.

§ 9-709. Priority.

(a) [Law governing priority.] This [Act] determines the priority of conflicting claims to collateral. However, if the relative priorities of the claims were established before this [Act] takes effect, [former Article 9] determines priority.

(b) [Priority if security interest becomes enforceable under Section 9-203.] For purposes of Section 9-322(a), the priority of a security interest that becomes enforceable under Section 9-203 of this [Act] dates from the time this [Act] takes effect if the security interest is perfected under this [Act] by the filing of a financing statement before this [Act] takes effect which would not have been effective to perfect the security interest under [former Article 9]. This subsection does not apply to conflicting security interests each of which is perfected by the filing of such a financing statement.

As amended in 2000.

See Appendix P for material relating to changes made in 2000.

Official Comment

1. Law Governing Priority. Ordinarily, this Article determines the priority of conflicting claims to collateral. However, when the relative priorities of the claims were established before this Article takes effect, former Article 9 governs.

Example 1: In 1999, SP-1 obtains a security interest in a right to payment for goods sold ("account"). SP-1 fails to file a financing statement. This Article takes effect on July 1, 2001. Thereafter, on August 1, 2001, D creates a security interest in the same account in favor of SP-2, who files a financing statement. This Article determines the relative priorities of the claims. SP-2's security interest has priority under Section 9-322(a)(1).

Example 2: In 1999, SP-1 obtains a security interest in a right to payment for goods sold ("account"). SP-1 fails to file a financing statement. In 2000, D creates a security interest in the same account in favor of SP-2, who likewise fails to file a financing statement. This Article takes effect on July 1, 2001. Because the relative priorities of the security interests were established before the effective date of this Article, former Article 9 governs priority, and SP-1's security interest has priority under former Section 9-312(5)(b).

Example 3: The facts are as in Example 2, except that, on August 1, 2001, SP-2 files a proper financing statement under this Article. Until August 1, 2001, the relative priorities of the security interests were established before the effective date of this Article, as in Example 2. However, by taking the affirmative step of filing a financing statement, SP-2 established anew the relative priority of the conflicting claims after the effective date. Thus, this Article determines priority. SP-2's security interest has priority under Section 9-322(a)(1).

As Example 3 illustrates, relative priorities that are "established" before the effective date do not necessarily remain unchanged following the effective date. Of course, unlike priority contests among unperfected security interests, some priorities are established permanently, e.g., the rights of a buyer of property who took free of a security interest under former Article 9.

One consequence of the rule in subsection (a) is that the mere taking effect of this Article does not of itself adversely affect the priority of conflicting claims to collateral.

Example 4: In 1999, SP-1 obtains a security interest in a right to payment for lottery winnings (a "general intangible" as defined in former Article 9 but an "account" as defined in this Article). SP-1's security interest is unperfected because its filed financing statement covers only "accounts." In 2000, D creates a security interest in the same right to payment in favor of SP-2, who files a financing statement covering "accounts and general intangibles." Before this Article takes effect on July 1, 2001, SP-2's perfected security interest has priority over SP-1's unperfected security interest under former 9-312(5). Because the relative priorities of the security interests were established before the effective date of this Article, former Article 9 continues to govern priority after this Article takes effect. Thus, SP-2's priority is not adversely affected by this Article's having taken effect.

Note that were this Article to govern priority, SP-2 would become subordinated to SP-1 under Section 9-322(a)(1), even though nothing changes other than this Article's having taken effect. Under Section 9-704, SP-1's security interest would become perfected; the financing statement covering "accounts" adequately covers the lottery winnings and complies with the other perfection requirements of this Article, e.g., it is filed in the proper office.

Example 5: In 1999, SP-1 obtains a security interest in a right to payment for lottery winnings—a "general intangible" (as defined under former Article 9). SP-1's security interest is unperfected because its filed financing statement covers only "accounts." In 2000, D creates a security interest in the same right to payment in favor of SP-2, who makes the same mistake and also files a financing statement covering only "accounts." Before this Article takes effect on July 1, 2001, SP-1's unperfected security interest has priority over SP-2's unperfected security interest, because SP-1's security interest was the first to attach. See former Section 9-312(5)(b). Because the relative priorities of the security interests were established before the effective date of this Article, former Article 9 continues to govern priority after this Article takes effect. Although Section 9-704 makes both security interests perfected for purposes of this Article, both are unperfected under former Article 9, which determines their relative priorities.

2. Financing Statements Ineffective Under Former Article 9 but Effective Under This Article. If this Article determines priority, subsection (b) may apply. It deals with the case in which a filing that occurs before the effective date of this Article would be ineffective to perfect a security interest under former Article 9 but effective under this Article. For purposes of Section 9-322(a), the priority of a security interest that attaches after this Article takes effect and is perfected in this manner dates from the time this Article takes effect.

Example 6: In 1999, SP-1 obtains a security interest in D's existing and after-acquired instruments and files a financing statement covering "instruments." In 2000, D grants a security interest in its existing and after-acquired accounts in favor of SP-2, who files a financing statement covering "accounts." After this Article takes effect on July 1, 2001, one of D's account debtors gives D a negotiable note to evidence its obligation to pay an overdue account. Under the first-to-file-or-perfect rule in Section 9-322(a), SP-1 would have priority in the instrument, which constitutes SP-2's proceeds. SP-1's filing in 1999 was earlier than SP-2's in 2000. However, subsection (b) provides that, for purposes of Section 9-322(a), SP-1's priority dates from the time this Article takes effect (July 1, 2001). Under Section 9-322(b), SP-2's priority with respect to the proceeds (instrument) dates from its filing as to the original collateral (accounts). Accordingly, SP-2's security interest would be senior.

Subsection (b) does not apply to conflicting security interests each of which is perfected by a pre-effective-date filing that was not effective under former Article 9 but is effective under this Article.

Example 7: In 1999, SP-1 obtains a security interest in D's existing and after-acquired instruments and files a financing statement covering "instruments." In 2000, D grants a security interest in its existing and after-acquired instruments in favor of SP-2, who files a financing statement covering "instruments." After this Article takes effect on July 1, 2001, one of D's account debtors gives D a negotiable note to evidence its obligation to pay an overdue account. Under the first-to-file-or-perfect rule in Section 9-322(a), SP-1 would have priority in the instrument. Both filings are effective under this Article, see Section 9-705(b), and SP-1's filing in 1999 was earlier than SP-2's in 2000. Subsection (b) does not change this result.

(9) "Buyer in ordinary course of business" means a person ~~who~~ that buys goods in good faith*,* ~~and~~ without knowledge that the sale ~~to him is in violation of~~ violates the ~~ownership~~ rights ~~or security interest~~ of ~~a third party~~ another person in the goods*, and* ~~buys~~ in the ordinary course from a person*, other than a pawnbroker,* in the business of selling goods of that kind ~~but does not include a pawnbroker~~. ~~All persons who sell minerals or the like (including oil and gas) at wellhead or minehead shall be deemed to be persons~~ A person buys goods in the ordinary course if the sale to the person comports with the usual or customary practices in the kind of business in which the seller is engaged or with the seller's own usual or customary practices. A person that sells oil, gas, or other minerals at the wellhead or minehead is a person in the business of selling goods of that kind. ~~"Buying"~~ A buyer in ordinary course of business may ~~be~~ buy for cash*,* ~~or~~ by exchange of other property*,* or on secured or unsecured credit*,* and ~~includes receiving~~ may acquire goods or documents of title under a pre-existing contract for sale ~~but does not include a transfer in bulk or as security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a money debt~~. Only a buyer that takes possession of the goods or has a right to recover the goods from the seller under Article 2 may be a buyer in ordinary course of business. A person that acquires goods in a transfer in bulk or as security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a money debt is not a buyer in ordinary course of business.

(32) "Purchase" includes taking by sale, discount, negotiation, mortgage, pledge, lien, security interest, issue or re-issue, gift, or any other voluntary transaction creating an interest in property.

(37) "Security interest" means an interest in personal property or fixtures which secures payment or performance of an obligation. ~~The retention or reservation of title by a seller of goods notwithstanding shipment or delivery to the buyer (Section 2-401) is limited in effect to a reservation of a "security interest".~~ The term also includes any interest of a consignor and a buyer of accounts*,* ~~or~~ chattel paper, ~~which~~ a payment intangible, or a promissory note in a transaction that is subject to Article 9. The special property interest of a buyer of goods on identification of those goods to a contract for sale under Section 2-40 is not a "security interest", but a buyer may also acquire a "security interest" by complying with Article 9. ~~Unless a consignment is intended as security, reservation of title thereunder is not a "security interest", but a consignment in any event is subject to the provisions on consignment sales (Section 2-326).~~ Except as otherwise provided in Section 2-505, the right of a seller or lessor of goods under Article 2 or 2A to retain or acquire possession of the goods is not a "security interest", but a seller or lessor may also acquire a "security interest" by complying with Article 9. The retention or reservation of title by a seller of goods notwithstanding shipment or delivery to the buyer (Section 2-401) is limited in effect to areservation of a "security interest".

9. "Buyer in Ordinary Course of Business." From Section 1, Uniform Trust Receipts Act. The definition has been expanded to make clear the type of person protected. Its major significance lies in Section 2-403 and in the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9).

~~The reference to minerals and the like makes clear that a buyer in ordinary course buying minerals under the circumstances described takes free of a prior mortgage created by the sellers. See Comment to Section 9-103.~~

~~A pawnbroker cannot be a buyer in ordinary course of business because the person from whom he buys goods (or acquires ownership after foreclosing an initial pledge) is typically an ordinary user and not a person engaged in selling goods of that kind.~~

The first sentence of paragraph (9) makes clear that a buyer from a pawnbroker cannot be a buyer in ordinary course of business. The second sentence tracks Section 6-102(1)(m). It explains what it means to buy "in the ordinary course." The penultimate sentence prevents a buyer that does not have the right to possession as against the seller from being a buyer in ordinary course of business. Concerning when a buyer obtains possessory rights, see Sections 2-502 and 2-716. However, the penultimate sentence is not intended to affect a buyer's status as a buyer in ordinary course of business in cases (such as a "drop shipment") involving delivery by the seller to a person buying from the buyer or a donee from the buyer. The requirement relates to whether as against the seller the buyer or one taking through the buyer has possessory rights.

37. "Security Interest." See Section 1, Uniform Trust Receipts Act. ~~The present definition is elaborated, in view especially of the complete coverage of the subject in Article 9. Notice that in view of the Article the term includes the interest of certain outright buyers of certain kinds of property. Section 1-201(37) is being amended at the same time that the Article on Leases (Article 2A) is being promulgated as an amendment to this Act.~~ The definition of "security interest" was revised in connection with the promulgation of Article 2A and also to take account of the expanded scope of Article 9 as revised in the 1998 Official Text. It includes the interest of a consignor and the interest of a buyer of accounts, chattel paper, payment intangibles, or promissory notes. See Section 9-109. It also makes clear that, with certain exceptions, in rem rights of sellers and lessors under Articles 2 and 2A are not "security interests." Among the rights that are not security interests are the right to withhold delivery under Section 2-702(1), 2-703(a), or 2A-525, the right to stop delivery under Section 2-705 or 2A-526, and the right to reclaim under Section 2-507(2) or 2-702(2).

§ 2-210. Delegation of Performance; Assignment of Rights.

(2) ~~Unless~~ Except as otherwise provided in Section 9-406, unless otherwise agreed*,* all rights of either seller or buyer can be assigned except where the assignment would materially change the duty of the other party, or increase materially the burden or risk imposed on him by his contract, or impair materially his chance of obtaining return performance. A right to damages for breach of the whole contract or a right arising out of the assignor's due performance of his entire obligation can be assigned despite agreement otherwise.

(3) The creation, attachment, perfection, or enforcement of a security interest in the seller's interest under a contract is not a transfer that materially changes the duty of or increases materially the burden or risk imposed on the buyer or impairs materially the buyer's chance of obtaining return performance within the purview of subsection (2) unless, and then only to the extent that, enforcement actually results in a delegation of material performance of the seller. Even in that event, the creation, attachment, perfection, and enforcement of the security interest remain effective, but (i) the seller is liable to the buyer for damages caused by the delegation to the extent that the damages could not reasonably be prevented by the buyer, and (ii) a court having jurisdiction may grant other appropriate relief, including cancellation of the contract for sale or an injunction against enforcement of the security interest or consummation of the enforcement.

Official Comment

3. Under subsection (2) rights which are no longer executory such as a right to damages for breach ~~or a right to payment of an "account" as defined in the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9)~~ may be assigned although the agreement prohibits assignment. In such cases no question of delegation of any performance is involved. ~~The assignment of a "contract right" as defined in the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9) is not covered by this subsection.~~ Subsection (2) is subject to Section 9-406, which makes rights to payment for goods sold ("accounts"), whether or not earned, freely alienable notwithstanding a contrary agreement or rule of law.

§ 2-312. Warranty of Title and Against Infringement; Buyer's Obligation Against Infringement.

5. Subsection (2) recognizes that sales by sheriffs, executors, certain foreclosing lienors and persons similarly situated ~~are~~ may be so out of the ordinary commercial course that their peculiar character is immediately apparent to the buyer and therefore no personal obligation is imposed upon the seller who is purporting to sell only an unknown or limited right. This subsection does not touch upon and leaves open all questions of restitution arising in such cases, when a unique article so sold is reclaimed by a third party as the rightful owner.

Foreclosure sales under Article 9 are another matter. Section 9-610 provides that a disposition of collateral under that section includes warranties such as those imposed by this section on a voluntary disposition of property of the kind involved. Consequently, unless properly excluded under subsection (2) or under the special provisions for exclusion in Section 9-610, a disposition under Section 9-610 of collateral consisting of goods includes the warranties imposed by subsection (1) and, if applicable, subsection (3).

§ 2-326. Sale on Approval and Sale or Return; ~~Consignment Sales and~~ Rights of Creditors.

(1) Unless otherwise agreed, if delivered goods may be returned by the buyer even though they conform to the contract, the transaction is

(a) a "sale on approval" if the goods are delivered primarily for use, and

(b) a "sale or return" if the goods are delivered primarily for resale.

(2) ~~Except as provided in subsection (3), goods~~ Goods held on approval are not subject to the claims of the buyer's creditors until acceptance; goods held on sale or return are subject to such claims while in the buyer's possession.

~~(3) Where goods are delivered to a person for sale and such person maintains a place of business at which he deals in goods of the kind involved, under a name other than the name of the person making delivery, then with respect to claims of creditors of the person conducting the business the goods are deemed to be on sale or return. The provisions of this subsection are applicable even though an agreement purports to reserve title to the person making delivery until payment or resale or uses such words as "on consignment" or "on memorandum". However, this subsection is not applicable if the person making delivery~~

~~(a) complies with an applicable law providing for a consignor's interest or the like to be evidenced by a sign, or~~

~~(b) establishes that the person conducting the business is generally known by his creditors to be substantially engaged in selling the goods of others, or~~

~~(c) complies with the filing provisions of the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9).~~

~~(4)~~(3) Any "or return" term of a contract for sale is to be treated as a separate contract for sale within the statute of frauds section of this Article (Section 2-201) and as contradicting the sale aspect of the contract within the provisions of this Article on parol or extrinsic evidence (Section 2-202).

Official Comment

1. ~~A~~ Both a "sale on approval" ~~or~~ and a "sale or return" ~~is distinct~~ should be distinguished from other types of transactions with which they frequently have ~~frequently~~ been confused. ~~The type of "sale on approval," "on trial" or "on satisfaction" dealt~~ A "sale on approval," sometimes also called a sale "on trial" or "on satisfaction," deals with a contract under which the seller undertakes a ~~particular business~~ risk in order to satisfy ~~his~~ its prospective buyer with the appearance or performance of the goods ~~in question~~ that are sold. The goods are delivered to the proposed purchaser but they remain the property of the seller until the buyer accepts them. The price has already been agreed. The buyer's willingness to receive and test the goods is the consideration for the seller's engagement to deliver and sell. ~~The type of "sale or return" involved herein~~ A "sale or return," on the other hand, typically is a sale to a merchant whose unwillingness to buy is overcome ~~only~~ by the seller's engagement to take back the goods (or any commercial unit of goods) in lieu of payment if they fail to be resold. A sale or return is a present sale of goods which may be undone at the buyer's option. Accordingly, subsection (2) provides that goods delivered on approval are not subject to the prospective buyer's creditors until acceptance, and goods delivered in a sale or return are subject to the buyer's creditors while in the buyer's possession.

These two transactions are so strongly delineated in practice and in general understanding that every presumption runs against a delivery to a consumer being a "sale or return" and against a delivery to a merchant for resale being a "sale on approval."

2. The right to return goods for failure to conform to the contract of sale does not make the transaction a "sale on approval" or "sale or return" and has nothing to do with this section ~~and the following section~~ or Section 2-327. ~~The present~~ This section is not concerned with remedies for breach of contract. It deals instead with a power given by the contract to turn back the goods even though they are wholly as warranted. This section nevertheless presupposes that a contract for sale is contemplated by the parties, although that contract may be of the particular character ~~here described~~ that this section addresses (i.e., a sale on approval or a sale or return).

~~Where the~~ If a buyer's obligation as a buyer is conditioned not on its personal approval but on the article's passing a described objective test, the risk of loss by casualty pending the test is properly the seller's and proper return is at its expense. On the point of "satisfaction" as meaning "reasonable satisfaction" ~~where~~ when an industrial machine is involved,

~~2. Pursuant to the general policies of this Act which require good faith not only between the parties to the sales contract, but as against interested third parties, subsection (3) resolves all reasonable doubts as to the nature of the transaction in favor of the general creditors of the buyer. As against such creditors words such as "on consignment" or "on memorandum", with or without words of reservation of title in the seller, are disregarded when the buyer has a place of business at which he deals in goods of the kind involved. A necessary exception is made where the buyer is known to be engaged primarily in selling the goods of others or is selling under a relevant sign law, or the seller complies with the filing provisions of Article 9 as if his interest were a security interest. However, there is no intent in this Section to narrow the protection afforded to third parties in any jurisdiction which has a selling Factors Act. The purpose of the exception is merely to limit the effect of the present subsection itself, in the absence of any such Factors Act, to cases in which creditors of the buyer may reasonably be deemed to have been misled by the secret reservation.~~

3. Subsection ~~(4)~~ (3) resolves a conflict in the ~~pre-existing~~ pre-UCC case law by ~~recognition~~ recognizing that an "or return" provision is so definitely at odds with any ordinary contract for sale of goods that ~~where written agreements are~~ if a written agreement is involved ~~it~~ the "or return" term must be contained in a written memorandum. The "or return" aspect of a sales contract must be treated as a separate contract under the Statute of Frauds section and as contradicting the sale insofar as questions of parol or extrinsic evidence are concerned.

*4. Certain true consignment transactions were dealt with in former Sections 2-326(3) and 9-114. These provisions have been deleted and have been replaced by new provisions in Article 9. See, e.g., Sections 9-109(a)(4);~~9-103(b)~~ 9-103(d); 9-319.*

§ 2-502. Buyer's Right to Goods on Seller's Repudiation, Failure to Deliver, or Insolvency.

(1) Subject to subsection*s* (2) and (3) and even though the goods have not been shipped a buyer who has paid a part or all of the price of goods in which he has a special property under the provisions of the immediately preceding section may on making and keeping good a tender of any unpaid portion of their price recover them from the seller if*:*

(a) in the case of goods bought for personal, family, or household purposes, the seller repudiates or fails to deliver as required by the contract; or

(b) in all cases, the seller becomes insolvent within ten days after receipt of the first installment on their price.

(2) The buyer's right to recover the goods under subsection (1)(a) vests upon acquisition of a special property, even if the seller had not then repudiated or failed to deliver.

(3) If the identification creating his special property has been made by the buyer he acquires the right to recover the goods only if they conform to the contract for sale.

Official Comment

1. This section gives an additional right to the buyer as a result of identification of the goods to the contract in the manner provided in Section 2-501. The buyer is given a right to recover the goods ~~on the seller's insolvency occurring~~, conditioned upon making and keeping good a tender of any unpaid portion of the price, in two limited circumstances. First, the buyer may recover goods bought for personal, family, or household purposes if the seller repudiates the contract or fails to deliver the goods. Second, in any case, the buyer may recover the goods if the seller becomes insolvent within 10 days after ~~he~~ the seller receives the first installment on their price. The buyer's right to recover the goods under this section is an exception to the usual rule, under which the disappointed buyer must resort to an action to recover damages.

2. The question of whether the buyer also acquires a security interest in identified goods and has rights to the goods when insolvency takes place after the ten-day period provided in this section depends upon compliance with the provisions of the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9).

3. Under subsection (2), the buyer's right to recover consumer goods under subsection (1)(a) vests upon acquisition of a special property, which occurs upon identification of the goods to the contract. See Section 2-501. Inasmuch as a secured party normally acquires no greater rights in its collateral that its debtor had or had power to convey, see Section 2-403(1) (first sentence), a buyer who acquires a right to recover under this section will take free of a security interest created by the seller if it attaches to the goods after the goods have been identified to the contract. The buyer will take free, even if the buyer does not buy in ordinary course and even if the security interest is perfected. Of course, to the extent that the buyer pays the price after the security interest attaches, the payments will constitute proceeds of the security interest.

~~3.~~ 4. Subsection ~~(2)~~ (3) is included to preclude the possibility of unjust enrichment, which ~~exists~~ would exist if the buyer were permitted to recover goods even though they were greatly superior in quality or quantity to that called for by the contract for sale.

§ 2-716. Buyer's Right to Specific Performance or Replevin.

(1) Specific performance may be decreed where the goods are unique or in other proper circumstances.

(2) The decree for specific performance may include such terms and conditions as to payment of the price, damages, or other relief as the court may deem just.

(3) The buyer has a right of replevin for goods identified to the contract if after reasonable effort he is unable to effect cover for such goods or the circumstances reasonably indicate that such effort will be unavailing or if the goods have been shipped under reservation and satisfaction of the security interest in them has been made or tendered. In the case of goods bought for personal, family, or household purposes, the buyer's right of replevin vests upon acquisition of a special property, even if the seller had not then repudiated or failed to deliver.

3. The legal remedy of replevin is given to the buyer in cases in which cover is reasonably unavailable and goods have been identified to the contract. This is in addition to the buyer's right to recover identified goods ~~on the seller's insolvency (Section 2-502)~~ under Section 2-502. For consumer goods, the buyer's right to replevin vests upon the buyer's acquisition of a special property, which occurs upon identification of the goods to the contract. See Section 2-501. Inasmuch as a secured party normally acquires no greater rights in its collateral that its debtor had or had power to convey, see Section 2-403(1) (first sentence), a buyer who acquires a right of replevin under subsection (3) will take free of a security interest created by the seller if it attaches to the goods after the goods have been identified to the contract. The buyer will take free, even if the buyer does not buy in ordinary course and even if the security interest is perfected. Of course, to the extent that the buyer pays the price after the security interest attaches, the payments will constitute proceeds of the security interest.

§ 2A-303. Alienability of Party's Interest Under Lease Contract or of Lessor's Residual Interest in Goods; Delegation of Performance; Transfer of Rights.

(1) As used in this section, "creation of a security interest" includes the sale of a lease contract that is subject to Article 9, Secured Transactions, by reason of Section ~~9-102(1)(b)~~ 9-109(a)(3).

(2) Except as provided in ~~subsections~~ subsection (3) and ~~(4)~~ Section 9-407, a provision in a lease agreement which (i) prohibits the voluntary or involuntary transfer, including a transfer by sale, sublease, creation or enforcement of a security interest, or attachment, levy, or other judicial process, of an interest of a party under the lease contract or of the lessor's residual interest in the goods, or (ii) makes such a transfer an event of default, gives rise to the rights and remedies provided in subsection ~~(5)~~ (4), but a transfer that is prohibited or is an event of default under the lease agreement is otherwise effective.

~~(3) A provision in a lease agreement which (i) prohibits the creation or enforcement of a security interest in an interest of a party under the lease contract or in the lessor's residual interest in the goods, or (ii) makes such a transfer an event of default, is not enforceable unless, and then only to the extent that, there is an actual transfer by the lessee of the lessee's right of possession or use of the goods in violation of the provision or an actual delegation of a material performance of either party to the lease contract in violation of the provision. Neither the granting nor the enforcement of a security interest in (i) the lessor's interest under the lease contract or (ii) the lessor's residual interest in the goods is a transfer that materially impairs the prospect of obtaining return performance by, materially changes the duty of, or materially increases the burden or risk imposed on, the lessee within the purview of subsection (5) unless, and~~

~~then only to the extent that, there is an actual delegation of a material performance of the lessor.~~

~~(4)~~(3) A provision in a lease agreement which (i) prohibits a transfer of a right to damages for default with respect to the whole lease contract or of a right to payment arising out of the transferor's due performance of the transferor's entire obligation, or (ii) makes such a transfer an event of default, is not enforceable, and such a transfer is not a transfer that materially impairs the prospect of obtaining return performance by, materially changes the duty of, or materially increases the burden or risk imposed on, the other party to the lease contract within the purview of subsection ~~(5)~~ (4).

~~(5)~~(4) Subject to ~~subsections~~ subsection (3) and ~~(4)~~ Section 9-407:

(a) if a transfer is made which is made an event of default under a lease agreement, the party to the lease contract not making the transfer, unless that party waives the default or otherwise agrees, has the rights and remedies described in Section 2A-501(2);

(b) if paragraph (a) is not applicable and if a transfer is made that (i) is prohibited under a lease agreement or (ii) materially impairs the prospect of obtaining return performance by, materially changes the duty of, or materially increases the burden or risk imposed on, the other party to the lease contract, unless the party not making the transfer agrees at any time to the transfer in the lease contract or otherwise, then, except as limited by contract, (i) the transferor is liable to the party not making the transfer for damages caused by the transfer to the extent that the damages could not reasonably be prevented by the party not making the transfer and (ii) a court having jurisdiction may grant other appropriate relief, including cancellation of the lease contract or an injunction against the transfer.

~~(6)~~ (5) A transfer of "the lease" or of "all my rights under the lease", or a transfer in similar general terms, is a transfer of rights and, unless the language or the circumstances, as in a transfer for security, indicate the contrary, the transfer is a delegation of duties by the transferor to the transferee. Acceptance by the transferee constitutes a promise by the transferee to perform those duties. The promise is enforceable by either the transferor or the other party to the lease contract.

~~(7)~~(6) Unless otherwise agreed by the lessor and the lessee, a delegation of performance does not relieve the transferor as against the other party of any duty to perform or of any liability for default.

~~(8)~~(7) In a consumer lease, to prohibit the transfer of an interest of a party under the lease contract or to make a transfer an event of default, the language must be specific, by a writing, and conspicuous.

Official Comment

1. Subsection (2) states a rule, consistent with Section ~~9-311~~ 9-401(b), that voluntary and involuntary transfers of an interest of a party under the lease contract or of the lessor's residual interest, including by way of the creation or enforcement of a security interest, are effective, notwithstanding a provision in the lease agreement prohibiting the transfer or making the transfer an event of default. Although the transfers are effective, the provision in the lease agreement is nevertheless enforceable, but only as provided in subsection ~~(5)~~ (4). Under subsection ~~(5)~~ (4) the prejudiced party is limited to the remedies on "default under the lease contract" in this Article and, except as limited by this Article, as provided in the lease agreement, if the transfer has been made an event of default. Section 2A-501(2). Usually, there will be a specific provision to this effect or a general provision making a breach of a covenant an event of default. In those cases where the transfer is prohibited, but not made an event of default, the prejudiced party may recover damages; or, if the damage remedy would be ineffective adequately to protect that party, the court can order cancellation of the lease contract or enjoin the transfer. This rule that such provisions generally are enforceable is subject to ~~subsections (3) and (4)~~ subsection (3) and Section 9-407, which make such provisions unenforceable in certain instances.

2. ~~The first such instance is described in subsection (3). A~~ Under Section 9-407, a provision in a lease agreement which prohibits the creation or enforcement of a security interest, including sales of lease contracts subject to Article 9 (~~Sections 9-102(1)(b) and 9-104(f)~~ Section 9-109(a)(3)), or makes it an event of default is generally not enforceable, reflecting the policy of Section 9-406 and former Section 9-318(4). ~~However, inasmuch as the creation of a security interest includes the sale of a lease contract, if there are then unperformed duties on the part of the lessor/seller, there could be a delegation of duties in the sale, and, if such a delegation actually takes place and is of a material performance, a provision in a lease agreement prohibiting it or making it an event of default would be enforceable, giving rise to the rights and remedies stated in subsection (5). The statute does not define "material." The parties may set standards to determine its meaning. The term is intended to exclude delegations of matters such as accounting to a professional accountant and the performance of, as opposed to the responsibility for, maintenance duties to a person in the maintenance service industry.~~

~~3. For similar reasons, the lessor is entitled to protect its residual interest in the goods by prohibiting anyone but the lessee from possessing or using them. Accordingly, under subsection (3) if there is an actual transfer by the lessee of its right of possession or use of the goods in violation of a provision in the lease agreement, such a provision likewise is enforceable, giving rise to the rights and remedies stated in subsection (5). A transfer of the lessee's right of possession or use of the goods resulting from the enforcement of a security interest granted by the lessee in its leasehold interest is a "transfer by the lessee" under this subsection.~~

~~4. Finally, subsection (3) protects against a claim that the creation or enforcement of a security interest in the lessor's interest under the lease contract or in the residual interest is a transfer that materially impairs the prospect of obtaining return performance by, materially changes the duty of, or materially increases the burden or risk imposed on the lessee so as to give rise to the rights and remedies stated in subsection (5), unless the transfer involves an actual delegation of a material performance of the lessor.~~

~~5. While it is not likely that a transfer by the lessor of its right to payment under the lease contract would impair at a future time the ability of the lessee to obtain the performance due the lessee under the lease contract from the lessor, if under the circumstances reasonable grounds for insecurity as to receiving that performance arise, the lessee may employ the provision of this Article for demanding adequate assurance of due performance and has the remedy provided in that circumstance. Section 2A-401.~~

~~6. Sections 9-206 and 9-318(1) through (3) also are relevant. Section 9-206 sanctions an agreement by a lessee not to assert certain types of claims or defenses against the lessor's assignee. Section 9-318(1) through (3) deal with, among other things, the other party's rights against the assignee where Section 9-206(1) does not apply. Since the definition of contract under Section 1-201(11) includes a lease agreement, the definition of account debtor under Section 9-105(1)(a) includes a lessee of goods. As a result, Section 9-206 applies to lease agreements, and there is no need to restate those sections in this Article. The reference to "defenses or claims arising out of a sale" in Section 9-318(1) should be interpreted broadly to include defenses or claims arising out of a lease inasmuch as that section codifies the common law rule with respect to contracts, including lease contracts.~~

~~7.~~3. Subsection ~~(4)~~ (3) is based upon Section 2-210(2) and Section ~~9-318(4)~~ 9-406. It makes unenforceable a prohibition against transfers of certain rights to payment or a provision making the transfer an event of default. It also provides that such transfers do not materially impair the prospect of obtaining return performance by, materially change the duty of, or materially increase the burden or risk imposed on, the other party to the lease contract so as to give rise to the rights and remedies stated in subsection ~~(5)~~ (4). Accordingly, a transfer of a right to payment cannot be prohibited or made an event of default, or be one that materially impairs performance, changes duties or increases risk, if the right is already due or will become due without further performance being required by the party to receive payment. Thus, a lessor can transfer the right to future payments under the lease contract, including by way of a grant of a security interest, and the transfer will not give rise to the rights and remedies stated in subsection ~~(5)~~ (4) if the lessor has no remaining performance under the lease contract. The mere fact that the lessor is obligated to allow the lessee to remain in possession and to use the goods as long as the lessee is not in default does not mean that there is "remaining performance" on the part of the lessor. Likewise, the fact that the lessor has potential liability under a "non-operating" lease contract for breaches of warranty does not mean that there is "remaining performance". In contrast, the lessor would have "remaining performance" under a lease contract requiring the lessor to regularly maintain and service the goods or to provide "upgrades" of the equipment on a periodic basis in order to avoid obsolescence. The basic distinction is between a mere potential duty to respond which is not "remaining performance," and an affirmative duty to render stipulated performance. Although the distinction may be difficult to draw in some cases, it is instructive to focus on the difference between "operating" and "non-operating" leases as generally understood in the marketplace. Even if there is "remaining performance" under a lease contract, a transfer for security of a right to payment that is made an event of default or that is in violation of a prohibition against transfer does not give rise to the rights and remedies under subsection ~~(5)~~ (4) if it does not constitute an actual delegation of a material performance under ~~subsection (3)~~ Section 9-407.

~~8.~~4. The application of either the rule of ~~subsection (3)~~ Section 9-407 or the rule of subsection ~~(4)~~ (3) to the grant by the lessor of a security interest in the lessor's right to future payment under the lease contract may produce the same result. Both ~~subsections~~ provisions generally protect security transfers by the lessor in particular because the creation by the lessor of a security interest or the enforcement of that interest generally will not prejudice the lessee's rights if it does not result in a delegation of the lessor's duties. To the contrary, the receipt of loan proceeds or relief from the enforcement of an antecedent debt normally should enhance the lessor's ability to perform its duties under the lease contract. Nevertheless, there are circumstances where relief might be justified. For example, if ownership of the goods is transferred pursuant to enforcement of a security interest to a party whose ownership would prevent the lessee from continuing to possess the goods, relief might be warranted. See 49 U.S.C. § 1401(a) and (b) which places limitations on the operation of aircraft in the United States based on the citizenship or corporate qualification of the registrant.

~~9.~~5. Relief on the ground of material prejudice when the lease agreement does not prohibit the transfer or make it an event of default should be afforded only in extreme circumstances, considering the fact that the party asserting material prejudice did not insist upon a provision in the lease agreement that would protect against such a transfer.

~~10.~~6. Subsection ~~(5)~~ (4) implements the rule of subsection (2). Subsection (2) provides that, even though a transfer is effective, a provision in the lease agreement prohibiting it or making it an event of default may be enforceable as provided in subsection ~~(5)~~ (4). See Brummund v. First National Bank of Clovis, 656 P.2d 884, 35 U.C.C. Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1311 (N.Mex.1983), stating the analogous rule for Section 9-311. If the transfer prohibited by the lease agreement is made an event of default, then, under subsection ~~5(a)~~ (4)(a), unless the default is waived or there is an agreement otherwise, the aggrieved party has the rights and remedies referred to in Section 2A-501(2), viz. those in this Article and, except as limited in the Article, those provided in the lease agreement. In the unlikely circumstance that the lease agreement prohibits the transfer without making a violation of the prohibition an event of default or, even if there is no prohibition against the transfer, and the transfer is one that materially impairs performance, changes duties, or increases risk (for example, a sublease or assignment to a party using the goods improperly or for an illegal purpose), then subsection ~~5(b)~~ (4)(b) is applicable. In that circumstance, unless the party aggrieved by the transfer has otherwise agreed in the lease contract, such as by assenting to a particular transfer or to transfers in general, or agrees in some other manner, the aggrieved party has the right to recover damages from the transferor and a court may, in appropriate circumstances, grant other relief, such as cancellation of the lease contract or an injunction against the transfer.

~~11.~~7. If a transfer gives rise to the rights and remedies provided in subsection ~~(5)~~ (4), the transferee as an alternative may propose, and the other party may accept, adequate cure or compensation for past defaults and adequate assurance of future due performance under the lease contract. Subsection ~~(5)~~ (4) does not preclude any other relief that may be available to a party to the lease contract aggrieved by a transfer subject to an enforceable prohibition, such as an action for interference with contractual relations.

~~12.~~8. Subsection ~~(8)~~ (7) requires that a provision in a consumer lease prohibiting a transfer, or making it an event of default, must be specific, written and conspicuous. See Section 1-201(10). This assists in protecting a consumer lessee against surprise assertions of default.

~~13.~~9. Subsection ~~(6)~~ (5) is taken almost verbatim from the provisions of Section ~~2-210(4)~~ 2-210(5). The subsection states a rule of construction that distinguishes a commercial assignment, which substitutes the assignee for the assignor as to rights and duties, and an assignment for security or financing assignment, which substitutes the assignee for the assignor only as to rights. Note that the assignment for security or financing assignment is a subset of all security interests. Security interest is defined to include "any interest of a buyer of . . . chattel paper". Section 1-201(37). Chattel paper is defined to include a lease. Section ~~9-105(1)(b)~~ 9-102. Thus, a buyer of leases is the holder of a security interest in the leases. That conclusion should not influence this issue, as the policy is quite different. Whether a buyer of leases is the holder of a commercial assignment, or an assignment for security or financing assignment should be determined by the language of the assignment or the circumstances of the assignment.

(1) Except as otherwise provided in Section 2A-306, a creditor of a lessee takes subject to the lease contract.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in ~~subsections~~ subsection (3) ~~and (4)~~ and in Sections 2A-306 and 2A-308, a creditor of a lessor takes subject to the lease contract unless~~:~~

~~(a)~~ the creditor holds a lien that attached to the goods before the lease contract became enforceable~~;~~

~~(b) the creditor holds a security interest in the goods and the lessee did not give value and receive delivery of the goods without knowledge of the security interest; or~~

~~(c) the creditor holds a security interest in the goods which was perfected (Section 9-303) before the lease contract became enforceable~~.

~~(3) A lessee in the ordinary course of business takes the leasehold interest free of a security interest in the goods created by the lessor even though the security interest is perfected (Section 9-303) and the lessee knows of its existence.~~

~~(4) A lessee other than a lessee in the ordinary course of business takes the leasehold interest free of a security interest to the extent that it secures future advances made after the secured party acquires knowledge of the lease or more than 45 days after the lease contract becomes enforceable, whichever first occurs, unless the future advances are made pursuant to a commitment entered into without knowledge of the lease and before the expiration of the 45-day period.~~

(3) Except as otherwise provided in Sections 9-317, 9-321, and 9-323, a lessee takes a leasehold interest subject to a security interest held by a creditor of the lessor.

Official Comment

3. To take priority over the lease contract, and the interests derived therefrom, the creditor must come within ~~one of three exceptions~~ the exception stated ~~within the rule. First,~~ in subsection (2)~~(a)~~ or within one of the provisions of Article 9 mentioned in subsection (3). Subsection (2) provides that where the creditor holds a lien (Section 2A-103(1)(r)) that attached before the lease contract became enforceable (Section 2A-301), the creditor does not take subject to the lease. ~~Second, subsection (2)(b) provides that when the creditor holds a security interest (Section 1-201(37)), whether or not perfected, the creditor has priority over a lessee who did not give value (Section 1-201(44)) and receive delivery of the goods without knowledge (Section 1-201(25)) of the security interest. As to other lessees, under subsection (2)(c) a secured creditor holding a perfected security interest before the time the lease contract became enforceable (Section 2A-301) does not take subject to the lease. With respect to this provision, the lessee in these circumstances is treated like a buyer so that perfection of a purchase money security interest does not relate back (Section 9-301). Subsection (3) provides that a lessee takes its leasehold interest subject to a security interest except as otherwise provided in Sections 9-317, 9-321, or 9-323.~~

4. The rules of this section operate in favor of whichever party to the lease contract may enforce it, even if one party perhaps may not, e.g., under Section 2A-201(1)(b).

~~5. The rules stated in subsections (2)(b) and (c), and the rule in subsection (3), are~~ is ~~best understood by reviewing a hypothetical. Assume that a merchant engaged in the business of selling and leasing musical instruments obtained possession of a truck load of musical instruments on deferred payment terms from a supplier of musical instruments on January 6. To secure payment of such credit the merchant granted the supplier a security interest in the instruments; the security interest was perfected by filing on January 15. The merchant, as lessor, entered into a lease to an individual of one of the musical instruments supplied by the supplier; the lease became enforceable on January 10. Under subsection (2)(b) the lessee will prevail (assuming the lessee qualifies thereunder) unless subsection (c) provides otherwise. Under the rule stated in subsection (2)(c) a priority dispute between the supplier, as the lessor's secured creditor, and the lessee would be determined by ascertaining on January 10 (the day the lease became enforceable) the validity and perfected status of the security interest in the musical instrument and the enforceability of the lease contract by the lessee. Nothing more appearing, under the rule stated in subsection (2)(c), the supplier's security interest in the musical instrument would not have priority over the lease contract. Moreover, subsection (2) states that its rules are subject to the rules of subsections (3) and (4). Under this hypothetical the lessee should qualify as a "lessee in the ordinary course of business". Section 2A-103(1)(o). Subsection (3) also makes clear that the lessee in the ordinary course of business will win even if he or she knows of the existence of the supplier's security interest.~~

~~6. Subsections (3) and (4), which are modeled on the provisions of Section 9-307(1) and (3), respectively, state two exceptions to the priority rule stated in subsection (2) with respect to a creditor who holds a security interest. The lessee in the ordinary course of business will be treated in the same fashion as the buyer in the ordinary course of business, given a priority dispute with a secured creditor over goods subject to a lease contract.~~

(1) In this section:

(b) a "fixture filing" is the filing, in the office where a record of a mortgage on the real estate would be filed or recorded, of a financing statement covering goods that are or are to become fixtures and conforming to the requirements of Section ~~9-402(5)~~ 9-502(a) and (b);

§ 4-210. Security Interest of Collecting Bank in Items, Accompanying Documents and Proceeds.

(c) Receipt by a collecting bank of a final settlement for an item is a realization on its security interest in the item, accompanying documents, and proceeds. So long as the bank does not receive final settlement for the item or give up possession of the item or accompanying documents for purposes other than collection, the security interest continues to that extent and is subject to Article 9, but:

(1) no security agreement is necessary to make the security interest enforceable (Section ~~9-203(1)(a)~~ 9-203(b)(3)(A));

(2) no filing is required to perfect the security interest; and

(3) the security interest has priority over conflicting perfected security interests in the item, accompanying documents, or proceeds.

§ 5-118. Security Interest of Issuer or Nominated Person.

(a) An issuer or nominated person has a security interest in a document presented under a letter of credit to the extent that the issuer or nominated person honors or gives value for the presentation.

(b) So long as and to the extent that an issuer or nominated person has not been reimbursed or has not otherwise recovered the value given with respect to a security interest in a document under subsection (a), the security interest continues and is subject to Article 9, but:

(1) a security agreement is not necessary to make the security interest enforceable under Section 9-203(b)(3);

(2) if the document is presented in a medium other than a written or other tangible medium, the security interest is perfected; and

(3) if the document is presented in a written or other tangible medium and is not a certificated security, chattel paper, a document of title, an instrument, or a letter of credit, the security interest is perfected and has priority over a conflicting security interest in the document so long as the debtor does not have possession of the document.

Official Comment

1. This section gives the issuer of a letter of credit or a nominated person thereunder an automatic perfected security interest in a "document" (as that term is defined in Section 5-102(a)(6)). The security interest arises only if the document is presented to the issuer or nominated person under the letter of credit and only to the extent of the value that is given. This security interest is analogous to that awarded to a collecting bank under Section 4-210. Subsection (b) contains special rules governing the security interest arising under this section. In all other respects, a security interest arising under this section is subject to Article 9. See Section 9-109. Thus, for example, a security interest arising under this section may give rise to a security interest in proceeds under Section 9-315.

2. Subsection (b)(1) makes a security agreement unnecessary to the creation of a security interest under this section. Under subsection (b)(2), a security interest arising under this section is perfected if the document is presented in a medium other than a written or tangible medium. Documents that are written and that are not an otherwise-defined type of collateral under Article 9 (e.g., an invoice or inspection certificate) may be goods, in which an issuer or nominated person could perfect its security interest by possession. Because the definition of document in Section 5-102(a)(6) includes records (e.g., electronic records) that may not be goods, subsection (b)(2) provides for automatic perfection (i.e., without filing or possession).

Under subsection (b)(3), if the document (i) is in a written or tangible medium, (ii) is not a certificated security, chattel paper, a document of title, an instrument, or a letter of credit, and (iii) is not in the debtor's possession, the security interest is perfected and has priority over a conflicting security interest. If the document is a type of tangible collateral that subsection (b)(3) excludes from its perfection and priority rules, the issuer or nominated person must comply with the normal method of perfection (e.g., possession of an instrument) and is subject to the applicable Article 9 priority rules. Documents to which subsection (b)(3) applies may be important to an issuer or nominated person. For example, a confirmer who pays the beneficiary must be assured that its rights to all documents are not impaired. It will find it necessary to present all of the required documents to the issuer in order to be reimbursed. Moreover, when a nominated person sends documents to an issuer in connection with the nominated person's reimbursement, that activity is not a collection, enforcement, or disposition of collateral under Article 9.

One purpose of this section is to protect an issuer or nominated person from claims of a beneficiary's creditors. It is a fallback provision inasmuch as issuers and nominated persons frequently may obtain and perfect security interests under the usual Article 9 rules, and, in many cases, the documents will be owned by the issuer, nominated person, or applicant.

UCC Article 6, Alternative A:

Legislative Note: To take account of differences between former Article 9 and revised Article 9, a State that repeals Article 6 after revised Article 9 takes effect must make the following changes to Alternative A. First, inasmuch as revised Article 9 contains no counterpart of former Section 9-111, the reference to that section in Section 1 of the repealer should be deleted, and Section 4 of the repeal bill should allude to former Section 9-111. Second, the last entry in Section 1-105(2) should be amended as shown above in this Appendix.

7. "Entitlement holder." This term designates those who hold financial assets through intermediaries in the indirect holding system. Because many of the rules of Part 5 impose duties on securities intermediaries in favor of entitlement holders, the definition of entitlement holder is, in most cases, limited to the person specifically designated as such on the records of the intermediary. The last sentence of the definition covers the relatively unusual cases where a person may acquire a security entitlement under Section 8-501 even though the person may not be specifically designated as an entitlement holder on the records of the securities intermediary.

A person may have an interest in a security entitlement, and may even have the right to give entitlement orders to the securities intermediary with respect to it, even though the person is not the entitlement holder. For example, a person who holds securities through a securities account in its own name may have given discretionary trading authority to another person, such as an investment adviser. Similarly, the control provisions in Section 8-106 and the related provisions in Article 9 are designed to facilitate transactions in which a person who holds securities through a securities account uses them as collateral in an arrangement where the securities intermediary has agreed that if the secured party so directs the intermediary will dispose of the positions. In such arrangements, the debtor remains the entitlement holder but has agreed that the secured party can initiate entitlement orders. Moreover, an entitlement holder may be acting for another person as a nominee, agent, trustee, or in another capacity. Unless the entitlement holder is itself acting as a securities intermediary for the other person, in which case the other person would be an entitlement holder with respect to the securities entitlement, the relationship between an entitlement holder and another person for whose benefit the entitlement holder holds a securities entitlement is governed by other law.

8. "Entitlement order." This term is defined as a notification communicated to a securities intermediary directing transfer or redemption of the financial asset to which an entitlement holder has a security entitlement. The term is used in the rules for the indirect holding system in a fashion analogous to the use of the terms "indorsement" and "instruction" in the rules for the direct holding system. If a person directly holds a certificated security in registered form and wishes to transfer it, the means of transfer is an indorsement. If a person directly holds an uncertificated security and wishes to transfer it, the means of transfer is an instruction. If a person holds a security entitlement, the means of disposition is an entitlement order. An entitlement order includes a direction under Section 8-508 to the securities intermediary to transfer a financial asset to the account of the entitlement holder at another financial intermediary or to cause the financial asset to be transferred to the entitlement holder in the direct holding system (e.g., the delivery of a securities certificate registered in the name of the former entitlement holder). As noted in Comment 7, an entitlement order need not be initiated by the entitlement holder in order to be effective, so long as the entitlement holder has authorized the other party to initiate entitlement orders. See Section 8-107(b).

(f) A commodity contract, as defined in Section ~~9-115~~ 9-102(a)(15), is not a security or a financial asset.

§ 8-106. Control.

(a) A purchaser has "control" of a certificated security in bearer form if the certificated security is delivered to the purchaser.

(b) A purchaser has "control" of a certificated security in registered form if the certificated security is delivered to the purchaser, and:

(1) the certificate is indorsed to the purchaser or in blank by an effective indorsement; or

(2) the certificate is registered in the name of the purchaser, upon original issue or registration of transfer by the issuer.

(c) A purchaser has "control" of an uncertificated security if:

(1) the uncertificated security is delivered to the purchaser; or

(2) the issuer has agreed that it will comply with instructions originated by the purchaser without further consent by the registered owner.

(d) A purchaser has "control" of a security entitlement if:

(1) the purchaser becomes the entitlement holder; ~~or~~

(2) the securities intermediary has agreed that it will comply with entitlement orders originated by the purchaser without further consent by the entitlement holder; or

(3) another person has control of the security entitlement on behalf of the purchaser or, having previously acquired control of the security entitlement, acknowledges that it has control on behalf of the purchaser.

(e) If an interest in a security entitlement is granted by the entitlement holder to the entitlement holder's own securities intermediary, the securities intermediary has control.

(f) A purchaser who has satisfied the requirements of subsection (c)~~(2)~~ or (d)~~(2)~~ has control, even if the registered owner in the case of subsection (c)~~(2)~~ or the entitlement holder in the case of subsection (d)~~(2)~~ retains the right to make substitutions for the uncertificated security or security entitlement, to originate instructions or entitlement orders to the issuer or securities intermediary, or otherwise to deal with the uncertificated security or security entitlement.

(g) An issuer or a securities intermediary may not enter into an agreement of the kind described in subsection (c)(2) or (d)(2) without the consent of the registered owner or entitlement holder, but an issuer or a securities intermediary is not required to enter into such an agreement even though the registered owner or entitlement holder so directs. An issuer or securities intermediary that has entered into such an agreement is not required to confirm the existence of the agreement to another party unless requested to do so by the registered owner or entitlement holder.

Official Comment

1. The concept of "control" plays a key role in various provisions dealing with the rights of purchasers, including secured parties. See Sections 8-303 (protected purchasers); 8-503(e)

(purchasers from securities intermediaries); 8-510 (purchasers of security entitlements from entitlement holders); ~~-115(4)~~ 9-314 (perfection of security interests); ~~9-115(5)~~ 9-328 (priorities among conflicting security interests).

Obtaining "control" means that the purchaser has taken whatever steps are necessary, given the manner in which the securities are held, to place itself in a position where it can have the securities sold, without further action by the owner.

4. Subsection (d) specifies the means by which a purchaser can obtain control ~~over~~ of a security entitlement. ~~Two~~ Three mechanisms are possible, analogous to those provided in subsection (c) for uncertificated securities. Under subsection (d)(1), a purchaser has control if it is the entitlement holder. This subsection would apply whether the purchaser holds through the same intermediary that the debtor used, or has the securities position transferred to its own intermediary. Subsection (d)(2) provides that a purchaser has control if the securities intermediary has agreed to act on entitlement orders originated by the purchaser if no further consent by the entitlement holder is required. Under subsection (d)(2), control may be achieved even though the ~~transferor~~ original entitlement holder remains ~~listed~~ as the entitlement holder. Finally, a purchaser may obtain control under subsection (d)(3) if another person has control and the person acknowledges that it has control on the purchaser's behalf. Control under subsection (d)(3) parallels the delivery of certificated securities and uncertificated securities under Section 8-301. Of course, the acknowledging person cannot be the debtor.

This section specifies only the minimum requirements that such an arrangement must meet to confer "control"; the details of the arrangement can be specified by agreement. The arrangement might cover all of the positions in a particular account or subaccount, or only specified positions. There is no requirement that the control party's right to give entitlement orders be exclusive. The arrangement might provide that only the control party can give entitlement orders, or that either the entitlement holder or the control party can give entitlement orders. See subsection (f).

Example 1. Debtor grants Alpha Bank a security interest in a security entitlement that includes 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock that Debtor holds through an account with Able & Co. Alpha also has an account with Able. Debtor instructs Able to transfer the shares to Alpha, and Able does so by crediting the shares to Alpha's account. Alpha ~~Bank~~ has control of the 1000 shares under subsection (d)(1). Although Debtor may have become the beneficial owner of the new securities entitlement, as between Debtor and Alpha, Able has agreed to act on Alpha's entitlement orders because, as between Able and Alpha, ~~because~~ Alpha ~~Bank is~~ has become the entitlement holder. See Section 8-506.

Example 2. Debtor grants Alpha Bank a security interest in a security entitlement that includes 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock that Debtor holds through an account with Able & Co. Alpha ~~Bank~~ does not have an account with Able. Alpha ~~Bank~~ uses Beta as its securities custodian. Debtor instructs Able to transfer the shares to Beta, for the account of Alpha ~~Bank~~, and Able does so. Alpha ~~Bank~~ has control of the 1000 shares under subsection (d)(1). As in Example 1, although Debtor may have become the beneficial owner of the new securities entitlement, as between Debtor and Alpha, Beta has agreed to act on Alpha's entitlement orders because, as between Beta and Alpha, ~~because~~ Alpha ~~is~~ has become the entitlement holder.

Example 3. Debtor grants Alpha Bank a security interest in a security entitlement that includes 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock that Debtor holds through an account with Able & Co. Debtor, Able, and Alpha ~~Bank~~ enter into an agreement under which Debtor will continue to receive dividends and distributions, and will continue to have the right to direct dispositions, but Alpha ~~Bank~~ also has the right to direct dispositions. Alpha ~~Bank~~ has control of the 1000 shares under subsection (d)(2).

Example 4. Able & Co., a securities dealer, grants Alpha Bank a security interest in a security entitlement that includes 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock that Able holds through an account with Clearing Corporation. Able causes Clearing Corporation to transfer the shares into ~~Alpha Bank's~~ Alpha's account at Clearing Corporation. As in Example 1, Alpha ~~Bank~~ has control of the 1000 shares under subsection (d)(1).

Example 5. Able & Co., a securities dealer, grants Alpha Bank a security interest in a security entitlement that includes 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock that Able holds through an account with Clearing Corporation. Alpha ~~Bank~~ does not have an account with Clearing Corporation. It holds its securities through Beta Bank, which does have an account with Clearing Corporation. Able causes Clearing Corporation to transfer the shares into ~~Beta Bank's~~ Beta's account at Clearing Corporation. Beta ~~Bank~~ credits the position to Alpha's account with Beta ~~Bank~~. As in Example 2, Alpha ~~Bank~~ has control of the 1000 shares under subsection (d)(1).

Example 6. Able & Co., a securities dealer, grants Alpha Bank a security interest in a security entitlement that includes 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock that Able holds through an account with Clearing Corporation. Able causes Clearing Corporation to transfer the shares into a pledge account, pursuant to an agreement under which Able will continue to receive dividends, distributions, and the like, but Alpha ~~Bank~~ has the right to direct dispositions. As in Example 3, Alpha ~~Bank~~ has control of the 1000 shares under subsection (d)(2).

Example 7. Able & Co., a securities dealer, grants Alpha Bank a security interest in a security entitlement that includes 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock that Able holds through an account with Clearing Corporation. Able, Alpha, and Clearing Corporation enter into an agreement under which Clearing Corporation will act on instructions from Alpha with respect to the XYZ Co. stock carried in Able's account, but Able will continue to receive dividends, distributions, and the like, and will also have the right to direct dispositions. As in Example 3, Alpha ~~Bank~~ has control of the 1000 shares under subsection (d)(2).

Example 8. Able & Co., a securities dealer, holds a wide range of securities through its account at Clearing Corporation. Able enters into an arrangement with Alpha Bank pursuant to which Alpha provides financing to Able secured by securities identified as the collateral on lists provided by Able to Alpha on a daily or other periodic basis. Able, Alpha, and Clearing Corporation enter into an agreement under which Clearing Corporation agrees that if at any time Alpha directs Clearing Corporation to do so, Clearing Corporation will transfer any securities from Able's account at Alpha's instructions. Because Clearing Corporation has agreed to act on Alpha's instructions with respect to any securities carried in Able's account, at the moment that Alpha's security interest attaches to securities listed by Able, Alpha obtains control of those securities under subsection (d)(2). There is no requirement that Clearing Corporation be informed of which securities Able has pledged to Alpha.

Example 9. Debtor grants Alpha Bank a security interest in a security entitlement that includes 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock that Debtor holds through an account with Able & Co. Beta Bank agrees with Alpha to act as Alpha's collateral agent with respect to the security entitlement. Debtor, Able, and Beta enter into an agreement under which Debtor will continue to receive dividends and distributions, and will continue to have the right to direct dispositions, but Beta also has the right to direct dispositions. Because Able has agreed that it will comply with entitlement orders originated by Beta without further consent by Debtor, Beta has control of the security entitlement (see Example 3). Because Beta has control on behalf of Alpha, Alpha also has control under subsection (d)(3). It is not necessary for Able to enter into an agreement directly with Alpha or for Able to be aware of Beta's agency relationship with Alpha.

7. The term "control" is used in a particular defined sense. The requirements for obtaining control are set out in this section. The concept is not to be interpreted by reference to similar concepts in other bodies of law. In particular, the requirements for "possession" derived from the common law of pledge are not to be used as a basis for interpreting subsection (c)(2) or (d)(2). Those provisions are designed to supplant the concepts of "constructive possession" and the like. A principal purpose of the "control" concept is to eliminate the uncertainty and confusion that results from attempting to apply common law possession concepts to modern securities holding practices.

The key to the control concept is that the purchaser has the ~~present~~ ability to have the securities sold or transferred without further action by the transferor. There is no requirement that the powers held by the purchaser be exclusive. For example, in a secured lending arrangement, if the secured party wishes, it can allow the debtor to retain the right to make substitutions, ~~or~~ to direct the disposition of the uncertificated security or security entitlement, or otherwise to give instructions or entitlement orders. (As explained in Section 8-102, Comment 8, an entitlement order includes a direction under Section 8-508 to the securities intermediary to transfer a financial asset to the account of the entitlement holder at another financial intermediary or to cause the financial asset to be transferred to the entitlement holder in the direct holding system (e.g., by delivery of a securities certificate registered in the name of the former entitlement holder).) Subsection (f) is included to make clear the general point stated in ~~subsection~~ subsections (c) and (d) that the test of control is whether the purchaser has obtained the requisite power, not whether the debtor has retained other powers. There is no implication that retention by the debtor of powers other than those mentioned in subsection (f) is inconsistent with the purchaser having control. Nor is there a requirement that the purchaser's powers be unconditional, provided that further consent of the entitlement holder is not a condition.

Example 10. Debtor grants to Alpha Bank and to Beta Bank a security interest in a security entitlement that includes 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock that Debtor holds through an account with Able & Co. By agreement among the parties, Alpha's security interest is senior and Beta's is junior. Able agrees to act on the entitlement orders of either Alpha or Beta. Alpha and Beta each has control under subsection (d)(2). Moreover, Beta has control notwithstanding a term of Able's agreement to the effect that Able's obligation to act on Beta's entitlement orders is conditioned on ~~the~~ Alpha's consent. The crucial distinction is that Able's agreement to act on Beta's entitlement orders is not conditioned on Debtor's further consent.

*Example 11. Debtor grants to Alpha Bank a security interest in a security entitlement that includes 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock that Debtor holds through an account with Able & Co. Able agrees to act on the entitlement orders of Alpha, but Alpha's right to give entitlement orders to the securities intermediary is conditioned on the Debtor's default. Alternatively, Alpha's right to give entitlement orders is conditioned upon Alpha's statement to Able that Debtor is in default. Because Able's agreement to act on ~~Beta's~~ Alpha's entitlement orders is not conditioned on Debtor's further consent, Alpha has control of the securities entitlement under either alternative.

In many situations, it will be better practice for both the securities intermediary and the purchaser to insist that any conditions relating in any way to the entitlement holder be effective only as between the purchaser and the entitlement holder. That practice would avoid the risk that the securities intermediary could be caught between conflicting assertions of the entitlement holder and the purchaser as to whether the conditions in fact have been met. Nonetheless, the existence of unfulfilled conditions effective against the intermediary would not preclude the purchaser from having control.

§ 8-110. Applicability; Choice of Law.

(e) The following rules determine a "securities intermediary's jurisdiction" for purposes of this section:

(1) If an agreement between the securities intermediary and its entitlement holder ~~specifies that it is governed by the law of a particular jurisdiction~~ governing the securities account expressly provides that a particular jurisdiction is the securities intermediary's jurisdiction for purposes of this part, this article, or this [Act], that jurisdiction is the securities intermediary's jurisdiction.

(2) If paragraph (1) does not apply and an agreement between the securities intermediary and its entitlement holder governing the securities account expressly provides that the agreement is governed by the law of a particular jurisdiction, that jurisdiction is the securities intermediary's jurisdiction.

~~(2)~~(3) If neither paragraph (1) nor paragraph (2) applies and an agreement between the securities intermediary and its entitlement holder

~~does not specify the governing law as provided in paragraph (1), but~~ governing the securities account expressly ~~specifies~~ provides that the securities account is maintained at an office in a particular jurisdiction, that jurisdiction is the securities intermediary's jurisdiction.

~~(3)~~(4) If ~~an agreement between the securities intermediary and its entitlement holder does not specify a jurisdiction as provided in paragraph (1) or (2)~~, none of the preceding paragraphs applies, the securities intermediary's jurisdiction is the jurisdiction in which ~~is located~~ the office identified in an account statement as the office serving the entitlement holder's account is located.

~~(4)~~(5) If ~~an agreement between the securities intermediary and its entitlement holder does not specify a jurisdiction as provided in paragraph (1) or (2) and an account statement does not identify an office serving the entitlement holder's account as provided in paragraph (3),~~ none of the preceding paragraphs applies, the securities intermediary's jurisdiction is the jurisdiction in which ~~is located~~ the chief executive office of the securities intermediary is located.

(f) A securities intermediary's jurisdiction is not determined by the physical location of certificates representing financial assets, or by the jurisdiction in which is organized the issuer of the financial asset with respect to which an entitlement holder has a security entitlement, or by the location of facilities for data processing or other record keeping concerning the account.

3. Subsection (b) provides that the law of the securities intermediary's jurisdiction governs the issues concerning the indirect holding system that are dealt with in Article 8. Paragraphs (1) and (2) cover the matters dealt with in the Article 8 rules defining the concept of security entitlement and specifying the duties of securities intermediaries. Paragraph (3) provides that the law of the security intermediary's jurisdiction determines whether the intermediary owes any duties to an adverse claimant. Paragraph (4) provides that the law of the security intermediary's jurisdiction determines whether adverse claims can be asserted against entitlement holders and others.

Subsection (e) determines what is a "securities intermediary's jurisdiction." The policy of subsection (b) is to ensure that a securities intermediary and all of its entitlement holders can look to a single, readily-identifiable body of law to determine their rights and duties. Accordingly, subsection (e) sets out a sequential series of tests to facilitate identification of that body of law. Paragraph (1) of subsection (e) permits specification of the ~~governing law~~ securities intermediary's jurisdiction by agreement. In the absence of such a specification, the law chosen by the parties to govern the securities account determines the securities intermediary's jurisdiction. See paragraph (2). Because the policy of this section is to enable parties to determine, in advance and with certainty, what law will apply to transactions governed by this Article, the validation of the parties' selection of governing law by agreement is not conditioned upon a determination that the jurisdiction whose law is chosen bear a "reasonable relation" to the transaction. See Section 4A-507; compare Section 1-105(1). That is also true with respect to the similar provisions in subsection (d) of this section and in Section ~~9-103(6)~~ 9-305. The remaining paragraphs in subsection (e) contain additional default rules for determining the securities intermediary's jurisdiction.

5. The following examples illustrate how a court in a jurisdiction which has enacted this section would determine the governing law:

Example 1. John Doe, a resident of Kansas, maintains a securities account with Able & Co. Able is incorporated in Delaware. Its chief executive offices are located in Illinois.

The office where Doe transacts business with Able is located in Missouri. The agreement between Doe and Able specifies that ~~it is governed by~~ Illinois ~~law~~ is the securities intermediary's (Able's) jurisdiction. Through the account, Doe holds securities of a Colorado corporation, which Able holds through Clearing Corporation. The rules of Clearing Corporation provide that the rights and duties of Clearing Corporation and its participants are governed by New York law. Subsection (a) specifies that a controversy concerning the rights and duties as between the issuer and Clearing Corporation is governed by Colorado law. Subsections (b) and (e) specify that a controversy concerning the rights and duties as between the Clearing Corporation and Able is governed by New York law, and that a controversy concerning the rights and duties as between Able and Doe is governed by Illinois law.

7. The choice of law provisions concerning security interests in securities and security entitlements are set out in Section ~~9-103(6)~~ 9-305.

§ 8-301. Delivery.

(a) Delivery of a certificated security to a purchaser occurs when:

(1) the purchaser acquires possession of the security certificate;

(2) another person, other than a securities intermediary, either acquires possession of the security certificate on behalf of the purchaser or, having previously acquired possession of the certificate, acknowledges that it holds for the purchaser; or

(3) a securities intermediary acting on behalf of the purchaser acquires possession of the security certificate, only if the certificate is in registered form and ~~has been~~ is (i) registered in the name of the purchaser, (ii) payable to the order of the purchaser, or (iii) specially indorsed to the purchaser by an effective indorsement and has not been indorsed to the securities intermediary or in blank.

2. Subsection (a) defines delivery with respect to certificated securities. Paragraph (1) deals with simple cases where purchasers themselves acquire physical possession of certificates. Paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (a) specify the circumstances in which delivery to a purchaser can occur although the certificate is in the possession of a person other than the purchaser. Paragraph (2) contains the general rule that a purchaser can take delivery through another person, so long as the other person is actually acting on behalf of the purchaser or acknowledges that it is holding on behalf of the purchaser. Paragraph (2) does not apply to acquisition of possession by a securities intermediary, because a person who holds securities through a securities account acquires a security entitlement, rather than having a direct interest. See Section 8-501. Subsection (a)(3) specifies the limited circumstances in which delivery of security certificates to a securities intermediary is treated as a delivery to the customer. Note that delivery is a method of perfecting a security interest in a certificated security. See Section 9-313(a), (e).

§ 8-302. Rights of Purchaser.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in subsections (b) and (c), a purchaser ~~upon delivery~~ of a certificated or uncertificated security ~~to a purchaser, the purchaser~~ acquires all rights in the security that the transferor had or had power to transfer.

(b) A purchaser of a limited interest acquires rights only to the extent of the interest purchased.

(c) A purchaser of a certificated security who as a previous holder had notice of an adverse claim does not improve its position by taking from a protected purchaser.

Official Comment

1. Subsection (a) provides that ~~if~~ a purchaser of a certificated or uncertificated security ~~is delivered (Section 8-301) to a purchaser in a transfer, the purchaser~~ acquires all rights that the transferor had or had power to transfer. This statement of the familiar "shelter" principle is qualified by the exceptions that a purchaser of a limited interest acquires only that interest, subsection (b), and that a person who does not qualify as a protected purchaser cannot improve its position by taking from a subsequent protected purchaser, subsection (c).

2. Although this section provides that a purchaser acquires a property interest in a certificated or uncertificated security ~~upon "delivery,"~~ , it does not state that a person can acquire an interest in a security only by ~~delivery~~ purchase. Article 8 also is not a comprehensive codification of all of the law governing the creation or transfer of interests in securities ~~by purchase~~.* For example, the grant of a security interest is a transfer of a property interest, but the formal steps necessary to effectuate such a transfer are governed by Article 9, not by Article 8. Under the Article 9 rules, a security interest in a certificated or uncertificated security can be created by execution of a security agreement under Section 9-203 and can be perfected by filing. A transfer of an Article 9 security interest can be implemented by an Article 8 delivery, but need not be.

Similarly, Article 8 does not determine whether a property interest in certificated or uncertificated security is acquired under other law, such as the law of gifts, trusts, or equitable remedies. Nor does Article 8 deal with transfers by operation of law. For example, transfers from decedent to administrator, from ward to guardian, and from bankrupt to trustee in bankruptcy are governed by other law as to both the time they occur and the substance of the transfer. The Article 8 rules do, however, determine whether the issuer is obligated to recognize the rights that a third party, such as a transferee, may acquire under other law. See Sections 8-207, 8-401, and 8-404.

3. The following examples illustrate the operation of Section 8-502.

* * * Example 4. Debtor holds XYZ Co. shares in a securities account with Able & Co. As collateral for a loan from Bank, Debtor grants Bank a security interest in the security entitlement to the XYZ Co. shares. Bank perfects by a method which leaves Debtor with the ability to dispose of the shares. See Section ~~9-115~~ 9-312. In violation of the security agreement, Debtor sells the XYZ Co. shares and absconds with the proceeds. Assume—implausibly—that Bank is able to trace the XYZ Co. shares and show that the "same shares" ended up in Buyer's securities account with Baker & Co. Section 8-502 precludes any action by Bank against Buyer, whether framed in constructive trust or other theory, provided that Buyer acquired the security entitlement for value and without notice of adverse claims.

* * * Example 6. Debtor grants Alpha Co. a security interest in a security entitlement that includes 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock that Debtor holds through an account with Able & Co. Alpha also has an account with Able. Debtor instructs Able to transfer the shares to Alpha, and Able does so by crediting the shares to Alpha's account. Alpha has control of the 1000 shares under Section 8-106(d). (The facts to this point are identical to those in Section 8-106, Comment 4, Example 1, except that Alpha Co. was Alpha Bank.) Alpha next grants Beta Co. a security interest in the 1000 shares included in Alpha's security entitlement. See

Amendments in italics approved by the Permanent Editorial Board for Uniform Commercial Code January 15, 2000.*

Section 9-207(c)(3). Alpha instructs Able to transfer the shares to Gamma Co., Beta's custodian. Able does so, and Gamma credits the 1000 shares to Beta's account. Beta now has control under Section 8-106(d). By virtue of Debtor's explicit permission or by virtue of the permission inherent in Debtor's creation of a security interest in favor of Alpha and Alpha's resulting power to grant a security interest under Section 9-207, Debtor has no adverse claim to assert against Beta, assuming implausibly that Debtor could "trace" an interest to the Gamma account. Moreover, even if Debtor did hold an adverse claim, if Beta did not have notice of Debtor's claim, Section 8-502 will preclude any action by Debtor against Beta, whether framed in constructive trust or other theory.

§ 8-510. Rights of Purchaser of Security Entitlement From Entitlement Holder.

(a) ~~An~~ In a case not covered by the priority rules in Article 9 or the rules stated in subsection (c), an action based on an adverse claim to a financial asset or security entitlement, whether framed in conversion, replevin, constructive trust, equitable lien, or other theory, may not be asserted against a person who purchases a security entitlement, or an interest therein, from an entitlement holder if the purchaser gives value, does not have notice of the adverse claim, and obtains control.

(b) If an adverse claim could not have been asserted against an entitlement holder under Section 8-502, the adverse claim cannot be asserted against a person who purchases a security entitlement, or an interest therein, from the entitlement holder.

(c) In a case not covered by the priority rules in Article 9, a purchaser for value of a security entitlement, or an interest therein, who obtains control has priority over a purchaser of a security entitlement, or an interest therein, who does not obtain control. ~~Purchasers~~ Except as otherwise provided in subsection (d), purchasers who have control rank ~~equally, except that a~~ according to priority in time of:

(1) the purchaser's becoming the person for whom the securities account, in which the security entitlement is carried, is maintained, if the purchaser obtained control under Section 8-106(d)(1);

(2) the securities intermediary's agreement to comply with the purchaser's entitlement orders with respect to security entitlements carried or to be carried in the securities account in which the security entitlement is carried, if the purchaser obtained control under Section 8-106(d)(2); or

(3) if the purchaser obtained control through another person under Section 8-106(d)(3), the time on which priority would be based under this subsection if the other person were the secured party.

(d) A securities intermediary as purchaser has priority over a conflicting purchaser who has control unless otherwise agreed by the securities intermediary.

4. Subsection (c) specifies a priority rule for cases where an entitlement holder transfers conflicting interests in the same security entitlement to different purchasers. It follows the same principle as the Article 9 priority rule for investment property, that is, control trumps non-control. Indeed, the most significant category of conflicting "purchasers" may be secured parties. Priority questions for security interests, however, are governed by the rules in Article 9. Subsection (c) applies only to cases not covered by the Article 9 rules. It is intended primarily for disputes over conflicting claims arising out of repurchase agreement transactions that are not covered by the other rules set out in Articles 8 and 9.

Example 4. Dealer holds securities through an account at Alpha Bank. Alpha Bank in turns holds through a clearing corporation account. Dealer transfers securities to RP1 in a "hold in custody" repo transaction. Dealer then transfers the same securities to RP2 in another repo transaction. The repo to RP2 is implemented by transferring the securities from Dealer's regular account at Alpha Bank to a special account maintained by Alpha Bank for Dealer and RP2. The agreement among Dealer, RP2, and Alpha Bank provides that Dealer can make substitutions for the securities but RP2 can direct Alpha Bank to sell any securities held in the special account. Dealer becomes insolvent. RP1 claims a prior interest in the securities transferred to RP2.

In this example Dealer remained the entitlement holder but agreed that RP2 could initiate entitlement orders to Dealer's security intermediary, Alpha Bank. If RP2 had become the entitlement holder, the adverse claim rule of Section 8-502 would apply. Even if RP2 does not become the entitlement holder, the arrangement among Dealer, Alpha Bank, and RP2 does suffice to give RP2 control. Thus, under Section 8-510(c), RP2 has priority over RP1, because RP2 is a purchaser who obtained control, and RP1 is a purchaser who did not obtain control. The same result could be reached under Section 8-510(a) which provides that RP1's earlier in time interest cannot be asserted as an adverse claim against RP2. The same result would follow under the Article 9 priority rules if the interests of RP1 and RP2 are characterized as "security interests," see Section ~~9-115(5)(a)~~ 9-328(1). The main point of the rules of Section 8-510(c) is to ensure that there will be clear rules to cover the conflicting claims of RP1 and RP2 without characterizing their interests as Article 9 security interests.

The priority rules in Article 9 for conflicting security interests also include a default temporal priority rule ~~of pro rata treatment~~ for cases where multiple secured parties have obtained control but omitted to specify their respective rights by agreement. See Section ~~9-115(5)(b)~~ 9-328(2) and Comment ~~6~~ 5 to Section ~~9-115~~ 9-328. Because the purchaser priority rule in Section 8-510(c) is intended to track the Article 9 priority rules, it too has a ~~pro rata~~ temporal priority rule for cases where multiple non-secured party purchasers have obtained control but omitted to specify their respective rights by agreement. The rule is patterned on Section 9-328(2).

5. If a securities intermediary itself is a purchaser, subsection (d) provides that it has priority over the interest of another purchaser who has control. Article 9 contains a similar rule. See Section 9-328(3).

APPENDIX II. MODEL PROVISIONS FOR PRODUCTION-MONEY PRIORITY

Legislative Note: States that enact these model provisions should add the following definitions to Section 9-102(a) following the definition of "proceeds" and preceding the definition of "promissory note", renumbering paragraphs in 9-102(a) accordingly:

( ) "Production-money crops" means crops that secure a production-money obligation incurred with respect to the production of those crops.

( ) "Production-money obligation" means an obligation of an obligor incurred for new value given to enable the debtor to produce crops if the value is in fact used for the production of the crops.

( ) "Production of crops" includes tilling and otherwise preparing land for growing, planting, cultivating, fertilizing, irrigating, harvesting, and gathering crops, and protecting them from damage or disease.

[MODEL SECTION [9-103A]. "PRODUCTION-MONEY CROPS"; "PRODUCTION-MONEY OBLIGATION"; PRODUCTION-MONEY SECURITY INTEREST; BURDEN OF ESTABLISHING.

(a) A security interest in crops is a production-money security interest to the extent that the crops are production-money crops.

(b) If the extent to which a security interest is a production-money security interest depends on the application of a payment to a particular obligation, the payment must be applied:

(1) in accordance with any reasonable method of application to which the parties agree;

(2) in the absence of the parties' agreement to a reasonable method, in accordance with any intention of the obligor manifested at or before the time of payment; or

(3) in the absence of an agreement to a reasonable method and a timely manifestation of the obligor's intention, in the following order:

(A) to obligations that are not secured; and

(B) if more than one obligation is secured, to obligations secured by production-money security interests in the order in which those obligations were incurred.

(c) A production-money security interest does not lose its status as such, even if:

(1) the production-money crops also secure an obligation that is not a production-money obligation;

(2) collateral that is not production-money crops also secures the production-money obligation; or

(3) the production-money obligation has been renewed, refinanced, or restructured.

(d) A secured party claiming a production-money security interest has the burden of establishing the extent to which the security interest is a production-money security interest.

Legislative Note: This section is optional. States that enact this section should place it between Sections 9-103 and 9-104 and number it accordingly, e.g., as Section 9-103A or 9-103.1.

1. Source. New.

2. Production-Money Priority; "Production-Money Security Interest." This section is patterned closely on Section 9-103, which defines "purchase-money security interest." Subsection (b) makes clear that a security interest can obtain production-money status only to the extent that it secures value that actually can be traced to the direct production of crops. To the extent that a security interest secures indirect costs of production, such as general living expenses, the security interest is not entitled to production-money treatment.

[MODEL SECTION [9-324A]. PRIORITY OF PRODUCTION-MONEY SECURITY INTERESTS AND AGRICULTURAL LIENS.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in subsections (c), (d), and (e), if the requirements of subsection (b) are satisfied, a perfected production-money security interest in production-money crops has priority over a conflicting security interest in the same crops and, except as otherwise provided in Section 9-327, also has priority in their identifiable proceeds.

(b) A production-money security interest has priority under subsection (a) if:

(1) the production-money security interest is perfected by filing when the production-money secured party first gives new value to enable the debtor to produce the crops;

(2) the production-money secured party sends an authenticated notification to the holder of the conflicting security interest not less than 10 or more than 30 days before the production-money secured party first gives new value to enable the debtor to produce the crops if the holder had filed a financing statement covering the crops before the date of the filing made by the production-money secured party; and

(3) the notification states that the production-money secured party has or expects to acquire a production-money security interest in the debtor's crops and provides a description of the crops.

(c) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (d) or (e), if more than one security interest qualifies for priority in the same collateral under subsection (a), the security interests rank according to priority in time of filing under Section 9-322(a).

(d) To the extent that a person holding a perfected security interest in production-money crops that are the subject of a production-money security interest gives new value to enable the debtor to produce the production-money crops and the value is in fact used for the production of the production-money crops, the security interests rank according to priority in time of filing under Section 9-322(a).

(e) To the extent that a person holds both an agricultural lien and a production-money security interest in the same collateral securing the same obligations, the rules of priority applicable to agricultural liens govern priority.]

Legislative Note: This section is optional. States that enact this section should place it between Sections 9-324 and 9-325 and number it accordingly, e.g., as Section 9-324A or 9-324.1.

1. Source. New; replaces former Section 9-312(2).

2. Priority of Production-Money Security Interests and Conflicting Security Interests. This section replaces the limited priority in crops afforded by former Section 9-312(2). That priority generally has been thought to be of little value for its intended beneficiaries. This section attempts to balance the interests of the production-money secured party with those of a secured party who has previously filed a financing statement covering the crops that are to be produced. For example, to qualify for priority under this section, the production-money secured party must notify the earlier-filed secured party prior to extending the production-money credit. The notification affords the earlier secured party the opportunity to prevent subordination by extending the credit itself. Subsection (d) makes this explicit. If the holder of a security interest in production-money crops which conflicts with a production-money security interest gives new value for the production of the crops, the security interests rank according to priority in time of filing under Section 9-322(a).

3. Multiple Production-Money Security Interests. In the case of multiple production-money security interests that qualify for priority under subsection (a), the first to file has priority. See subsection (c). Note that only a security interest perfected by filing is entitled to production-money priority. See subsection (b)(1). Consequently, subsection (c) does not adopt the first-to-file-or-perfect formulation.

4. Holder of Agricultural Lien and Production-Money Security Interest. Subsection (e) deals with a creditor who holds both an agricultural lien and an Article 9 production-money security interest in the same collateral. In these cases, the priority rules applicable to agricultural liens govern. The creditor can avoid this result by waiving its agricultural lien.

APPENDIX III. PERMANENT EDITORIAL BOARD FOR THE UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE

REPORT

EFFECT OF NON-UNIFORM SCOPE PROVISIONS IN REVISED ARTICLE 9 OF THE UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE

I. Introduction

Revised Article 9 has now been enacted in all 50 states and in the District of Columbia. As has been the case with other Articles of the Uniform Commercial Code, the various state enactments contain a number of deviations from the Official Text of Revised Article 9.

While some deviations from the Official Text reflect accommodation of uniquely local issues, others represent substantive policy choices by the enacting legislatures to differ from the national model provided by the Official Text of Revised Article 9. While non-uniformities in the latter category are inconsistent with the ideal of a truly Uniform Commercial Code, they are, of course, inevitable in a democratic system that entrusts enactment to 51 different legislatures. Moreover, it must be recognized that the Uniform Commercial Code has never been enacted in a truly uniform way. There have been local variations ever since the widespread enactment of the Code, including variations in Article 9. The substantive non-uniformities in the enactment of Revised Article 9 are well-catalogued in two articles by Penelope L. Christophorou, Kenneth C. Kettering, Lynn A. Soukup, and Steven O. Weise: Under the Surface of Revised Article 9: Selected Variations in State Enactments from the Official Text of Revised Article 9[1], and Analysis of State Variations[2].

Such non-uniformities have the potential to be problematic in our national economy, where transactions frequently cross state lines and where more than one jurisdiction can be the forum in which litigation establishing the rights of parties can be instituted. Nonetheless, most of the deviations from the Official Text of Revised Article 9 will not cause serious transactional difficulties so long as the parties involved educate themselves as to the applicable law.

There is one group of non-uniformities, though, that has the potential to cause transactional difficulty and legal uncertainty, because these non-uniformities can create difficult conflict of laws issues. This group of non-uniform enactments relates to the scope provisions of Revised Article 9.

II. Uncertainties Arising from Non-uniformities as to Scope

Uniform Commercial Code Section 9-109(a)[3] provides that, "[e]xcept as otherwise provided in subsections (c) and (d)," Revised Article 9 applies, inter alia, to all transactions, regardless of their form, that create a security interest in personal property or fixtures by contract and to sales of accounts, chattel paper, payment intangibles, or promissory notes. Section 9-109(c) excludes application of Revised Article 9 in certain situations to the extent that the transactions are governed by other law referred to in that subsection[4]. Section 9-109(d) excludes application of Revised Article 9 altogether to the transactions and interests listed in that subsection.[5] While there are non-uniformities in enactment with respect to subsection (c), variations with respect to subsection (d) raise more difficult issues. In most cases, these non-uniform enactments add further exclusions to the 13 listed exclusions in the Official Text of the subsection. Thus, Article 9 as enacted in a state with such a non-uniform enactment does not govern some transactions that are governed by Article 9 in states that have followed the Official Text. In a few states, however, the non-uniform varia-

This article does not apply to the extent that:

(1) a statute, regulation, or treaty of the United States preempts this article;

(2) another statute of this State expressly governs the creation, perfection, priority, or enforcement of a security interest created by this State or a governmental unit of this State;

(3) a statute of another State, a foreign country, or a governmental unit of another State or a foreign country, other than a statute generally applicable to security interests, expressly governs creation, perfection, priority, or enforcement of a security interest created by the State, country, or governmental unit; or tions delete an exclusion that appears in subsection (d) of the Official Text, with the result that transactions not governed by Article 9 in states that have followed the Official Text are governed by Article 9 of such states.

(4) the rights of a transferee beneficiary or nominated person under a letter of credit are independent and superior under Section 5-114.

A. Non-Uniform Exclusions

For purposes of this Report, attention is drawn particularly to the most common types of non-uniform enactments of Section 9-109(d)—those that exclude from the scope of Article 9 transactions that are otherwise within the scope of the Official Text of the Article: (i) 18 states exclude from Article 9 transfers by the government of any state[6], (ii) 18 states exclude from Article 9 transfers of interests in workers compensation and similar programs[7], and (iii)13 states exclude from Article 9 transfers of interests in special needs trusts[8]. The relatively large number of states with these non-uniform exclusions makes it likely that conflict of laws issues will arise with some frequency.

If a transaction that is the subject of a non-uniform exclusion from Article 9 does not have a relationship to any state other than the state that has excluded that transaction from Article 9, and litigation takes place in a forum in that state, Revised Article 9 would not be applicable to the transaction. However, such a purely local transaction (accompanied by local litigation) may not be the norm. In many cases, the parties (or some other aspect of the transaction) may relate to a state that has not excluded the transaction from Article 9, or the litigation may take place in a state that has not excluded the transaction from Article 9. Accordingly, conflict of laws issues must be addressed.

1. Litigation in non-excluding forum

What happens if litigation concerning a security interest excluded from the scope of Article 9 as enacted in State X is instituted in the courts of State Y, which has not excluded the transaction from the scope of Article 9? In such a case, the conflict of laws rules of State Y determine which state's law applies. The Uniform Commercial Code of State Y contains two sets of rules that determine the state whose law will govern secured transactions issues in the litigation. With respect to issues of perfection and priority, UCC Sections 9-301 through 9-307 of State Y provide the rules that determine which state's law governs[9]. With respect to issues of enforceability, attachment, and other rights and duties between debtor and secured party, though, the applicable law is determined by the conflict of laws rules in UCC Article 1 of State Y. Article 1's conflict of laws rules appear in Section 1-301 of Revised Article 1 and Section 1-105 of former Article 1. As the following analysis demonstrates, it is possible for a court in State Y to conclude, by application of that forum's conflict of laws rules, that the law of State Y (or another state that has not excluded the transaction from the scope of Article 9) is applicable, even if the transaction has significant contacts with State X.

[9]More precisely, these sections govern issues of perfection, the effect of perfection or nonperfection, and the priority of a security interest in collateral.

a. Enforceability, attachment, and other rights between the parties

If litigation concerning a transaction that is excluded from the scope of Article 9 in State X takes place in the courts of State Y, which has not excluded the transaction from its Article 9, the law that governs enforceability, attachment, and other rights between the parties will be determined by application of Revised Section 1-301 or former Section 1-105, as enacted in the forum state. If application of Revised Section 1-301 or former Section 1-105 directs the State Y court to apply the law of State X, the court will apply that law—which, as a result of the exclusion in State X, will not be Article 9, but, rather, whatever other law of State X governs in light of the fact that the transaction has been excluded from State X's Article 9.[10] It is possible, of course, for Revised Section 1-301 or former Section 1-105 to direct the State Y court to apply the law of State Y (or another state that has not excluded the transaction from Article 9) even though the transaction has some connection to State X. In this regard, it should be noted that both Revised Section 1-301 and former Section 1-105 provide the parties to a transaction with some autonomy as to selection of the governing law.[11]

b. Perfection and priority

If, under the law of the state determined to be applicable pursuant to State Y's enactment of Revised Section 1-301 or former Section 1-105 (whether the applicable law is the non-Article 9 law of State X or Article 9 of State Y), the security interest in question is enforceable and attached, issues of perfection of that security interest and the priority of that security interest are likely to arise. If the litigation concerning these issues takes place in the courts of State Y, those courts must apply the conflict of laws rules in UCC Sections 9-301 through 9-307 to determine which state's law governs issues of perfection and priority. Once again, depending on the situation, the State Y court might be directed by these sections to apply the non-Article 9 law of State X for either or both of these issues, or it might be directed to apply the law of State Y (or another state that has not excluded application of Article 9 to the transaction at hand)[12]; in the latter case, the rules in Article 9 of State Y or such other state would apply even though the transaction has some connection with State X.

[10]It is important in this regard to recall that excluding a transaction from the scope of Article 9 is not the same thing as prohibiting that transaction. Exclusion from Article 9 merely means that other law governs the transaction. Only if other law prohibits the transaction is the transaction prohibited. As a practical matter, though, parties may be unwilling to enter into a transaction if the other law that would govern it is uncertain or antiquated.

[11]Section 1-301 provides somewhat greater party autonomy in non-consumer transactions but is also explicitly limited by considerations of public policy. See Revised UCC Section 1-301(f).

[12]The conflict of laws rules in Sections 9-301 through 9-307, unlike those in Revised Section 1-301 and former Section 1-105, do not generally defer to choices made by the parties.

2. Litigation in excluding forum

It is also possible for litigation concerning a security interest excluded from the scope of Article 9 in State X to be instituted in the courts of State X, even if the transaction has significant contacts with State Y, which has not excluded the transaction from its enactment of Article 9. In such a case, the conflict of laws rules of State X determine which state's law applies. If all aspects of the transaction relate to no state other than State X, the analysis is likely trivial, resulting in application of the law of State X to all aspects of the transaction; but, as noted above, such a purely local transaction may not be the norm. In cases in which the law of a state other than State X might conceivably apply, the analysis is made much more difficult by the fact that the conflict of laws rules that will determine the applicable law may not be the conflict of laws rules found in the Uniform Commercial Code.

a. Enforceability, attachment, and other rights between the parties

If litigation concerning a transaction that is excluded from the scope of Article 9 in State X takes place in a court of State X, it is not clear which conflict of laws rules the court must apply in order to determine the state whose law governs enforceability, attachment, and other rights between the parties. If no other aspect of the transaction is within the scope of Article 9 of State X or within the scope of another Article of the Uniform Commercial Code of State X, it is likely that the conflict of laws rules in UCC Article 1 do not apply. This result is stated explicitly in Revised UCC Section 1-301(b), and is implicit in former Section 1-105. Thus, the general conflict of laws principles of State X determine whether the non-Article 9 law of State X applies to these issues or, rather, whether the Article 9 of State Y (or another state that has not excluded the transaction from Article 9) applies. Because conflict of laws rules outside the UCC are not uniform in the various states, it may be difficult to predict which state's law would be applied by the courts of a state that has excluded a transaction from Article 9. It is the view of the Permanent Editorial Board that a court in a state that has excluded from the scope of its Article 9 a transaction that would otherwise be within the scope of that Article should give serious consideration to applying to such a transaction the conflict of laws rules in that state's enactment of Article 1, even though those rules may not, strictly speaking, be binding on the court, on the theory that those rules represent a general statement of legislative policy as to conflict of laws issues in secured transactions.

b. Perfection and priority

If litigation concerning a transaction that is excluded from the scope of Article 9 in State X takes place in a court of State X, and, under the law applied by that court (whether that law is the non-Article 9 law of State X or Article 9 of State Y), the security interest granted by the debtor to the secured party is enforceable and attached, issues of perfection of that security interest and the priority of that security interest are likely to arise. In such a case, it is also not clear which conflict of laws rules the court must apply in order to determine the state whose law governs issues of perfection and priority. In this situation, UCC Sections 9-301 through 9-307 of State X are not, strictly speaking, applicable to determine which state's law governs issues of perfection and priority. This is because Sections 9-301 through 9-307 are part of Article 9, and, as a result of State X's non-uniform scope provision, Article 9 of State X (including Sections 9-301 through 9-307) does not apply to the transaction. As a result, a State X court will be required to determine (without the explicit legislative guidance in the Uniform Commercial Code) the nature of State X's conflict of laws rule for issues relating to perfection and priority of security interests that are outside the scope of State X's Article 9. A search for such conflict of laws rules might be quite difficult, and the search could conceivably lead to a rule directing the court to apply the law of a state other than the state whose law that would be applicable by virtue of UCC Sections 9-301 through 9-307. Such a result would be unfortunate, because it would necessitate parties to secured transactions that are excluded from the scope of Article 9 in any state to consider the possibility that litigation concerning the security interest might take place in such a state, and that the courts of that state might look to the law of a different state for perfection (and, thus, the location of any required filing) than would a state that has enacted the Official Text of Article 9. Requiring parties to perform such complex conflict of laws analyses not based on application of the conflict of laws rules of the Uniform Commercial Code, and to make protective filings in various states in order to be sure of perfection regardless of where litigation takes place, is wasteful. Accordingly, it is the view of the Permanent Editorial Board that a court in a state that has excluded from the scope of its Article 9 a transaction that would otherwise be within the scope of that Article should give serious consideration to applying to such a transaction the conflict of laws rules in that state's enactment of Sections 9-301 through 9-307, even though those rules may not, strictly speaking, be binding on the court, on the theory that those rules represent a general statement of legislative policy as to conflict of laws issues in secured transactions.

B. Non-uniform Inclusions

For purposes of this Report, attention is drawn to non-uniform enactments of UCC Section 9-109(d) which delete the exclusion in Section 9-109(d)(13) for "an assignment of a deposit account in a consumer transaction."[13] This exclusion is deleted in the enactment of Revised Article 9 in four states—Idaho, Illinois, Mississippi, and North Dakota. As in the case of non-uniform exclusions from the scope of Article 9, this leads to the possibility of differing determinations of applicable law depending on whether a dispute is litigated in a state that has enacted the Official Text of Article 9 or a state that has enacted this non-uniform inclusion with respect to Article 9.

The basic conflict of laws analysis for this non-uniform inclusion is the same as described in Part A of this Report. If an issue concerning a security interest in a deposit account in a consumer transaction is litigated in a state that has enacted the Official Text of Revised Article 9 and, thus, in which assignments of deposit accounts in consumer transactions are outside the scope of Article 9, neither the conflict of laws rules in Revised Section 1-301 or former Section 1-105 (governing attachment, enforceability, and other bilateral issues) nor the conflict of laws rules in Sections 9-301 through 9-307 (governing perfection and priority) are applicable. This can lead to uncertainty as to the applicability of Article 9 if the transaction also touches upon one of the states that has enacted the non-uniform inclusion of deposit accounts in consumer transactions. As is the case with respect to non-uniform exclusions from the scope of Article 9, discussed in Part A, it is the view of the Permanent Editorial Board that a court in a state that has followed the Official Text of Revised Article 9 and, accordingly, has enacted the exclusion of assignments of deposit accounts in consumer transactions from the scope of Article 9, should consider its legislature's enactment of the conflict of laws rules in that state's enactment of Article 1 and Sections 9-301 through 9-307 as general statements of legislative policy as to conflict of laws issues in secured transactions and apply the principles of those sections to conflict of laws issues relating to assignments of such deposit accounts even though, strictly speaking, they may not be binding on the court.

If, on the other hand, an issue concerning a security interest in a deposit account in a consumer transaction is litigated in a state that has enacted the non-uniform inclusion of these transactions in the scope of Article 9, the conflict of laws rules in Revised Section 1-301 and former Section 1-105 (governing attachment, enforceability, and other bilateral issues) and the conflict of laws rules in Sections 9-301 through 9-307 (governing perfection and priority) are applicable.

III. Conclusion

The non-uniform enactments of the scope provisions of Revised Article 9 leads to the possibility of non-uniform determinations of which state's law governs legal issues arising from a secured transaction. As a result, different rules could be applied to a secured transaction depending on the location of the court in which litigation takes place. This situation would impose significant costs and uncertainty on transactions that are the subject of non-uniform scope provisions. This difficulty can be avoided if courts in states with non-uniform scope provisions nonetheless consider their legislatures' enactments of Revised Section 1-301 or former Section 1-105 and Sections 9-301 through 9-307 as general statements of legislative policy as to conflict of laws issues in secured transactions and apply the principles of those sections even though, strictly speaking, they may not be binding on the court. If this practice is followed, all U.S. courts should make the same determination of which state's law governs issues arising under a secured transaction that is within the scope of Article 9 in some, but not all, states.

APPENDIX IV. PERMANENT EDITORIAL BOARD FOR THE UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE

REPORT

MAINTAINING PERFECTION BEYOND JUNE 30, 2006 OF SECURITY INTERESTS CREATED AND PERFECTED BY FILING UNDER FORMER ARTICLE 9

A. Introduction

Revised Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code has been in effect since July 1, 2001[1] (the "effective date"), yet aspects of former Article 9 still have legal effect. In particular, revised UCC Section 9-705(c) provides that a financing statement that was effective under former Article 9 remains effective under revised Article 9 (even if the financing statement was filed in a jurisdiction that is not the jurisdiction whose law governs perfection under the conflict of laws rules in revised Article 9). The period of effectiveness of such a financing statement under revised Article 9 is limited, though. UCC Section 9-705(c) goes on to provide that the pre-effective-date financing statement ceases being effective under revised Article 9 at the earlier of (i) the time the financing statement would have ceased to be effective under the law of the jurisdiction in which it was filed and (ii) June 30, 2006 (the cutoff "date"). As the cutoff date approaches, secured parties must plan carefully to assure that the perfected status of their security interests that remained effective under UCC Section 9-705(c) continues after that date. This Report generally describes the effect of the cutoff date and the actions that secured parties may take to maintain the perfection of their security interests and analyzes in particular detail the effect of the cutoff date on certain financing statements that were continued during the first half of 2001.

As discussed in detail below, there is an interpretive issue concerning the further continuation of certain financing statements that were continued during the first half of 2001. In particular, application of UCC Section 9-705(c) to such continued financing statements that are filed in the same office in the same state as required by revised Article 9 is particularly problematic and may not have been intended by the drafters.[2] Consequently, resolution of the interpretive issue must be accomplished either by interpretation of UCC Section 9-705 in light of both its text and the absence of clear evidence of statutory intent or by concluding that Section 9-705 does not address such continued financing statements and, thus, the cutoff date is inapplicable to them. This Report takes no position as to the correct interpretation. As this Report indicates, though, under any interpretation a secured party wishing to continue such a financing statement can avoid the risk of an untimely[3] (and, therefore, ineffective) continuation if it files a new continuation statement during a period that begins six months before the effectiveness of the financing statement would otherwise lapse without regard to the June 30, 2006, cutoff date and that ends on June 30, 2006. It should be noted, however, that this "safe harbor window" for filing a continuation statement does not provide the full six-month period for filing continuation statements contemplated by both former UCC Section 9-403(3) and revised UCC Section 9-515(d)[4].

The analysis in this report assumes the enactment of the Official Text. It should be noted, though, that four states enacted non-uniform versions of § 9-701, resulting in effective dates of October 1, 2001 (Connecticut) and January 1, 2002 (Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida).

[2] While this situation brings about uncertainty with respect to further continuation of those financing statements, it should be noted that this uncertainty will affect only a small number of financing statements inasmuch as the affected class of financing statements is not large and only a small number of financing statements are continued twice.

B. Effect of the Cutoff Date—Generally

As stated above, revised UCC Section 9-705(c) provides that the effectiveness of a pre-effective-date financing statement terminates at the earlier of the time the financing statement would have ceased to be effective under the law of the jurisdiction in which it was filed and June 30, 2006. Continuation of effectiveness of such a financing statement beyond that date may be accomplished only by following the appropriate procedure set out in Part 7 of revised Article 9. Part 7 sets out two different procedures, each applying to one of two mutually exclusive scenarios. First, if the pre-effective-date financing statement was filed in the same office in the same jurisdiction as would be required by the conflict of laws rules and filing office rules of revised Article 9, UCC Section 9-705(d) provides that the effectiveness of that financing statement can be continued by the filing of a continuation statement. Second, if the first rule does not apply, the secured party must file an "initial financing statement in lieu of continuation statement" (an "in lieu" financing statement) under revised UCC Section 9-706. This "in lieu" filing must be made in the jurisdiction whose law governs perfection under the conflict of laws rules of revised Article 9.

The vast majority of filings made under former Article 9 (i.e., before July 1, 2001) had only a five-year lifespan[5] and, thus, will cease to be effective on or before the June 30, 2006, cutoff date under the first prong of UCC Section 9-705(c). Thus, the number of situations in which the cutoff date could shorten the period of effectiveness of a pre-effective-date financing statement is minimal. Indeed, it might appear at first that, except for situations in which a pre-effective-date financing statement had a lifespan of longer than five years under former Article 9 (because either former UCC Section 9-403(6) or a non-uniform rule in effect in the relevant state provided for a longer duration), the cutoff date established by the second prong of UCC Section 9-705(c) would have no effect.

[3]As described in more detail in this Report, a continuation statement is effective to continue the effectiveness of a financing statement only if it is filed within a statutorily described window. See generally UCC § 9-515(d). Thus, a continuation statement may be untimely if it is filed either too early or too late.

[4]Indeed, as noted in Part F of this Report, the safe harbor period grows progressively shorter as the date on which effectiveness of the financing statement would otherwise cease if § 9-705(c) were inapplicable is later in 2006.

[5]The only exceptions in the Official Text of former Article 9 were for filings that identified the debtor as a transmitting utility and for real estate mortgages effective as fixture filings. See former UCC § 9-403(6).

As noted above, however, there is another set of cases in which the June 30, 2006, cutoff date is relevant even in states that had a five-year lifespan for financing statements filed in that state under former Article 9. For some of these cases, as explained below, the structure of Part 7 of Article 9 does not work well to provide clear answers to questions about maintaining effectiveness after June 30, 2006, of a financing statement filed under former Article 9. The drafters may not have anticipated and considered these specific cases in crafting the rules in Part 7.

Consider a financing statement that originally was filed under former Article 9 in the second half of 1996. Under former Article 9, that filing would have expired five years later—in the second half of 2001, after the effective date of revised Article 9. Although the second half of 2001 was after the effective date, former Article 9 provided that a continuation statement filed at any time in the six-month period prior to the expiration of a financing statement's five-year lifespan continued the effectiveness of that financing statement for an additional five years from the original lapse date.[6] Thus, the six-month continuation window for a financing statement originally filed in the second half of 1996 began sometime in the first half of 2001—while former Article 9 was still in effect. As a result, it was possible to file a continuation statement under former Article 9 to continue the effectiveness of such a financing statement, even though its effectiveness would have continued until after revised Article 9 came into effect. Under the rules of former Article 9, such a continuation statement continued the effectiveness of the financing statement for an additional five years from its original lapse date in the second half of 2001 and, therefore, to a date after June 30, 2006. For example, if the original financing statement was filed on November 1, 1996, the secured party could have filed a continuation statement under former Article 9 as early as May 1, 2001 (before the effective date of July 1, 2001). Under the rules of former Article 9, this would have continued the effectiveness of that financing statement until November 1, 2006.

At this point, several questions must be answered. First, when does the effectiveness of such a financing statement (an "affected financing statement") lapse under the rules of revised Article 9? Second, what actions must be taken by a secured party who wishes to continue the effectiveness of an affected financing statement beyond that date? Third, when must such actions be taken? The first two questions are addressed immediately below. The third question is addressed in Parts D and E of this Report.

1. When Does Effectiveness of an Affected Financing Statement Lapse?

To answer this question, the analysis must first return to revised UCC Section 9-705(c), which tells us that financing statements that were effective before the effective date of revised Article 9 cease to be effective no later than June 30, 2006. If action is not taken by that date to continue the effectiveness of an affected financing statement, UCC Section 9-705(c) tells us that the effectiveness of the financing statement will cease and, thus, that any later action will be too late to maintain continuity of perfection. Because many secured parties wait until shortly before the expiration of the initial five-year period of effectiveness (or any additional five-year period obtained by virtue of a continuation statement) or rely on automated or other calendaring systems that might have been programmed to remind the secured party of the necessity to continue the effectiveness of such filings only shortly before the expiration of that five-year period, it is critically important for secured parties to be aware that application of the cutoff rule in UCC Section 9-705(c) would lead to the conclusion that affected financing statements would cease to be effective on the cutoff date—before the expiration of that five year period[7].

The preceding discussion assumes that the cutoff date in UCC Section 9-705(c) applies to all affected financing statements. An argument could be made, though, that there is a class of affected financing statements to which that subsection is inapplicable. If the affected financing statement is filed in the same office and same jurisdiction as would be required for an initial financing statement under revised Article 9 and also meets all of the requirements of Part 5 of revised Article 9 for an initial financing statement (such as the rules for the debtor's name and the indication of collateral), it might be argued that UCC Section 9-705(b) (which provides that the filing of a financing statement before the effective date is effective to perfect a security interest after the effective date to the extent the filing would satisfy the applicable requirements for perfection under revised Article 9) governs this affected financing statement and UCC Section 9-705(c) was not intended by the drafters to address this particular case and is inapplicable.[8] In such a case,[9] because UCC Section 9-705(b) contains no cutoff date, the affected financing statement would remain effective

[7]While the primary focus of this Report is identification of the time period during which the effectiveness of an affected financing statement must be continued in order to remain effective, even a secured party who does not expect again to continue the effectiveness of an affected financing statement beyond the five-year continuation period should note the effect of § 9-705(c). For example, a secured party who expects the secured obligation to be satisfied after June 30, 2006, but before the expiration of the existing five-year continuation period and who, therefore, does not take action on or before the cutoff date to continue the effectiveness of its affected financing statement (expecting to file a continuation statement only if the obligation is not satisfied by the expiration of the five-year period) would also be adversely affected by the application of the cutoff date of § 9-705(c)(2). To avoid the possibility of such an adverse effect, such a secured party should take action to continue the effectiveness of its affected financing statement on or before the cutoff date in accordance with the suggestions of this Report.

[8]Comment 3 to revised UCC Section 9-705 suggests that subsection (b) was not intended to apply to this situation, which provides some evidence against this argument. Moreover, Example 1 to Comment 4 to the same section applies the June 30, 2006 cutoff date of subsection (c) to a financing statement that would have expired in July 2001 but was continued by the filing of a continuation statement under former Article 9 before July 1, 2001, further suggesting that subsection (c) rather than subsection (b) is applicable. Comment 4, however, as stated in its first sentence, appears to be discussing the application of subsection (c) only in the circumstance where "this Article would require filing of a financing statement in a different jurisdiction or in a different office in the same jurisuntil the end of its full five-year period of effectiveness—even if (as in the case of a financing statement that would have expired on or after July 1, 2001, but was continued by the timely filing of a continuation statement before that date) that occurs after June 30, 2006. Similarly, it can be argued that, in light of the Comments to UCC Section 9-705,[10] neither subsection (b) nor subsection (c) applies to these affected financing statements and, therefore, that nothing in Section 9-705 shortens their period of effectiveness as originally determined under former Article 9.

2. What Actions Must Be Taken to Continue the Effectiveness of an Affected Financing Statement?

What can secured parties in this circumstance do on or before the date on which their affected financing statements will cease to be effective in order to assure that their perfected status will continue without interruption beyond that date? The answer depends on whether the affected financing statement is filed in the same office and same jurisdiction as would be required for an initial financing statement under revised Article 9. If the affected financing statement is filed in that office in that jurisdiction, revised UCC Section 9-705(d) indicates that the secured party may continue the effectiveness of that financing statement by filing a continuation statement in that office.[11] If, on the other hand, the current financing statement is filed in a different state than the state whose law governs perfection of the security interest under revised Article 9 or, even if filed in that state, is not filed in the office in that state mandated by revised Article 9, the secured party must file an "in lieu" financing statement under revised UCC Section 9-706.

D. When May an "In Lieu" Financing Statement be Filed in Order to Continue the Effectiveness of a Financing Statement Whose Effectiveness is Cut Off by UCC Section 9–705(c)(2)?

For cases in which the effectiveness of an affected financing statement may be continued only by the filing of an "in lieu" financing statement, two questions about the timing of the filing of the "in lieu" financing statement must be answered. First, by when must the "in lieu" financing statement be filed in order to continue the effectiveness of an affected financing statement and maintain continuity of perfection? The answer is obvious—the diction" and the facts in Example 1 involve that circumstance. Comment 4 is not directed to the circumstance of affected financing statements on file in the same jurisdiction and same office as required by revised Article 9. This would be consistent with a conclusion that the drafters did not intend to address that particular issue in the statute and, thus, leaves it open to interpret the text of the statute to mean that the cutoff date in subsection (c) is not applicable to the particular circumstance of the affected financing statement.

[9]As noted in the previous sentence, the affected financing statements to which this argument applies are those that are filed in the same office and same jurisdiction as would be required for an initial financing statement under revised Article 9 and also meet all of the requirements of Part 5 of revised Article 9 for an initial financing statement.

[11]Note, however, that § 9-705(f) provides that, taken together, the pre-effective date financing statement and the post-effective date continuation statement must satisfy the requirements of Part 5 of revised Article 9 for an initial financing statement.

date by which such a filing must be made is the date on which effectiveness would otherwise cease under revised UCC Section 9-705(c) (i.e., the earlier of the date on which the affected financing statement would cease to be effective under the law of the jurisdiction in which it was filed and June 30, 2006).[12] Second, what is the earliest date on which such an "in lieu" filing can be made? The answer here is quite simple as well—an "in lieu" financing statement may be filed at any time.[13]

E. When May a Continuation Statement be Filed in Order to Continue the Effectiveness of an Affected Financing Statement?

For cases in which the effectiveness of an affected financing statement may be continued by the filing of a continuation statement in the same office and same state as the original financing statement, the same two questions must be answered about the timing of the continuation statement. First, by when must the continuation statement be filed in order to continue the effectiveness of an affected financing statement and maintain continuity of perfection? The answer, of course, is the date on which effectiveness of the affected financing statement would cease under revised Article 9—either June 30, 2006, or the expiration of the standard five-year period of continued effectiveness, depending on which interpretation described in Part C1 of this Report is adopted. Second, what is the earliest date on which such a continuation statement may be filed?

The answer to the second question is uncertain. Revised UCC Section 9-705(d) states that effectiveness of the pre-effective-date financing statement may be continued "upon the timely filing" of a continuation statement. What is a "timely filing" in the context of an affected financing statement? Both former UCC Section 9-403(3) and revised UCC Section 9-515(d) provide that a continuation statement may be filed "within six months prior to the expiration of the five-year period [of effectiveness of the existing financing statement]."[14] In contexts other than those involving affected financing statements, the application of revised UCC Section 9-515(d) is clear. Yet, in the case of affected financing statements whose effectiveness may be continued by the filing of a continuation statement under revised Article 9, the analysis is more complicated—in part because of the uncertainty described in Part C1 of this Report as to when such financing statements cease to be effective.

Under the interpretation described in the first paragraph of Part C1, UCC Section 9-705(c)(2) is applicable to an affected financing statement, and the application of its June 30, 2006, cutoff date shortens the period of effectiveness of an affected financing statement to less than five years. Thus, applying the cutoff date of UCC Section 9-705(c)(2), the rules for the continuation period in revised UCC Section 9-515(d) cannot be applied literally to such affected financing statements because there is no five-year period of effectiveness. The statutory language lends itself to two possible [12]For cases in which an "in lieu" financing statement is required, there is no doubt that § 9-705(c) provides the applicable cutoff date. By its own terms § 9-705(b) does not apply to such a situation and it is clear from Comment 4 to § 9-705 that § 9-705(c) is intended to apply.

constructions. First, the continuation period could begin six months prior to the "early" expiration of the financing statement on the cutoff date (June 30, 2006), even though that lapse date is less than five years after the start of the most recent period of effectiveness of the financing statement. This would mean that an affected financing statement whose effectiveness is brought to an "early" end (i.e., on the June 30, 2006, cutoff date) by operation of UCC Section 9-705(c)(2) could be the subject of a continuation statement filed at any time during the six months preceding June 30, 2006. Alternatively, the continuation period could begin six months prior to the expiration of the five-year period of effectiveness that the affected financing statement would have had but for the cutoff date. For example, this would mean that an affected financing statement that, but for the cutoff date, would lapse on November 1, 2006, could be continued only during a period beginning six months before November 1, 2006—i.e., no earlier than May 1, 2006—even though, as a result of the cutoff date, effectiveness of the financing statement would cease on June 30, 2006, with the result being a continuation period shorter than the standard six months. Indeed, under this interpretation the period for filing a continuation statement could be as short as one day if the affected financing statement would lapse, but for the cutoff date, on December 30, 2006.

While the PEB does not believe that it was the intent of the drafters of revised Article 9 that the period for filing a continuation statement in these circumstances would be less than the standard six months (as would occur under the second construction described in the previous paragraph), the possibility that a court could read the relevant provisions of Article 9 to bring about such a result cannot be dismissed.

Under the interpretation described in the second paragraph of Part C1 above, UCC Section 9-705(c)(2) does not cut off on June 30, 2006, the effectiveness of an affected financing statementwhose effectiveness may be further continued by the filing of a continuation statement. Rather, under this interpretation, such a financing statement remains effective until the end of the five-year period of additional effectiveness resulting from the filing of the previous continuation statement under former Article 9. Thus, under the interpretation described in the second paragraph of Part C1, there is no difficulty in applying the rules in UCC Section 9-515(d) to a continuation statement filed under revised Article 9 inasmuch as the previous filing did have a five-year period of effectiveness. Accordingly, if this interpretation is applied, the continuation statement may be filed at any time within six months prior to the expiration of the five-year period of continued effectiveness of the affected financing statement. For example, if the affected financing statement will lapse on November 1, 2006, under this interpretation, a continuation statement with respect to that financing statement may be filed at any time during the six month period prior to November 1, 2006.

F. What Can Secured Parties Do to Avoid Uncertainty Created by Different Possible Interpretations?

In the case of affected financing statements that are on file in the same state and same office as are required by revised Article 9 (and, thus, whose effectiveness may be continued under revised Article 9 by the filing of a continuation statement), this Report has described uncertainty as to two important matters: (i) the date on which the effectiveness of the affected financing statement will cease if a continuation statement is not filed, and (ii) the period during which a continuation statement may be filed with respect to such an affected financing statement. The PEB does not take a position as to how that uncertainty should be resolved by courts if either issue becomes the subject of litigation.

The PEB notes, however, that a secured party wishing to maintain continued effectiveness of such an affected financing statement has a course of action available to it that will enable it be successful in maintaining continued effectiveness under any of the possible statutory interpretations described in this Report. So long as such a secured party files its continuation statement no earlier than six months before the date on which the effectiveness of the affected financing statement would have ceased under former Article 9 (in order for the continuation statement to be timely if the cutoff date of UCC Section 9-705(c)(2) does not apply), but no later than June 30, 2006 (in order to be timely if the cutoff date does apply), its continuation statement will be timely under any of those interpretations. Accordingly, secured parties in this situation are well-advised to file their continuation statements for affected financing statement during the "safe harbor window" described in the previous sentence to avoid litigation and uncertainties that would otherwise arise from the interpretative difficulties described in this Report.

The duration of the safe harbor window will vary, though, depending on when the effectiveness of the affected financing statement would have ceased under former Article 9. The later that the effectiveness would have ceased under former Article 9, the shorter the window is. Assume, for example, that an initial financing statement was originally filed on July 2, 1996, and was continued by the timely filing of a continuation statement on June 30, 2001. In that case, the safe harbor window will "open" on January 2, 2006—six months before the date on which effectiveness of the affected financing statement would have ceased under former Article 9—and "close" on June 30, 2006. By way of contrast, assume that an initial financing statement was originally filed on December 30, 1996, and was continued by the timely filing of a continuation statement on June 30, 2001. In that extreme case, the window will "open" on June 30, 2006—six months before the date on which effectiveness of the affected financing statement would have ceased under former Article 9—and "close" on the very same day. Thus, the safe harbor window identified in this paragraph can, in an extreme case, be as short as one day.

Except as provided in the following section, all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this Act are hereby repealed.

Official Comment

This section provides for the repeal of all other legislation inconsistent with this Act.

§ 10-104. Laws Not Repealed.

[(1)] The Article on Documents of Title (Article 7) does not repeal or modify any laws prescribing the form or contents of documents of title or the services or facilities to be afforded by bailees, or otherwise regulating bailees' businesses in respects not specifically dealt with herein; but the fact that such laws are violated does not affect the status of a document of title which otherwise complies with the definition of a document of title (Section 1-201).

As amended in 1962 and 1994.

See Appendix K for material relating to changes made in text in 1994.

Official Comment

This section subordinates the Article of this Act on Documents of Title (Article 7) to the more specialized regulations of particular classes of bailees under other legislation and international treaties. Particularly, the provisions of that Article are superseded by applicable inconsistent provisions regarding the obligation of carriers and the limitation of their liability found in federal legislation dealing with transportation by water (including the Harter Act, Act of February 13, 1893, 27 Stat. 445, and the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, Act of April 16, 1936, 49 Stat. 1207); the Warsaw Convention on International Air Transportation, 49 Stat. 3000, and Section 20(11) of the Interstate Commerce Act, Act of February 20, 1887, 24 Stat. 386, as amended. The Documents of Title provisions of this Act supplement such legislation largely in matters other than obligation of the bailee, e.g., form and effects of negotiation, procedure in the case of lost documents, effect of overissue, possibility of rapid transmission.

Security interests arising out of such transactions which are perfected when [new U.C.C.] becomes effective shall remain perfected until they lapse as provided in [new U.C.C.], and may be continued as permitted by [new U.C.C.], except as stated in Section 11-105.

*This material has been numbered Article 11 to distinguish it from Article 10, the transition provision of the 1962 Code, which may still remain in effect in some states to cover transition problems from pre-Code law to the original Uniform Commercial Code. Adaptation may be necessary in particular states. The terms "[old Code]" and "[new Code]" and "[old U.C.C.]" and "[new U.C.C.]" are used herein, and should be suitably changed in each state.

This draft was prepared by the Reporters and has not been passed upon by the Review Committee, the Permanent Editorial Board, the American Law Institute, or the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. It is submitted as a working draft which may be adapted as appropriate in each state. The "Discussions" were written by the Reporters to assist in understanding the purpose of the drafts.

§ 11-104. Transition Provision on Change of Requirement of Filing.

A security interest for the perfection of which filing or the taking of possession was required under [old U.C.C.] and which attached prior to the effective date of [new U.C.C.] but was not perfected shall be deemed perfected on the effective date of [new U.C.C.] if [new U.C.C.] permits perfection without filing or authorizes filing in the office or offices where a prior ineffective filing was made.

§ 11-105. Transition Provision on Change of Place of Filing.

(1) A financing statement or continuation statement filed prior to [effective date of new U.C.C.] which shall not have lapsed prior to [the effective date of new U.C.C.] shall remain effective for the period provided in the [old Code], but not less than five years after the filing.

(2) With respect to any collateral acquired by the debtor subsequent to the effective date of [new U.C.C.], any effective financing statement or continuation statement described in this section shall apply only if the filing or filings are in the office or offices that would be appropriate to perfect the security interests in the new collateral under [new U.C.C.].

(3) The effectiveness of any financing statement or continuation statement filed prior to [effective date of new U.C.C.] may be continued by a continuation statement as permitted by [new U.C.C.], except that if [new U.C.C.] requires a filing in an office where there was no previous financing statement, a new financing statement conforming to Section 11-106 shall be filed in that office.

(4) If the record of a mortgage of real estate would have been effective as a fixture filing of goods described therein if [new U.C.C.] had been in effect on the date of recording the mortgage, the mortgage shall be deemed effective as a fixture filing as to such goods under subsection (6) of Section 9-402 of the [new U.C.C.] on the effective date of [new U.C.C.].

(1) If a security interest is perfected or has priority when this Act takes effect as to all persons or as to certain persons without any filing or recording, and if the filing of a financing statement would be required for the perfection or priority of the security interest against those persons under [new U.C.C.], the perfection and priority rights of the security interest continue until 3 years after the effective date of [new U.C.C.]. The perfection will then lapse unless a financing statement is filed as provided in subsection (4) or unless the security interest is perfected otherwise than by filing.

(2) If a security interest is perfected when [new U.C.C.] takes effect under a law other than [U.C.C.] which requires no further filing, refiling or recording to continue its perfection, perfection continues until and will lapse 3 years after [new U.C.C.] takes effect, unless a financing statement is filed as provided in subsection (4) or unless the security interest is perfected otherwise than by filing, or unless under subsection (3) of Section 9-302 the other law continues to govern filing.

(3) If a security interest is perfected by a filing, refiling or recording under a law repealed by this Act which required further filing, refiling or recording to continue its perfection, perfection continues and will lapse on the date provided by the law so repealed for such further filing, refiling or recording unless a financing statement is filed as provided in subsection (4) or unless the security interest is perfected otherwise than by filing.

(4) A financing statement may be filed within six months before the perfection of a security interest would otherwise lapse. Any such financing statement may be signed by either the debtor or the secured party. It must identify the security agreement, statement or notice (however denominated in any statute or other law repealed or modified by this Act), state the office where and the date when the last filing, refiling or recording, if any, was made with respect thereto, and the filing number, if any, or book and page, if any, of recording and further state that the security agreement, statement or notice, however denominated, in another filing office under the [U.C.C.] or under any statute or other law repealed or modified by this Act is still effective. Section 9-401 and Section 9-103 determine the proper place to file such a financing statement. Except as specified in this subsection, the provisions of Section 9-403(3) for continuation statements apply to such a financing statement.

§ 11-107. Transition Provisions as to Priorities.

Except as otherwise provided in [Article 11], [old U.C.C.] shall apply to any questions of priority if the positions of the parties were fixed prior to the effective date of [new U.C.C.]. In other cases questions of priority shall be determined by [new U.C.C.].

§ 11-108. Presumption That Rule of Law Continues Unchanged.

Unless a change in law has clearly been made, the provisions of [new U.C.C.] shall be deemed declaratory of the meaning of the [old U.C.C.].

PEB RESOLUTION ON PURPOSES, STANDARDS AND PROCEDURES FOR PEB COMMENTARY TO THE UCC

1. The Permanent Editorial Board (PEB), in accordance with the standards and procedures set out in this resolution of March 14, 1987, and the authority given in the agreement between the American Law Institute and the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws dated July 31, 1986, will issue supplemental commentary on the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) from time to time.

a. The supplemental commentary of the PEB generally will be known as PEB Commentary, to distinguish it from the Official Comments to the UCC, and will be preserved separately from the Official Comments.

b. The underlying purposes and policies of the PEB Commentary are those specified in UCC § 1-102(2). A PEB Commentary should come within one or more of the following specific purposes, which should be made apparent at the inception of the Commentary: (1) to resolve an ambiguity in the UCC by restating more clearly what the PEB considers to be the legal rule; (2) to state a preferred resolution of an issue on which judicial opinion or scholarly writing diverges; (3) to elaborate on the application of the UCC where the statute and/or the Official Comment leaves doubt as to inclusion or exclusion of, or application to, particular circumstances or transactions; (4) consistent with UCC § 1-102(2)(b), to apply the principles of the UCC to new or changed circumstances; (5) to clarify or elaborate upon the operation of the UCC as it relates to other statutes (such as the Bankruptcy Code and various federal and state consumer protection statutes) and general principles of law and equity pursuant to UCC § 1-103; or (6) to otherwise improve the operation of the UCC.

c. The format of the PEB Commentary normally will consist of an identification of the issue, a discussion concerning the possible resolutions of the issue to be addressed, and a statement of the view of the PEB as to how the issue should be resolved. On a carefully selected basis supplemental commentary may be issued as an identified supplement to the Official Comments, in which case it generally should take the form of a brief exposition modeled substantially on the form and style of the Official Comments.

d. Topics for PEB Commentary will be selected periodically by the PEB from suggestions, accompanied by supporting reasons, made by PEB members and by other persons. PEB Commentary may be issued whether or not a perceived issue has been litigated or is in litigation, and whether or not the position taken by the PEB accords with the weight of authority on the issue. The number of topics and topics that are chosen at any given time will be determined by the PEB weighing criteria appropriate under the circumstances, which may include the practical importance of the issue, the absence of other means of resolution, the time and effort to be involved in the preparation of the PEB Commentary, the extent to which the PEB Commentary is likely to be successful in addressing an issue, whether it is known to the PEB that the topic of the PEB Commentary is in specific litigation and, if so, the probable impact upon that litigation, and the availability of resources. However, normally no PEB Commentary should be begun with respect to a UCC Article that is undergoing amendment or initial promulgation except upon consultation with and concurrence of the study or drafting committee for such amendment or initial promulgation. Moreover, except in extraordinary cases and in the case of PEB Commentary identified as specific supplements to Official Comments, an Official Comment, as opposed to the text of the UCC, should not be the specific subject of PEB Commentary.

e. For a variety of reasons, topics initially identified by the PEB for PEB Commentary and advisors' drafts of PEB Commentary (discussed in paragraph 2 below) may not result in the final approval of PEB Commentary. Such reasons might include the failure of a consensus to emerge on the substance of an issue or a conclusion that the issue would better be treated by a change in the UCC Official Text. No inference should be drawn from, and no weight should be accorded to, any withdrawal of an advisor's draft or any failure to proceed with a PEB Commentary on any particular topic.

2. The process by which PEB Commentary is prepared and issued by the PEB should be flexible, but usually should include:

a. periodic publication of the topics under consideration by the PEB with a request for comment by interested persons by a stated date as to whether any listed topic should be deleted or a related topic added and as to the appropriate resolution of the issues presented by the topics under consideration;

b. selection of one or more appropriate advisers, who are not members of the PEB, to review any comments submitted by interested persons and other relevant materials and to prepare a tentative adviser's draft of the proposed PEB Commentary;

c. publication of the adviser's draft of the PEB Commentary, after supervisory review of the PEB, soliciting comments by interested persons by a stated date on the substance and style of the work;

d. approval by the PEB of the substance and style of the PEB Commentary as finally submitted by the adviser(s) and comments submitted by interested persons or, when warranted, the withdrawal of the proposal with the reasons for withdrawal stated; and

e. periodic publication of such PEB Commentary as is approved by the PEB on a regular schedule.

Approval by the PEB of PEB Commentary shall be by three quarters of the members of the PEB voting on the Commentary. The manner of publication of PEB Commentary by the PEB will be in accordance with procedures formulated under a resolution related to that subject generally.

PEB COMMENTARY NO. 1
SECTION 2-507(2)

ISSUE

A cash seller has the right to be paid upon delivery of goods and, if not paid, to reclaim the goods. This right is codified by § 2-507(2). Payment may be made by a check, but such payment is conditional and defeated by dishonor of the check giving rise to the seller's right of reclamation. Comment 3 to § 2-507(2) states:

> "Subsection (2) deals with the effect of a conditional delivery by the seller and in such a situation makes the buyer's 'right as against the seller' conditional upon payment. These words are used as words of limitation to conform with the policy set forth in the bona fide purchase sections of this Article. Should the seller after making such a conditional delivery fail to follow up his rights, the condition is waived. The provision of this Article for a ten day limit within which the seller may reclaim goods delivered on credit to an insolvent buyer is also applicable here." (emphasis supplied)

If the payment is tendered by check, the seller payee will only learn that the check has been or will be dishonored after the goods are delivered. The seller will gain this information either by learning from the bank where the check was deposited that it had been dishonored by the payor bank; or, sometimes by inquiring directly of the payor bank and being told that there is no such account or there is an account but with insufficient funds to cover the check. Oftentimes, the seller may not learn of the dishonor or anticipated dishonor until more than ten days after delivery of the goods.[1] Does the reference in the Comment to the requirement of § 2-702(2) requiring a credit seller to demand reclamation of the goods "within ten days after the receipt" mean that the cash seller also loses the right of reclamation where demand is made more than ten days after delivery of the goods, even though the seller did not learn of the dishonor before then?

DISCUSSION

The cash seller's right of reclamation was a common law remedy in the nature of a lien. "The ground upon which an unpaid seller is allowed a lien and kindred remedies is the inherent injustice of depriving him of goods with which he has not finally parted where it is evident that he has not been paid or will not be paid the price for them when it is due." Williston, Sales, 99 (1948).

The "cash sale" is expressly mentioned in the voidable title provision of [1]This problem should become less significant under Federal Reserve Board Regulation CC, 12 CFR Part 229, issued pursuant to the Expedited Funds Availability Act, 12 USC Section 4001 et seq. Under Section 229.30, the payor bank has a duty to effect an "expeditious return" of the check and if the check is for $2,500 or more, Section 229.33 requires that it provide notice of non-payment that is received by the depositary bank by 4:00 P.M. on the second business day following the banking day on which the check was presented; and that the depositary bank send notice to its customer by midnight of the banking day following its receipt of the notice or within a reasonable longer time.

§ 2-403(1)(c) (along with payment by check (§ 2-403(1)(b))), but the right of reclamation is not specifically mentioned. Instead, it is implicit in § 2-507(2) and § 2-511(3). As noted by the First Circuit in Szabo v. Vinton Motors, 630 F.2d 1, 3, 29 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 737 (1st Cir.1980):

> "Although the right of such a cash seller to reclaim goods sold in a 'bad check' transaction is not specifically set forth in the Code provisions, [footnote omitted] such a reclamation right is inherent in 2-507(2) and 2-511(3) of the Code, Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 106, §§ 2-507(2), 2-511(3). In re Mort Co., 208 F.Supp. 309, 310 [1 UCC Rep. 166] (ED Pa.1962); In re Helms Veneer Corp., 287 F.Supp. 840, 845–46 [5 UCC Rep. 977, 983–4] (WD Va.1968). See generally Mann & Phillips, The Cash Seller Under the Uniform Commercial Code, 20 B.C.L.Rev. 370, 375–84 (1979). Section 2-507(2) makes a buyer's 'right as against the seller to retain or dispose of [the goods] . . . conditional upon his making the payment due.' Section 2-511(3), in turn, provides that 'payment by check is conditional and is defeated as between the parties by dishonor of the check on due presentment.' Taking these two Code provisions together, the clear implication is that a buyer cannot retain and, conversely, a seller has the right to reclaim goods sold in a cash transaction if the buyer's check is dishonored.

> "The reference in the last sentence of Comment 3 is to the limitation contained in § 2-702(2) requiring a credit seller to reclaim goods within ten days of receipt. See note 1 supra. Based on this reference, courts have invariably held that a cash seller must make a demand for the return of the goods within ten days after the goods are received by the buyer. E.g., In re Samuels & Co., 526 F.2d 1238, 1245 (5th Cir.) (en banc), cert. denied 429 U.S. 834 (1976); In re Helms Veneer Corp., supra, at 846 * * * [footnote omitted]."

See also Dugan, Cash Sellers Under Articles 2 and 9 of the UCC, 8 UCC L.J. 330, 345–349 (1976).

Szabo, which represents the majority view by reason of the Comment, went on to hold that the seller's right of reclamation is lost if demand is made more than ten days after delivery of the goods:

> "Appellee urges us to disregard the limitation contained in Comment 3 on the ground that it directly contradicts the language of the Code. Although official Code Comments do not have the force of law, they are helpful in explaining the Code provisions and their purpose is to promote uniformity in construction. Mass.Gen. Laws ch. 106, Comment to Title; Thompson v. United States, 408 F.2d 1075, 1084 n. 15 (8th Cir.1969). See generally Skilton, Some Comments on the Comments to the Uniform Commercial Code, 1966 Wisc.L.Rev. 597. It has been stated that the Official Comments 'are powerful dicta.' In re Yale Express System, Inc., 370 F.2d 433, 437 (2d Cir.1966). Nevertheless, it is the Code provisions and not the Comments which control. We do not, however, accept appellee's argument that there is a direct conflict between the cash sale provisions of the Code and Comment 3 to § 2-507. As noted above, Comment 3 supports a reclamation right which is only implicit in §§ 2-507(2) and 2-511(3), and limits that right by reference to another Code provision, § 2-702(2), dealing with credit sales. Comment 3 does not contradict, but merely complements and explains the Code. We decline to disregard it." (630 F.2d at 3–4).

The Eighth Circuit, however, rejected Szabo in Burk v. Emmick, 637 F.2d 1172, 29 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1489 (8th Cir.1980):

> "We reject this reasoning. In our view, it would tend to coerce the cash seller > who reasonably expects the buyer to tender payment at delivery to go through the cautious motions of a credit seller dealing with an economically unstable buyer. This we are not prepared to do . . ..” (637 F.2d at 1175 n. 6).

> “Our holding is quite limited. We determine that as between the seller and the buyer, where a cash seller reclaims goods sold to a breaching buyer, the only limitation imposed upon the seller’s right is a reasonableness requirement . . ..” (637 F.2d at 1176).

There is nothing in the language of § 2-507(2) supporting the imposition of the “ten day limit” mentioned in Comment 3. At common law, there was no specific time limitation. Rather, an attempt to reclaim after excessive delay would be defeated by doctrines such as waiver, estoppel, or ratification of the buyer’s property interest. See, e.g., Frech v. Lewis, 218 Pa. 141, 67 A. 45 (1907). Under § 1-103, common law principles supplement Code provisions, unless “displaced by the particular provisions.” Proper implementation of this doctrine compels the conclusion that the codification of the “cash sale” concept implicit in § 2-507(2), without any mention of a time limit, means that common law rules governing enforcement are still applicable. Indeed, the third sentence of Comment 3 is consistent with this interpretation in referring to waiver where a seller fails “to follow up his rights.” The cases which, even though they rely on Comment 3, impose a ten day limit, must be considered to have reached an improper result. There is no need to impose a specific time limitation for enforcement of a cash seller’s right of reclamation. The common law rules defeating the right where there is delay resulting in prejudice to the buyer adequately cover instances where only the seller and buyer are involved: If the rights of third parties are implicated § 2-403(1)(b) and (c) protect good faith purchasers.

CONCLUSION

There is no justification for barring the cash seller’s right or remedy of reclamation before discovery of non-payment. There is no specific time limit for a cash seller to exercise the right of reclamation. The right may be exercised as long as there has not been an excessive delay causing inequitable prejudice to the buyer. Common law rules and precedents governing such circumstances are applicable.

The last sentence of Official Comment 3 to § 2-507 is deleted as inappropriate and replaced by the following:

> . . . This subsection (2) codifies the cash seller’s right of reclamation which is in the nature of a lien. There is no specific time limit for a cash seller to exercise the right of reclamation. However, the right will be defeated by delay causing prejudice to the buyer, waiver, estoppel, or ratification of the buyer’s right to retain possession. Common law rules and precedents governing such principles are applicable (Section 1-103). If third parties are involved, Section 2-403(1) protects good faith purchasers. PEB COMMENTARY NO. 2
SECTION 9-301(4)

ISSUE

Section 9-301(4) provides: "A person who becomes a lien creditor while a security interest is perfected takes subject to the security interest only to the extent that it secures advances made before he becomes a lien creditor or within 45 days thereafter or made without knowledge of the lien or pursuant to a commitment entered into without knowledge of the lien." Does the phrase "only to the extent that it secures advances" limit the priority of the security interest to advances, as distinguished from, e.g., accruing interest, collection expenses, and similar ancillary rights (all herein called "non-advances")?

DISCUSSION

An example to illustrate the issue is the question whether non-advances, e.g., interest on advances accruing either before or after the lien arises, or expenses of foreclosure of the security interest arising after the lien arises, are excluded from the priority of pre-lien advances under the security interest by the language quoted above.

If § 9-301(4) were read in an exclusionary fashion as suggested in the issue above, it would put on the priority of a security interest a limitation which does not have any pre-Code precedents in chattel security law or similar real estate mortgage law. Even if the language were to be read as excluding only interest and expenses incurred after the creditor's lien arose, the limitation is believed to be without precedent except for some situations in which accruing interest and expenses were considered to be "inchoate" as that concept developed in federal law concerned with rights of the United States against secured parties under the Federal Preference Act, R.S. 3166, now 31 USC 3713, and under the Federal Tax Lien Act, 26 USC 6321–6323.

Section 9-301(4) was one of three sections (the others being §§ 9-307(3) and 9-312(7)) adopted by the 1972 amendments to Article 9 to solve the much debated question of the priority of future advances against intermediate security interests or buyers of the collateral or creditors having nonconsensual liens on the collateral. See the 1972 General Comments of the Review Committee for Article 9, paragraphs E-39 to -45 (republished in West's Uniform Commercial Code, 1987 Official Text with Comments, pp. 910–912), which neither by their heading nor by their text offered any suggestion that the priority considered related to anything other than the future advances themselves, as distinguished from non-advances. To the same effect, the "Reasons for 1972 Change" to §§ 9-301(4) (Rights of Lien Creditors), 9-307(3) (Rights of Buyers) and 9-312(7) (Rights of Intervening Secured Parties) do not contain any suggestion that the sections undertake to affect the priorities of non-advances. The three sections are in pari materia, although they use somewhat different combinations of the same elements to reach varying results in three situations.

Sections 9-301(4) and 9-307(3) provide nearly identical rules as to the priority of subsequent advances against lien creditors and buyers respectively. Section 9-307(3) reads: "A buyer . . . takes free of a security interest to the extent that it secures future advances made after the secured party acquires knowledge of the purchase, or more than 45 days after the purchase, whichever first occurs, unless made pursuant to a commitment entered into without knowledge of the purchase and before the expiration of the 45 day period." The only substantive difference between this and § 9-301(4), quoted at the beginning of the Commentary, is that in § 9-307(3) the effect of knowledge of the intervening rights is to shorten the specified 45-day period during which advances may be made with the same priority as the original advance, while in § 9-301(4) absence of knowledge is a factor which can extend beyond the 45 days the right to make post-lien advances with the same priority as the original advance.

The language in § 9-307(3) sets forth the rule for future advances without suggesting that it is exclusive and excludes any priority for non-advances, while § 9-301(4) is so phrased with the word "only" that on its face it excludes any right to non-advances. It is believed that this phraseology in § 9-301(4) was just an accident of draftmanship as the draftsmen concentrated on the problem discussed in the last paragraph of the "Reasons for 1972 Change" for § 9-301(4), namely, the effect of the rule chosen on priority of the security interest as against the Federal Tax Lien under the Federal Tax Lien Act of 1966.

CONCLUSION

Section 9-301(4) should not be read as excluding or limiting interest on advances or expenses made in their collection and enforcement, or other non-advances ancillary to advances having priority against the lien creditor.

This issue was presented in Dick Warner Cargo Handling Corp. v. Aetna Business Credit, Inc., 746 F.2d 126, 39 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 762 (2d Cir.1984), and the Court held in accordance with this conclusion.

The Official Comment to § 9-301 is amended by adding the following:

8. The word "only" in subsection (4) is limited in its effect to the lien creditor's subjection to the specified advances. It does not limit the lien creditor's subjection to whatever other rights the secured party may have by contract or law, e.g., the right to interest before or after the attachment of the judgment lien to the collateral or the right to foreclosure expenses or other collection expenses. See PEB Commentary No. 2, dated March 10, 1990.

PEB COMMENTARY NO. 3
SECTIONS 9-306(2) AND 9-402(7)

ISSUE

Is there a conflict between UCC § 9-306(2), which terminates a security interest upon any disposition of the collateral that has been authorized by the secured party, and the last sentence of UCC § 9-402(7), which continues the effectiveness of a financing statement with respect to collateral that has been transferred even though the secured party knows of and consents to the transfer?

The issue can be described by the following hypothetical: Debtor ("D") has granted to Secured Party ("SP") a security interest in collateral consisting of equipment. The security interest is perfected by the filing of a financing statement naming D as the debtor. D disposes of the collateral to Transferee ("T") who assumes D's obligations under the security agreement. SP is aware of and consents to the disposition but only on the conditions that D remain liable on the secured indebtedness and that T make all payments and perform all obligations under the security agreement in a timely manner.

DISCUSSION

1. Section 9-306(2)

Section 9-306(2) (1972 Official Text) provides:

> "Except where this Article otherwise provides, a security interest continues in collateral notwithstanding sale, exchange or other disposition thereof unless the disposition was authorized by the secured party in the security agreement or otherwise, and also continues in any identifiable proceeds including collections received by the debtor."

Section 9-306(2) treats only the issue of whether a security interest continues in collateral following disposition of the collateral. Assuming the security interest continues in the collateral after disposition, this Section does not deal with the issue of whether the secured party must take further action to continue the perfected status of its security interest in the collateral. Section 9-306(2) states the general rule that a security interest in collateral is not terminated upon a disposition of the collateral and can be enforced against the collateral in the hands of the transferee. See Official Comment No. 3 to UCC § 9-306(2).

Section 9-306(2), however, sets forth an exception to this rule if the secured party has authorized the disposition of the collateral in the security agreement or otherwise. The intent underlying this exception is to permit a disposition of the collateral free and clear of the security interest when the secured party has authorized the disposition free and clear of its security interest in the security agreement or otherwise. In the case of such an authorized disposition, the general rule of survivability of the security interest set forth in § 9-306(2) will not apply and the security interest will terminate upon the disposition. However, this exception to the rule of survivability only applies if the secured party has authorized the disposition, by agreement or otherwise, free and clear of the security interest. The exception will not apply if the secured party did not authorize the disposition of the collateral or if the secured party authorized the disposition subject to its security interest. This authorization issue presents a factual question. The questions of what facts will constitute an effective express or implied authorization for purposes of this Section and what standard of proof is applicable to this determination are not addressed in the Code but are instead left to other law.

If the disposition of the collateral has been authorized by the secured party free and clear of the security interest, the security interest will terminate upon the disposition and there will be no need to determine whether the secured party must take further action to continue the perfected status of the security interest in the collateral following its disposition. On the other hand, if the security interest in the collateral survives the disposition, the secured party must then determine whether further action is necessary to continue the perfected status of its security interest following the disposition. This is a perfection issue which is not governed by § 9-306(2). This perfection issue is governed by § 9-402(7).

2. Section 9-402(7)

The last sentence of § 9-402(7) provides that "a filed financing statement remains effective with respect to collateral transferred by the debtor even though the secured party knows of or consents to the transfer."

This sentence, which was added in the 1972 Official Text, was intended to resolve an ambiguity in the 1962 Code as to whether a secured party is required to file an amended or new financing statement when the collateral is transferred. Substantial policy arguments can be made on both sides of this issue. Those favoring a refiling obligation when collateral is transferred argue that, absent refiling in the name of the transferee, secured creditors searching in the name of the transferee could be misled since they would not discover a financing statement filed in the name of the transferor. Allowing a filing against the transferor to be effective against creditors of the transferee would thus promote hidden liens in violation of the public notice purposes of Article 9. Those who argue against a refiling obligation as to collateral transferred by the debtor point to the enormous policing responsibility that a refiling duty would impose on secured creditors of the transferor, most of whom have no continuing contact with the transferor after the secured transaction other than to receive installment payments on the secured indebtedness. A refiling obligation linked to the secured creditor's "notice" or "knowledge" of the transfer would create difficult problems of proof and would foster litigation with all of its resultant costs and uncertainties. Secured creditors of the transferee can protect themselves against filings in the name of prior owners of the collateral by tracing ownership of the collateral and searching in the names of prior owners. This tracing obligation, it is argued, is not an unreasonable burden to place on creditors of the transferee since they would have this responsibility anyway in order to insure that their debtor (the transferee) has rights in the collateral sufficient to grant a security interest.

Balancing these competing policy concerns, the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws and the American Law Institute, in adopting § 9-402(7), opted in favor of the no refiling rule as to collateral transferred by the debtor. Thus, the last sentence of § 9-402(7) makes it clear that the secured party has no refiling obligation even if the secured party knows that the collateral has been transferred or even authorized or consented to the transfer. Official Comment 8 to § 9-402(7) explains the purpose of the last sentence in § 9-402(7):

> "Subsection (7) also deals with a different problem, namely whether a new filing is necessary where the collateral has been transferred from one debtor to another. This question has been much debated both in pre-Code law and under the Code. This Article now answers the questions in the negative. Thus, any person searching the condition of the ownership of a debtor must make inquiry as to the debtor's source of title, and must search in the name of a former owner if circumstances seem to require it."

3. Harmonizing Sections 9-306(2) and 9-402(7)

Read together, §§ 9-306(2) and 9-402(7) lead to the following results when collateral is disposed of:

> If the secured party does not authorize the disposition or if the secured party authorizes the disposition subject to the security interest, the security interest will continue in the collateral following the disposition (§ 9-306(2)) and no new financing statement or amendment to the existing financing statement will be required in order to continue the perfected status of the security interest in the collateral following the disposition (§ 9-402(7)).
> If the secured party, in the security agreement or otherwise, authorizes the disposition free and clear of the security interest, the security interest will terminate the disposition (§ 9-306(2)) and there will be no need to be concerned with perfection issues under § 9-402(7).

Returning to the hypothetical, this analysis yields the following results: D's disposition of the collateral to T will not terminate SP's security interest under § 9-306(2) since SP did not authorize the disposition free and clear of its security interest. The disposition of the collateral was authorized by SP but subject to T's recognition of SP's security interest in the collateral. Thus, under § 9-306(2), SP's security interest continues in the collateral following the disposition. Under § 9-402(7), SP's filed financing statement remains effective following the disposition of the collateral by D to T even though SP was aware of and consented to the disposition. Therefore, SP need not file a new financing statement in the names of D or T or take any other action to continue the perfected status of its security interest in the collateral. This Commentary does not imply that the secured creditor need not take filing action if required by other Sections of the Code (e.g., Sections 9-103(1), 9-103(3) or 9-401(3)) based upon a change in location of the collateral or a change in the debtor's location following the transfer of the collateral by the debtor.

CONCLUSION

There is no conflict between § 9-306(2) and the last sentence of § 9-402(7). Section 9-306(2) deals with the effect of a disposition of the collateral upon a security interest in the collateral and sets forth a general rule of survivability which applies unless the secured party authorizes the disposition free and clear of the security interest. The last sentence of § 9-402(7) only has operative effect if the security interest survives the disposition under § 9-306(2). In this instance, the last sentence of § 9-402(7) continues the perfected status of the security interest in the transferred collateral even though the secured party may have authorized or consented to the disposition. Cases reaching this conclusion as to the interplay between UCC §§ 9-306(2) and 9-402(7) include In re Southern Properties, Inc., 44 B.R. 838, 40 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1089 (Bkcy.E.D.Va.1989); Loeb v. Franchise Distributors, Inc. (In re Franchise Systems, Inc.), 46 B.R. 158, 40 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 689 (Bkcy.N.D.Ga.1985); and Matto's Inc. v. Olde Colonie Place (In re Matto's Inc.), 30 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1750 (Bkcy.E.D.Mich.1981).

The second paragraph of Official Comment 3 to UCC § 9-306 is supplemented as follows:

> In many cases a purchaser or other transferee of collateral will take free of a security interest: in such cases the secured party's only right will be to proceeds. A transferee will acquire the collateral free and clear of a preexisting security interest only if the disposition of the collateral by the debtor was authorized by the secured party free and clear of the secured party's security interest. If the disposition was not authorized by the secured party, or was authorized by the secured party subject to the secured party's security interest, the transferee will not acquire the collateral free and clear of the security interest. The authorization may be contained in the security agreement or otherwise given. The right to proceeds, either under the rules of this section or under specific mention thereof in a security agreement or financing statement does not in itself constitute an authorization of sale. PEB Commentary No. 3, dated March 10, 1990, analyzes the interplay between this Section and Section 9-402(7).

Official Comment 8 to UCC § 9-402 is amended to add the following paragraph at the end of the Comment:

> PEB Commentary No. 3, dated March 10, 1990, explains the interplay between this Section and Section 9-306(2). As explained in this Commentary, this Section is consistent with Section 9-306(2) since Section 9-306(2) deals with the continuation or termination of a security interest in collateral following a disposition of the collateral. The last sentence of Section 9-402(7), on the other hand, deals with the continued effectiveness of a filed financing statement to perfect any security interest that continues in the collateral following its disposition.

PEB COMMENTARY NO. 4
SECTION 8-207(1)

ISSUE

Section 8-207(1) provides that

> (1) Prior to due presentment for registration of transfer of a certificated security in registered form, the issuer or indenture trustee may treat the registered owner as the person exclusively entitled to vote, to receive notifications, and otherwise to exercise all the rights and powers of an owner.

This section has been part of the UCC since its inception, the only change made by the 1977 amendments being the addition of the word "certificated."

Under what circumstances will a distribution of money or other property to the registered owner of a certificated security provide the issuer with a defense against a claim to that distribution asserted by a pledgee who was a bona fide purchaser and in possession of that security at the time of such distribution?

DISCUSSION

1. The Statutory Scheme

As between the parties, the rights of the owner of a registered certificated security are transferred to a purchaser when the security is delivered to the purchaser. § 8-313(1)(a). The issuer is required to register that transfer when the security is presented to it with an appropriate request. § 8-401(1). Thus, between the time of delivery and presentment, the registered owner and the person ultimately entitled to the rights of ownership will be different parties. The objective of § 8-207(1) is to protect the issuer by express authorization to treat the original registered owner of a security, during this "gap" period, as the person entitled to the rights of ownership, including the right to receive distributions with respect thereto. Such protection is clearly necessary, since, in the vast majority of cases, the issuer would have no knowledge that a transfer had been made or know the identity of the purchaser. Inherent in this scheme is that a distribution to the registered owner will relieve the issuer from any liability to the purchaser for the same distribution. Without that protection, no issuer could safely make any distribution without requiring the surrender, or exhibition, of the security by the distributee—a patently impractical requirement.

In the context of outright sales of securities, the rule of § 8-207(1) does not constitute a serious problem. In such transactions, the period of incongruity between registered and actual ownership will be of limited duration, since the purchaser will normally present the security for registration of transfer as promptly as possible. The nature, amount, and record date of any imminent distributions can usually be ascertained and can be reflected in the price or otherwise adjusted between the parties.

In the context of pledges of securities, however, the pledgee, in most cases, takes delivery of the security, duly endorsed for transfer, but does not present it to the issuer for registration of transfer. Possession of the security by the pledgee effectively prevents the pledgor from transferring it to another purchaser and places the pledgee in the position where registration of transfer can be obtained in the event of the pledgor's default. When the loan is repaid, as most loans are, the securities, still registered in the pledgor's name, are returned to the pledgor. This procedure avoids two unnecessary registrations of transfer—pledgor to pledgee and, then, pledgee back to pledgor.

Furthermore, while the loan is outstanding, the pledgor, who remains the registered owner, continues to receive reports, proxy materials, and periodic dividend or interest payments, directly from the issuer and without inconvenience to the pledgee. This is precisely the result normally intended by the parties to the pledge transaction. See § 9-207(2)(c). Hence, even in the pledge context, the rule of § 8-207(1), notwithstanding the existence of dual interests in the security, generally produces results that are both efficient and fair.

2. The Problem

Section 8-207(1) does not define or limit the phrase "all the rights and powers of an owner." If that phrase is construed, as it logically might be, to include the right to receive all distributions, the issuer may, with impunity, distribute, to the registered owner, not only regular cash dividends and interest payments, but also extraordinary cash dividends, negotiable securities in connection with stock dividends, stock splits and spin-offs and, indeed, cash in complete liquidation of stock or partial or complete redemption of debt or redeemable equity securities.

Thus, the pledgee that fails to present its collateral for registration of transfer subjects itself to the continuing risk that the issuer will distribute cash and/or negotiable securities to the pledgor, which, if not turned over to the pledgee as the pledge agreement would normally require, will have the effect of substantially reducing or eliminating the value of the collateral in its possession. For example, the distribution of stock to the pledgor, in connection with a two-for-one split, would leave the pledgee with collateral worth only half its pre-split value, and the distribution of cash to the pledgor, as a final liquidating dividend, would render the pledgee's collateral worthless.

The pledgee, of course, is not without power to avoid these dire consequences. It could, routinely, present its collateral for registration of transfer in every pledge transaction, but only with the attendant extra expense, which would ultimately be borne by all borrowers. Alternatively, it can evaluate the risk in any particular transaction, taking into account such factors as the financial strength and integrity of the pledgor, the identity of the issuers and the likelihood that any contemplated extraordinary distributions will receive advance public notice, the extent to which the pledged securities are diversified, and the magnitude of any collateral "cushion." The fact remains, however, that part of the price paid for the protection afforded the issuer by § 8-207(1) is the risk borne by the pledgee who does not register the transfer.

3. The Cases

It is encouraging to note that only two reported cases have raised the question of the scope of issuer protection for distributions made to registered owners pursuant to § 8-207(1). Because of the aberrational fact situations involved, neither case directly addressed the issue as stated.

In New England Merchants Bank of Boston v. Old Colony Trust Co., 385 Mass. 24, 429 N.E.2d 1143, 32 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1592 (Mass. 1982), affirming 11 Mass.App. 539, 417 N.E.2d 471, 30 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1661 (Mass.App.1981), the issuer, in paying a liquidating dividend, did not rely on § 8-207(1), which permits, but does not require, an issuer to recognize the registered owner, without further proof, as the person entitled to receive distributions. Rather, with an abundance of prudence, it required surrender of the stock certificates as a condition of payment. The certificates that were surrendered had been issued to the registered owner, five years earlier, to replace the original certificates which the owner had asserted were lost. Pursuant to § 8-405(2), the issuer had obtained a lost securities indemnity bond.

The claimant was the administrator of an intestate estate who had found the original certificates among the decedent's papers. Apparently, they had been delivered to the decedent, endorsed in blank, almost thirty years before, and no attempt had been made to have the transfer registered on the books of the issuer. Upon surrender of the certificates to the issuer, the claimant demanded payment of the liquidating dividend.

In denying the claim, the court stated: (1) that payment to the registered owner, pursuant to § 8-207(1) constitutes a defense against the possessor of the certificates; (2) that § 8-207(1) makes no distinction between ordinary and liquidating dividends; and (3) that the plaintiff had not established that he was a bona fide purchaser, implying that the result might have been different if he had so established. The question of bona fide purchase is relevant to the case, but only under the provisions of § 8-405(3), which deals with the rights of the holder of a security that has been reported lost and has previously been replaced.

In Bank of Honolulu v. Hawaii Corp., 829 F.2d 813, 4 UCC Rep.Serv.2d (Callaghan) 837 (9th Cir.1987), reversing 59 B.R. 410, 42 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1736 (Bkcy.D.Haw.1986), the claimant, a pledgee bank that had received stock certificates as collateral for a loan to the issuer's president, was unquestionably a bona fide purchaser. Subsequently, the issuer entered a Chapter X bankruptcy proceeding. The issuer's Trustee brought suit against the pledgor which was ultimately settled. As part of the settlement, the pledgor released the Trustee from "all claims . . . or interests." When it later developed that there would be a distribution to stockholders, the bank filed a Proof of Stock Interest, based on the pledged stock.

The Trustee refused to honor the bank's Proof on the ground that § 8-207(1) permitted the issuer to treat the pledgor, who remained the registered owner, as the person who could "exercise all the rights and powers of an owner." In his view, these included the right to dispose of the stock, free of the pledgee's interest, in what was, essentially, a privately negotiated transaction. The trial court agreed.

The Ninth Circuit reversed, ordering entry of judgment for the bank. In so holding, however, the court stated: (1) that payment, even pursuant to § 8-207(1), does not constitute "a defense . . . going to the validity of the security," which, in the court's view, is required under § 8-105(2)(c); (2) "that § 8-207 is meant to apply [only] in what might be called the normal case . . . the payment of dividends in the normal course of business"; and (3) that "negotiability is negated when the transferror retains rights which . . . will frustrate the exercise of rights by the transferee."

While the results in both these cases are probably correct under their own peculiar facts, the gratuitous statements of the respective courts, supporting their holdings, are in conflict with each other and tend to confuse, rather than clarify, the proper construction of the intent, scope, and limitations of § 8-207(1).

CONCLUSION

In light of this confusion, and in an effort to promote a reasonable and uniform construction of § 8-207(1), the Board offers the following guidelines:

(1) A distribution to the registered owner of a security is protected under § 8-207(1) only if it is distributable to the owners of all securities of the same issue. This rule would prevent an issuer from acquiring a security, free of claims, in a negotiated transaction with the registered owner without requiring surrender of the security. In such a transaction, which is, in effect, a purchase rather than a distribution by the issuer, requiring delivery of the security imposes no burden on the issuer that is not borne by any purchaser. It supports the result in the Hawaii case.

(2) If the terms of a security require its surrender as a condition of payment or exchange, a distribution to the registered owner in payment or exchange is not protected under § 8-207(1) unless the security is surrendered. The requirement of surrender is commonly included in the terms of debt securities, redeemable equity securities, and convertible securities. Since the outstanding security is rendered worthless by the redemption or exchange, it is clearly in the interest of all concerned to get it out of circulation. Even if surrender is not required by the terms of the security, issuers may, and, as a matter of prudence, frequently do, as did the issuer in the New England Merchants case, require surrender as a condition of payment of a liquidating dividend.

(3) Distributions to all the registered owners of a security, the terms of which do not require the surrender thereof, are protected under § 8-207(1), regardless of the regularity, amount, or nature of such distributions. This rule rejects the suggestion that only regular dividend and interest payments can be safely distributed to the registered owners. The issuer's lack of knowledge of unregistered transfers, which requires protection for regular payments to the registered owners, also demands similar protection for the distributions in stock dividends, stock splits, spin-offs, and other extraordinary distributions, even though they may substantially impair the value of the outstanding securities.

(4) A distribution to the registered owner that is protected under § 8-207(1) constitutes a defense against a claim to such distribution by a person in possession of the security, even if such person is a bona fide purchaser. The entire purpose of § 8-207(1) would be vitiated if a distribution protected by it could not be successfully asserted against a claim by a person in possession of the security, who, in most cases, will be a bona fide purchaser. This result can be justified by charging the transferee who elects not to register a transfer with knowledge of § 8-207(1) and notice that any distributions protected under that section will be made directly to the registered owner.

The Board believes that these guidelines strike a proper balance between the right of an issuer to rely solely on its registration records in making distributions and the ability of a pledgee to rely on its possession of a security to protect it against diminutions of value that cannot be reasonably anticipated.

The Official Comment to § 8-207 is supplemented by the addition of the following paragraph, immediately following the first paragraph of Official Comment 1:

> The issuer may, under this section, make distributions of money or securities to the registered owners of certificated securities without requiring further proof of ownership, provided that such distributions are distributable to the owners of all securities of the same issue and the terms of the security do not require its surrender as a condition of payment or exchange. Any such distribution shall constitute a defense against a claim for the same distribution by a person, even if that person is in possession of the security and is a bona fide purchaser of the security. PEB COMMENTARY NO. 5
SECTION 9-306(5)

ISSUE

Section 9-306(5)(b) gives a purchaser of a conditional sales contract or other chattel paper ("chattel paper financer") a security interest in the goods covered by the chattel paper against the seller of the goods (and of the chattel paper) if the chattel paper financer is "unpaid" and the goods are "returned to or are repossessed by the seller or the secured party." If the chattel paper financer had obtained priority in the chattel paper pursuant to § 9-308 over a secured party with a security interest in the seller's goods ("inventory financer"), does § 9-306(5)(b) enable the chattel paper financer to retain that priority without having to further perfect "for protection" under § 9-306(5)(d) against the inventory financer?

DISCUSSION

The issue will usually arise in the context of the following fact situation: (I) Secured Party #1 ("inventory financer") has a perfected security interest in all the inventory of a dealer in goods ("Dealer"); (II) Dealer sells some of its inventory to a buyer in the ordinary course of business ("BIOCOB") pursuant to a conditional sales contract ("chattel paper"); and (III) Secured Party #2 ("chattel paper financer") purchases the chattel paper from Dealer and takes possession of the paper in the ordinary course of its business.

Secured Party #1's security interest in the sold goods terminates under § 9-307(1) when they are sold to BIOCOB. However, Secured Party #1's security interest continues in the chattel paper as proceeds. If the goods are thereafter returned to Dealer, § 9-306(5)(a) provides that "if the goods were collateral at the time of sale for an indebtedness of the seller which is still unpaid," Secured Party #1's security interest in the goods "attaches again to the goods and continues as a perfected security interest." In effect, the returned goods are proceeds of the chattel paper.

Section 9-306(5)(b) also gives Secured Party #2 a security interest in the same returned goods against Dealer and states that this security interest is "prior to a security interest under [§ 9-306(5)(a)] to the extent that the [chattel paper financer] was entitled to priority under Section 9-308." This interplay between § 9-306(5)(a) and (b) arises in the following two circumstances.

First, when BIOCOB's obligation is terminated because the goods are returned to Dealer pursuant to an agreement with Dealer or because BIOCOB had a right to rescind the sale, e.g., revoke acceptance under § 2-608. See Official Comment 4 to § 9-306(5). In that circumstance, the goods once again become part of Dealer's inventory and are subject to Secured Party #1's security interest. However, because Secured Party #2 has not been paid pursuant to the chattel paper, § 9-306(5)(b) gives Secured Party #2, as an "unpaid transferee" of the chattel paper, a security interest in the goods against Dealer to secure the amount remaining unpaid under

Second, when the goods are repossessed because BIOCOB has defaulted under the chattel paper and are returned to Dealer whereat Secured Party #2 then sells the goods pursuant to § 9-504. In that circumstance, if the goods are purchased at the foreclosure sale either (a) by Dealer or (b) by Secured Party #2 who then conveys the goods to Dealer pursuant to an agreement by Dealer to repurchase the goods, § 9-306(5) is applicable if Dealer does not then pay Secured Party #2 the purchase price.[2] In both of these instances, the goods once again become part of Dealer's inventory and are subject to Secured Party #1's security interest. However, because Dealer has not paid Secured Party #2 the purchase price for the goods, § 9-306(5)(b) gives Secured Party #2, as an unpaid transferee, a security interest in the goods against Dealer to secure Dealer's obligation to pay the purchase price, i.e. the successful bid price at the foreclosure sale[3] or the amount due under the repurchase agreement,[4] as the case may be.

This security interest of Secured Party #2 in the goods against Dealer is separate and distinct from the security interest evidenced by the chattel paper itself in which BIOCOB is the debtor. It attaches to the goods when returned to Dealer, whether voluntarily or through revocation of acceptance or repossession, and upon Dealer acquiring "rights in the collateral" by reason of the (i) revocation of acceptance or (ii) agreement with BIOCOB or (iii) purchase of the goods at the foreclosure sale or (iv) repurchase agreement. § 9-203(1)(c). In essence, Secured Party #2 has a security interest against Dealer in the returned goods as the proceeds of the secured transaction represented by the purchase of the chattel paper from the Dealer. In both instances, Secured Party #2 is the secured party and Dealer is the debtor. " . . . When the underlying goods are returned or repos-

[1]Dealer's sale of the chattel paper is usually accompanied by a warranty that the chattel paper is genuine, valid and enforceable according to its term. Inasmuch as BIOCOB's obligation has been terminated, Secured Party has lost the benefit of the bargain it made in purchasing the chattel paper from Dealer, i.e., the right to receive all payments required thereunder. Dealer, who has reacquired the goods, either by agreement or because BIOCOB had the right to revoke acceptance, is, therefore, liable to Secured Party #2 for those remaining payments.

[2]Frequently, there will be an agreement that Dealer need not pay the purchase price until it is able to re-sell the goods.

[3]When the sale or disposition to enforce the security interest in the goods is made, the proceeds are applied to BIOCOB's indebtedness under the chattel paper and BIOCOB is entitled to any surplus and liable for any deficiency. § 9-504(1) and (2). The amount due from Dealer on the sale is usually the same as the amount due under the chattel paper, but might be a different amount. Secured Party #2's security interest against Dealer terminates upon payment of that amount to Secured Party #2, but if that amount is less than that due under the chattel paper, BIOCOB remains liable to Secured Party #2 for that deficiency.

[4]Instead of an agreement for Dealer to repurchase the goods, there could be an agreement to repurchase the chattel paper. That repurchase is not a sale or disposition under § 9-504(5). Upon that repurchase, Dealer becomes the secured party. If Dealer then sells the goods under § 9-504 and buys them at the sale, the same analysis applies. That is, the goods are once again part of Dealer's inventory and subject to Secured Party #1's security interest; but, if Dealer has not paid the repurchase price to Secured Party #2, § 9-306(5)(b) likewise gives Secured Party #2, as an unpaid transferee, a security interest in the goods against Dealer to secure Dealer's obligation to pay that repurchase price.

sessed, the chattel paper interest automatically shifts to the goods . . .." 2 Gilmore, Security Interests in Personal Property, § 27.5.

Under § 9-306(5)(b), Secured Party #2's security interest in the returned goods against Dealer is

> " . . . prior to a security interest under paragraph (a) [i.e. that of Secured Party #1] to the extent that the transferee of the chattel paper [Secured Party #2] was entitled to priority under Section 9-308."

In the above circumstances, Secured Party #2 had priority in the chattel paper at the time it purchased the chattel paper for new value from Dealer over Secured Party #1's claim to the chattel paper as proceeds of the inventory. § 9-308(b). Accordingly, § 9-306(5)(b) gives Secured Party #2 priority over Secured Party #1 in the returned goods. This result is consistent with the policy of encouraging the purchase of chattel paper reflected by § 9-308. Furthermore, it is not unfair to Secured Party #1 because Secured Party #1 is entitled to receive the money paid to Dealer by Secured Party #2 upon purchase of the chattel paper as proceeds of its security interest in the goods sold to BIOCOB.[5]

The interpretative problem is presented by § 9-306(5)(d):

> "A security interest of an unpaid transferee [Secured Party #2] asserted under paragraph (b) . . . must be perfected for protection against creditors of the transferor [Dealer] and purchasers of the returned or repossessed goods."

Does this negate § 9-306(5)(b) and mean that Secured Party #2 does not have priority over Secured Party #1 in the returned goods under § 9-306(5)(b) unless Secured Party #2's security interest in the goods is perfected against Dealer? Stated differently, is Secured Party #1 a "creditor" of Dealer or a "purchaser" of the returned or repossessed goods within the purview of § 9-306(5)(d)?[6] Furthermore, assuming Secured Party #1 is such a "creditor" or "purchaser," does the requirement that Secured Party #2's security interest be "perfected for protection" against Secured Party #1 mean that Secured Party #2 must acquire priority under § 9-312? If Secured Party #1's position was prior in time under § 9-312(5)(a), must Secured Party #2 somehow follow a procedure sufficient to give it a purchase money super-priority over Secured Party #1? This priority issue will be significant in the event Secured Party #1 and Secured Party #2 both claim the goods or the proceeds of any sale or disposition thereof by Dealer.

J.I. Case v. Borg-Warner, 669 S.W.2d 543, 37 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1025 (Ky.App.1984), and Northwest Accept. Corp. v. Lynnwood Equipment, Inc., 1 UCC Rep.Serv.2d (Callaghan) 980, motion for reconsideration denied, 1 UCC Rep.Serv.2d (Callaghan) 171 (D.W.D.Wash.1986), both held that the chattel paper financer had priority without having to take further action to perfect with respect to the inventory financer. The courts held

[5] If Secured Party #2 had purchased accounts instead of chattel paper, § 9-306(5)(c) subordinates Secured Party #2 to Secured Party #1's rights in the returned goods. This Commentary does not undertake to explore this different treatment for purchasers of accounts—or the reasons for this difference.

that in the context of § 9-306(5) the definitions of "creditor" and "purchaser" in § 1-201 are not applicable to Secured Party #1. Since Secured Party #1 is neither a "creditor" nor "purchaser" as used in § 9-306(5)(d), Secured Party #2 has priority under § 9-306(5)(b). These decisions are consistent with the intent of §§ 9-306(5)(b) and 9-308. See 2 Gilmore, Security Interests in Personal Property, § 27.5; Smith, Annual Survey: Secured Transactions, 40 The Business Lawyer 1487, 1505–1508 (1985). Cf. the opposite treatment of a transferee of accounts under § 9-306(5)(c). To conclude otherwise (i.e. that Secured Party #1 is a "creditor" or "purchaser") would nullify the intent of § 9-306(5)(b). Crocker Nat. Bank v. Clark, 724 F.2d 696, 37 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 673 (8th Cir.1984), holding that the inventory financer was a "creditor" is not consistent with this analysis.

The drafting history to § 9-306(5) demonstrates that the inventory financer (Secured Party #1) is neither a "creditor" nor a "purchaser" within the purview of § 9-306(5)(d). In the 1952 Official Draft of the UCC, § 9-306(5) read as follows:

> "(5) If collateral which has been sold is returned to the debtor, the following rules determine the priorities:
> (a) As between the debtor and a secured party to whom the indebtedness originally secured by the collateral has not been paid, the original security interest continues;
> (b) As between the debtor and an unpaid transferee of the chattel paper arising from the sale, the transferee shall have a security interest in the property returned, but such security interest must be perfected for protection against third parties;
> (c) The security interest of an unpaid transferee under (b) shall have priority over a security interest claimed under (a)."

This section was redrafted to its present form pursuant to the 1956 Recommendations of the Editorial Board. The revision covered repossessions in addition to returns and added present subsection (c) which affords subordinate priority status to the purchaser of an account. The rule of former subsection (c) which affords first priority to the chattel paper purchaser was carried over to present subsection (b).

Present § 9-306(5)(d) states the rule that both the chattel paper purchaser and the account purchaser must be "perfected for protection against creditors of the transferor and purchasers of the returned or repossessed goods." The 1952 Draft, which had dealt only with the priority of the chattel paper purchaser, had set forth the same rule in then § 9-306(5)(b):

> "As between the debtor and an unpaid transferee of the chattel paper arising from the sale, the transferee shall have a security interest in the property returned, but such security interest must be perfected for protection against third parties." (emphasis supplied)

It is evident from that 1952 Draft that "third parties" as used in subsection (b) did not include "a security interest claimed under (a)," because that interest was expressly covered in subsection (c). Rather, "third parties" could have referred only to "creditors of the transferor and purchasers of the returned or repossessed goods," namely, the parties more particularly identified in the reformulation of the same rule now set forth in § 9-306(5)(d). That is, "third parties" meant "creditors of the transferor"

Accordingly, the meaning and intent of "perfected for protection" in § 9-306(5)(d) is that by reason of the goods being in the possession of Dealer, Secured Party #2 must give constructive notice of its security interest in those goods by filing a financing statement against Dealer in order to be perfected against those creditors and purchasers of Dealer (other than Secured Party #1) as to whom an unperfected security interest would otherwise be subordinate under § 9-301. Secured Party #2 should file a signed financing statement covering those returned goods either at the time it first purchases the chattel paper or prior to returning the repossessed goods to Dealer. Note, however, that filing the financing statement does not affect Secured Party #2's rights against Secured Party #1 under § 9-306(5) and will not protect Secured Party #2 against the risk that the goods may be sold by Dealer to buyers in the ordinary course of business who will take free of that security interest. § 2-403(2); § 9-307(1); see the fifth paragraph of Official Comment 4 to § 9-306.

If Secured Party #2 fails to perfect against Dealer, it will retain its priority against Secured Party #1 but may become subordinate to others under § 9-301. This may result in a circular priority, the resolution of which is beyond the scope of this Commentary. See 2 Gilmore, Security Interests in Personal Property, § 27.5.

CONCLUSION

"Creditors" and "purchasers" as used in § 9-306(5)(d) do not include the original secured inventory financer of the seller of goods under subsection (a). Accordingly, a purchaser of chattel paper generated by a sale of the goods by that seller, attaining priority over the inventory financer under § 9-308, retains that priority in the event the goods covered by that chattel paper are returned to the seller, without having to further perfect against that inventory financer.

The Official Comment to § 9-306 is amended by adding the following:

5. "Creditors" and "purchasers" as used in paragraph (5)(d) do not include the original secured inventory financer of the seller of goods under subsection (a). If a purchaser of chattel paper generated by a sale of the goods attains priority over the seller's inventory financer under Section 9-308, the purchaser retains that priority in the event the goods covered by the chattel paper are returned to the seller, without having to further perfect against the inventory financer. This priority issue will usually arise in the context of the original inventory financer and the chattel paper purchaser both claiming the goods or the proceeds of any sale or disposition thereof by the seller. See PEB Commentary No. 5, dated March 10, 1990.

PEB COMMENTARY NO. 6
SECTION 9-301(1)

ISSUE

Section 9-301(1) provides (with an exception that is not relevant here) that a security interest is subordinate to members of various specified classes (herein called "the protected classes") who acquired their interests while the security interest was unperfected, subject to conditions set forth for each specified class.

When a security interest is subordinated under this rule in favor of a member of a protected class, does the security interest continue subordinated under the "shelter principle" to an assignee of that protected person, although the assignee does not fit the specific requirements for a member of the protected class because he acquired his interest after the security interest was perfected? In other words, does the protected status of an assignor "shelter" the position of an assignee who by himself would not meet the standards for protection?

DISCUSSION

A right of ownership of personal property ordinarily consists in part of the right to transfer it to others in the same form and with the same attributes, e.g., freedom from competing ownership interests or defenses or security interests that are not valid against the transferring owner. This right is known as the "shelter principle."

Section 2-403(1) states the shelter principle: "A purchaser of goods acquires all title which his transferor had . . .." As Official Comment 1 states: "The basic principle of our law is generally continued and expanded under subsection (1)." [emphasis added]. Since the principle existed before the Code, it is not dependent on its codification in § 2-403(1). Examples of its use appear in four Articles of the Code:

(a) Sections 3-201(1) and Official Comment 3, 3-305 and Official Comment, and 3-306 and Official Comment 1 illustrate the concept. These provisions set forth the ability of a holder in due course of a negotiable instrument to transfer the instrument free of the defenses and claims which the transferor's status as holder in due course has cut off. It is clear that the transferor's status as holder in due course and the value of his ownership of the instrument would be impaired if he could not transfer the instrument and confer the same status upon his transferee without the transferee qualifying on his own as a holder in due course (when the transfer was a gift or because the instrument had matured or because the transferee had knowledge of a defect). To protect the holder in due course fully, the law must protect the holder's transferee.

(b) Similar shelter provisions are found in connection with equivalent negotiability rules in §§ 8-301(1) and 8-302(4) and Official Comment 5 to the latter.

(c) Similar shelter provisions are found in connection with equivalent negotiability rules in §§ 7-504(1) and 7-502(1).

(d) A similar shelter provision in respect to property rights other than those resting on negotiability is found in Article 9, § 9-313(4)(b). Under specified circumstances this provision gives the holder of a security interest in a fixture priority over the interest of an owner or an incumbrancer of the realty; but this rule is expressly subject to the condition that a real estate interest is not subordinated to the fixture security interest if the real estate interest's predecessor in title was not subject to defeat by the fixture security interest, thus applying the shelter principle. For variation of the shelter principle, see also § 9-313(6), which shelters refinancings of a superior interest from a subordinate interest which would otherwise have priority over the later refinancing.

The case of Aircraft Trading and Services, Inc. v. Braniff, Inc., 819 F.2d 1227, 3 UCC Rep.Serv.2d (Callaghan) 1297 (2d Cir.1987), first called attention to the absence of express shelter provisions in § 9-301(1). Simplifying the facts, A sold an aircraft engine to B and took back a purchase-money mortgage (security interest), which for a time A failed to record as required by federal law. B sold the engine to C, who searched the record and ascertained that there was no recorded mortgage. Thus A's mortgage was subordinate to C's interest, under § 9-301(1)(c), which provides that an unperfected security interest is subordinate to a buyer like C to the extent that he gives value and receives delivery of the collateral without knowledge of the security interest and before it is perfected. Thereafter the mortgage was recorded, thus perfecting the security interest, and still later C sold the engine to D. (D had actual knowledge of the recording, but the Court's opinion did not rest on that fact.)

The Court of Appeals held that since D did not acquire his interest while the security interest was unperfected, D's interest was subject to the security interest. The Court identified the shelter principle with § 2-403(1), then rejected its application in reliance on § 2-402(3), which reads: "Nothing in this Article should be deemed to impair the rights of creditors of the seller (a) under the provisions of the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9) . . .." This Commentary does not adhere to that interpretation. Application of the shelter principle of § 2-403(1) in favor of a buyer from one who has obtained senior status under § 9-301(1) does not "impair the rights of creditors." The rights of the unperfected secured creditor have already been impaired by the operation of § 9-301(1). The shelter principle should be applied to protect D. Otherwise the value of C's status, as one taking free of the security interest, is unjustifiably impaired if he cannot confer that status upon his transferee. Section 2-402(3)(a) does not compel a different result. Article 2 does not apply the shelter principle, although the principle is stated in § 2-403(1) as an introduction to rules stating when the purchaser can receive more than the transferor had.

Once a protected party achieves such senior rights, § 9-301(1) should not be construed to interfere with those rights and the shelter principle should be deemed applicable. The Code is a "complex and interrelated statutory scheme." Bank of Honolulu v. Hawaii Corp., 829 F.2d 813, 815, 4 UCC Rep.Serv.2d (Callaghan) 837, 841 (9th Cir.1987). The Code should be interpreted to produce equivalent results in situations comparable to the four cited above. This broad approach is supported by § 1-102 and its Official Comment 1.

CONCLUSION

Underlying principles of fairness require a broad reading and a broad application of the shelter concept, even when not expressly stated. The importance of shelter is too great in the Code's scheme to support a narrow reading of the Code. Section 9-301(1) should be interpreted and applied in this circumstance to incorporate the shelter principle so that a member of a protected class who prevails thereunder can transfer what he has, even though the security interest which was unperfected when the transferor acquired his rights has since been perfected. The shelter principle also should operate even though the transferee from the protected party has knowledge of the earlier subordinated security interest. The Official Comment to § 9-301 is amended by adding the following:

9. There is no conflict between the principle of § 9-301(1) and the "shelter principle," which is applied at several points in the statute, but is most explicitly stated in § 2-403(1): "A purchaser of goods acquires all title which his transferor had . . .."

Although § 9-301(1) fails to state the shelter principle expressly, that principle is applicable where a person who had met the conditions for prevailing over an unperfected security interest transfers his right to another person after the security interest is perfected. See PEB Commentary No. 6, dated March 10, 1990.

The rules for subordination of unperfected security interests have a purpose—in common with similar rules in all filing and recording systems—to impose sanctions for not adhering to filing or recording requirements. Such rules are necessary to make the system effective and enforce the policy against secret liens. The shelter principle recognizes that when a person in a protected class transfers his right after the security interest has been perfected, the right will be diminished in value unless the sanction is continued. The sanction imposed by § 9-301(1) is that members of protected classes take free of an unperfected security interest. That sanction should be continued to protect transferees from those members in order to fulfill the purpose of the section.

PEB COMMENTARY NO. 7
THE RELATIVE PRIORITIES OF SECURITY INTERESTS IN THE CASH PROCEEDS OF ACCOUNTS, CHATTEL PAPER, AND GENERAL INTANGIBLES

ISSUE

Secured party A and secured party B each has a perfected security interest in the same account, chattel paper, or general intangible, with A having priority over B. If the account debtor makes payment to secured party B, directly or through the debtor, may A recover the payment from B?

DISCUSSION

The issue under discussion arises when two secured parties have a perfected security interest in an account, chattel paper, or general intangible and the secured party that does not have priority (B) receives a payment from the account debtor. The debtor, having received the payment from the account debtor, may remit it to B, or B may receive payment directly from the account debtor. See § 9-502(2) (secured parties' right to notify account debtor to make payment to the secured party); § 9-318(3) (account debtor may discharge obligation by paying assignee after receiving notification that right to receive payment has been assigned and that payment is to be made to assignee). Under these circumstances, may A, the secured party having priority in the account, chattel paper, or general intangible, recover the payment from B?

A. Payment by Check

Article 9 determines the relative priorities of security interests in accounts, chattel paper, and general intangibles. See § 9-312(5) (general rule); § 9-308 (special rule with respect to chattel paper). The Article also determines the relative priorities of security interests in payments made by the account debtor, which payments are the proceeds of the original collateral. See § 9-312(6); § 9-306(1).

When the account debtor pays B by check, or when the debtor indorses and delivers to B a check drawn by the account debtor to the order of the debtor, B will be a holder of the check. If B takes the check under the circumstances described in § 3-302(1), B will be a holder in due course. See § 3-302(1) and (2). A's filed financing statement does not constitute notice to B of A's claim to the check and does not preclude B from being a holder in due course. See § 3-305(1). Specifically, B takes priority over A's earlier, perfected security interest in the check and is entitled to keep the funds received when the check is paid. See § 9-309; Dallas Bank & Trust Co. v. Frigiking, Inc., 692 S.W.2d 163, 41 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1334 (Tex. Ct.App.1985); Thorp Commercial Corp. v. Northgate Industries, Inc., 490 F.Supp. 197, 203–04, 29 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 297, 306–307 (D.Minn. 1980) (alternate holding), rev'd on other grounds, 654 F.2d 1245, 31 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 801 (8th Cir.1981). Contra Bank of the West v.

Commercial Credit Financial Services, Inc., 655 F.Supp. 807, 819–20, 3 UCC Rep.Serv.2d (Callaghan) 240, 258–259 (N.D.Cal.1987), rev'd on other grounds, 852 F.2d 1162, 6 UCC Rep.Serv.2d (Callaghan) 602 (9th Cir. 1988).

Even if B is not a holder in due course, § 9-308 may give priority to B's security interest in the check. But if B takes the check under circumstances that preclude B from being a holder in due course (e.g., if a notation on the check gives B reason to know that the check constitutes A's proceeds) and from taking priority under § 9-308, then B would take the check subject to A's security interest. See § 3-306(a).

B. Payment in Cash

The Code does not specifically address the right of B to retain a cash payment from the account debtor. Accordingly, resort must be had to the principles of law and equity. See § 1-103. Under those principles, when a person assigns the same claim to two persons and the assignee without priority (B) receives payment from the obligor, the assignee receiving payment owes a duty of restitution to the assignee having priority (A). But if B gave value for the assignment (as B must have, see § 9-203(1)(b)) and obtained the payment in good faith and without knowledge or reason to know of the prior assignment, then B may retain the payment. See Restatement, Second, Contracts § 342(b), Comment e & Illustration 3; see also Restatement of Restitution § 126, Comment f & Illustration 8. Cf. § 9-306 Comment 2(c) (recipients of cash proceeds paid from the debtor's checking account in the operation of the debtor's business take free of a security interest in the proceeds). In determining whether B had reason to know of A's security interest, courts should apply § 9-309 by analogy. Otherwise, cash would be rendered less negotiable than a check.

CONCLUSION

Whether B will be entitled to keep a cash payment from an account debtor or will be under a duty of restitution to A depends on whether B received the payment in good faith and without knowledge or reason to know of A's security interest. Whether B will be entitled to keep a payment made by a check drawn by the account debtor depends on whether B is a holder in due course of the check or is entitled to priority under § 9-308. A's filed financing statement should not constitute notice to B of A's security interest in either case.

3. The operation of this section can be seen when two secured parties have a perfected security interest in an account, chattel paper, or general intangible and the secured party that does not have priority receives a payment by check directly or indirectly from the account debtor. If the recipient takes the check under circumstances that give the recipient the rights of a holder in due course (Section 3-302), then the recipient's security interest in the check will take priority over the competing security interest and the recipient will be entitled to keep the payment. See Commentary No. 7, dated March 10, 1990.

The Official Comment to § 9-312 is amended by adding the following:

9. Under some circumstances, a secured party, who does not have priority in an account, chattel paper, or general intangible may be entitled to keep a cash payment received directly or indirectly from the account debtor. See PEB Commentary No. 7, dated March 10, 1990.

PREFACE TO PEB COMMENTARY

The Permanent Editorial Board (PEB) for the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) acts under the authority of The American Law Institute and the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. In March, 1987, the PEB resolved to issue from time to time supplementary commentary on the UCC to be known as PEB Commentary. These PEB Commentaries seek to further the underlying policies of the UCC by affording guidance in interpreting and resolving issues raised by the UCC and/or the Official Comments. The Resolution states that:

"A PEB Commentary should come within one or more of the following specific purposes, which should be made apparent at the inception of the Commentary: (1) to resolve an ambiguity in the UCC by restating more clearly what the PEB considers to be the legal rule; (2) to state a preferred resolution of an issue on which judicial opinion or scholarly writing diverges; (3) to elaborate on the application of the UCC where the statute and/or the Official Comment leaves doubt as to inclusion or exclusion of, or application to, particular circumstances or transactions; (4) consistent with UCC § 1-102(2)(b), to apply the principles of the UCC to new or changed circumstances; (5) to clarify or elaborate upon the operation of the UCC as it relates to other statutes (such as the Bankruptcy Code and various federal and state consumer protection statutes) and general principles of law and equity pursuant to UCC § 1-103; or (6) to otherwise improve the operation of the UCC."

The full Resolution appears in the 1990 Edition of the UCC.

PEB COMMENTARY NO. 8
(AS AMENDED TO APPLY TO REVISED ARTICLE 9)*
SECTION 9-330

ISSUE

Section 9-330(a) provides a special priority rule for purchasers of chattel paper who give new value and take possession, or obtain control, of the chattel paper in the ordinary course of their business. Subsection (a) provides that such purchasers take priority over a security interest in the chattel paper "which is claimed merely as proceeds of inventory subject to a security interest . . . "

This Commentary addresses an issue that may arise under § 9-330(a): When is a security interest in chattel paper "claimed merely as proceeds of inventory subject to a security interest" so that the subsequent chattel paper financer who meets the other requirements of § 9-330(a) takes free of it?

INTRODUCTORY DISCUSSION

Most chattel paper is generated by dealers in automobiles, trucks, machinery, and other durable goods of substantial value. Such dealers frequently sell their chattel paper or use it as collateral for loans. Buyers of chattel paper usually take possession of the paper and collect from the debtors thereon themselves. Also, some lenders on chattel paper will take possession and handle collections. (Financers with a security interest in chattel paper covering smaller appliances, television sets, etc., frequently do not take possession of the paper.)

Under the ordinary priority rules of the Code (first to file or perfect has priority) the buyer of, or lender on, chattel paper would have to make a filing search before the transaction to determine whether a prior party has filed a financing statement covering chattel paper or inventory of which the chattel paper might be proceeds. (If a security interest in inventory is perfected by filing, there is also an automatically perfected proceeds security interest in chattel paper which is generated when inventory subject to the security interest is sold.) A filing search requirement before each transaction would entail substantial delays and significant expense even if the search revealed no prior filed financing statement. In the many cases in which there is a prior filed financing statement covering chattel paper or inventory, or both, the application of the general § 9-322 priority rules would always give the first filer priority. Such a system would make it difficult for any buyer or lender other than the first filed secured party to purchase or lend on the security of chattel paper and would make it particularly difficult for a dealer to deal as to chattel paper with anyone other than the inventory financer. Prior filings would have to be limited to specific chattel paper or subordination agreements or releases would have to be secured from prior filed inventory or chattel paper financers each time items of chattel paper are transferred to a different financer.

*PEB Commentary No. 8 was originally issued in 1991, and covered two issues that arose under former UCC Section 9-308. Revised UCC Section 9-330 continues the basic provisions of former Section 9-308 with minor changes. One of the questions addressed in the original Commentary-whether a financer of chattel paper that takes possession of it has a duty to make inquiry or search to determine whether there is an existing security interest in that chattel paper-is answered in the negative by Comment 6 to Revised UCC Section 9-330. The other question dealt with in the original Commentary-when does a secured party have an interest in chattel paper "merely as proceeds"-is not resolved in Revised UCC Section 9-330 or addressed in the Comments to that section. Accordingly, that discussion has been continued in this amended Commentary, modified to conform to the differences between former UCC Section 9-308 and Revised UCC Section 9-330. Unless otherwise indicated, references in this amended Commentary to sections of Article 9 are references to Revised Article 9.

When Article 9 was being drafted in the 1950s, some financers of chattel paper left it with the dealer who had generated it and others took possession of the paper. The drafters of the Code did not want to disrupt those practices. Therefore, the problem presented to the drafters was how to structure priority rules so that both forms of financing could continue efficiently and safely. The Code drafters might have encouraged the practice of purchasing and taking possession of chattel paper by treating chattel paper like instruments and providing that a security interest in chattel paper could be perfected only by taking possession. That rule, however, would have denied perfected status to security interests in chattel paper left with the debtor and would have disrupted that widely used form of financing. Requiring possession for perfection of chattel paper would also have meant that an inventory financer's proceeds interest in chattel paper would be lost after 20 days unless the financer took possession of the paper. On the other hand, as already noted, applying the ordinary Code priority rules to chattel paper would have imposed substantial impediments to the widespread business of buying and taking possession of chattel paper. The drafters, therefore, struck a compromise between the interests of non-possessory financers of chattel paper and inventory financers with a non-possessory proceeds interest in the paper on the one hand, and, on the other hand, competing chattel paper financers who take possession of the paper. Section 9-330 continues that compromise and extends it to protect financers who gain control of electronic chattel paper. (See § 9-105 regarding control of electronic chattel paper.)

Under that compromise a secured party can have a non-possessory security interest in chattel paper perfected through filing (including a proceeds interest therein) which will be good against subsequent non-possessory security interests and judgment creditors including the trustee in bankruptcy, but, under § 9-330, that security interest will frequently be junior to a chattel paper purchaser who gives new value and takes possession, or obtains control, of the paper in the ordinary course of its business. (See also § 9-322(c) regarding proceeds.)

The above discussion has reviewed the basic reason for the adoption of the rules set out in § 9-330. The discussion now turns to the specific issue arising under § 9-330 which this Commentary addresses.

ISSUE

When is a security interest in chattel paper claimed "merely as proceeds of inventory subject to a security interest" so that a chattel paper financer that gives new value and takes possession, or obtains control, of the paper in the ordinary course of its business has priority unless the chattel paper indicates that it has been assigned to an identified assignee other than the financer?

DISCUSSION

Preliminarily, it should be noted that this issue may be of limited importance since, even if the security interest is more than a mere proceeds interest, the chattel paper financer under § 9-330 will take free of the interest unless it has knowledge that the purchase violates the rights of the secured party. The following discussion should be read with this caveat in mind.

A brief description of two common types of inventory secured financing will help put the discussion of the meaning of a "mere proceeds interest" in its business context.

(a) The first type, which will be called "type A," is inventory financing of automobiles and large items of equipment in which the financing is primarily item by item (each item of inventory secures a precise amount loaned against that item even though there may be a cross-security provision), with a requirement that the associated inventory debt be paid off when the item is sold, or after a maximum period (usually 90 days subject to renewal), whichever first occurs.

(b) The second ("type B") is a general floating loan secured by inventory and receivables (sometimes called an "availability loan") under which the debtor is entitled to borrow from the secured party such amounts as the debtor may desire, subject to a maximum availability determined by a formula, e.g., 50% of cost of saleable inventory plus 80% of the amount of receivables not in default more than 30 days. This type of financing is usually used in situations involving smaller items of inventory as to which it would be too burdensome to account on an individual basis and in which the receivables are accounts rather than chattel paper so that § 9-330 issues do not arise. However, such financing arrangements may sometimes involve larger, more expensive items of inventory which are frequently sold on credit generating chattel paper.

For the reasons stated below, the Board believes that a type A inventory financer will frequently have only a "mere proceeds interest" in chattel paper which is generated when items of inventory subject to its security interest are sold. On the other hand, as noted below, the Board believes that a type B financer has more than a mere proceeds interest in any chattel paper generated on sale of the inventory.

The type A inventory financer having a proceeds claim to the chattel paper must do something more than rest on that proceeds claim in order to prevail against the person described in § 9-330(a)(1), namely, a purchaser who "in good faith and in the ordinary course of the purchaser's business . . . gives new value and takes possession of the chattel paper or obtains control of the chattel paper under Section 9-105." Such an inventory financer takes the chattel paper out of the "mere proceeds" category only by giving value against it in some new transaction. Such a lender gives new value, as it commonly will, by purchasing the chattel paper (or, in some types of transactions, making a specific loan against it). Whether the type A inventory financer will be willing to give value against the chattel paper instead of merely resting on its proceeds claim until payment will depend on the quality of the paper. That quality depends upon such factors as the credit worthiness of the buyer who is the principal obligor on the chattel paper, the amount of the buyer's down payment and hence the amount of the chattel paper debt as compared to the value of the collateral (the former inventory), and the terms under which the dealer (the former inventory debtor) is willing to assume full or limited recourse to support the buyer's obligation under the chattel paper. Not infrequently the financer and the dealer will negotiate a package purchase of several items of chattel paper in which the total price is determined by the quality of the paper, the extent of the recourse, and so on. When the financer buys, or lends against, chattel paper in the way just outlined, there is a "new transaction" by which the financer has acquired an interest in the specific chattel paper which is more than a "mere proceeds interest."

If, however, the type A inventory financer does not by some new transaction give value against specific chattel paper, the fact that the inventory debt is unpaid and that the security agreement specifically claims the chattel paper proceeds as additional collateral does not give the financer more than a mere proceeds interest. Further, while no doubt much inventory financing is carried out with nominal profit to the financer in anticipation that it will be given the opportunity to acquire the chattel paper, in the Board's opinion this anticipation of receiving the chattel paper does not take the case out of the "mere proceeds" phrase of the statute.

As pointed out above, the Board believes that the type B financer at all times has more than a mere proceeds interest in the chattel paper on hand whether or not at any specific time there is sufficient inventory on hand to secure the amount of the loan outstanding at that time. The structure of the deal is such that the chattel paper is part of the primary collateral for the debt. That interest extends to any chattel paper subsequently generated by a sale of inventory whether or not at any particular time the existing inventory is adequate security for the debt actually outstanding.

A number of reported cases under former Article 9 involved priority conflicts between inventory financers and purchasers of chattel paper who took possession, gave new value, and acted in the ordinary course of their business. In those cases, the courts applied the "mere proceeds" rules of former § 9-308, and the chattel paper financer always won.[1] The courts have not always carefully reported the facts, but it is clear that in at least one of the cases, the security agreement did specifically claim an interest in chattel paper and the court did not treat that fact as significant.[2] In most of the cases, the court did not carefully consider whether the chattel paper financer had knowledge of the prior interest in the chattel paper, but in several cases the court either assumed that the chattel paper financer had knowledge or the findings of fact show that the chattel paper financer did have knowledge.[3] The results in all those cases are consistent with the position taken in this Commentary.

CONCLUSION

If a financer loans or extends credit for the cost of specific items of inventory and expects to be paid upon the sale of the items, the financer's security interest in chattel paper generated when the items are sold is a mere proceeds interest unless the financer in a new transaction gives value against the specific paper. On the other hand, a lender who agrees to lend up to a specified percentage of the cost of inventory and of receivables has more than a mere proceeds interest in chattel paper which is a part of the receivables covered by the security agreement. In inventory financing transactions which do not fall within the above two categories, whether the financer has more than a mere proceeds interest in chattel paper generated when inventory subject to its secured interest is sold must be determined from an examination of all the facts of the case.

Preface to PEB Commentary

The Permanent Editorial Board (PEB) for the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) acts under the authority of The American Law Institute and the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. In March, 1987, the PEB resolved to issue from time to time supplementary commentary on the UCC to be known as PEB Commentary. These PEB Commentaries seek to further the underlying policies of the UCC by affording guidance in interpreting and resolving issues raised by the UCC and/or the Official Comments. The Resolution states that:

> "A PEB Commentary should come within one or more of the following specific purposes, which should be made apparent at the inception of the Commentary: (1) to resolve an ambiguity in the UCC by restating more clearly what the PEB considers to be the legal rule; (2) to state a preferred resolution of an issue on which judicial opinion or scholarly writing diverges; (3) to elaborate on the application of the UCC where the statute and/or the Official Comment leaves doubt as to inclusion or exclusion of, or application to, particular circumstances or transactions; (4) consistent with UCC § 1-102(2)(b), to apply the principles of the UCC to new or changed circumstances; (5) to clarify or elaborate upon the operation of the UCC as it relates to other statutes (such as the Bankruptcy Code and various federal and state consumer protection statutes) and general principles of law and equity pursuant to UCC § 1-103; or (6) to otherwise improve the operation of the UCC."

The full Resolution appears in the 1990 Edition of the UCC.

PEB COMMENTARY NO. 9
SECTION 9-306(1)

ISSUE

Section 9-306(1) provides: " 'Proceeds' includes whatever is received upon the sale, exchange, collection or other disposition of collateral or proceeds." Where a debtor has granted to a secured party a security interest in goods and the debtor later leases those goods as lessor, do the lease rentals constitute proceeds of the secured party's collateral?

DISCUSSION

Where a debtor has granted to a secured party a security interest in goods that the debtor later leases as lessor, the lease rentals would constitute proceeds of the secured party's collateral for the reason that the debtor's conveyance of a leasehold interest in the goods constitutes a disposition of the goods for purposes of § 9-306(1).

This would certainly be the case where the lease creates a security interest under § 1-201(37). In that instance the lease is nothing more than a disguised sale of the goods, and the secured party would be entitled to a security interest in any chattel paper or payments on that chattel paper, all as proceeds resulting from that sales transaction. The following examples illustrate this conclusion:

Example 1. Debtor grants to Secured Party a security interest in Debtor's drill press. Debtor sells the drill press to Buyer who pays for the drill press by issuing to Debtor Buyer's five-year promissory note secured by a security interest in the drill press. The promissory note and security interest together constitute chattel paper under § 9-105(1)(b), and, since the chattel paper was received by Debtor upon the sale of the drill press, the chattel paper constitutes proceeds of Secured Party's collateral. When payments are made by Buyer on the promissory note, those payments, arising upon the "collection" of "proceeds," also constitute proceeds of Secured Party's collateral.

Example 2. Debtor grants to Secured Party a security interest in Debtor's drill press. Debtor leases the drill press to Lessee for a fixed term of five years not subject to termination by Lessee. The drill press is predicted to have exhausted its useful life at the end of that five-year term, and Lessee will then be entitled to purchase the drill press for the cash sum of $10. The lease constitutes chattel paper under § 9-105(1)(b). Since the chattel paper was received by Debtor upon the granting to Lessee of a leasehold interest for the entire useful life of the drill press and Lessee can become the owner of the drill press at the end of the nonterminable lease term by paying a nominal consideration, the transaction will be viewed as creating a security interest under § 1-201(37) and will be treated for Article 9 purposes as a disguised sale. Just as the chattel paper arising upon the sale of the drill press in Example 1 constituted proceeds of Secured Party's collateral, so does the chattel paper arising upon the granting of a security lease constitute proceeds of Secured Party's collateral in this example; the two transactions have precisely the same economic effect although labeled by the parties as a "sale" in Example 1 and a "lease" in this example. Similarly, when rental payments are made by Lessee on the security lease, those payments, arising upon the "collection" of "proceeds," also constitute proceeds of Secured Party's collateral.

In both Example 1 and Example 2 it is irrelevant to the payments to Debtor being treated as proceeds whether the sale or lease was authorized by Secured Party or whether the drill press constituted equipment or inventory in the hands of Debtor. This is because under § 9-306(2) Secured Party's security interest will continue "in any identifiable proceeds including collections received by the debtor" even when the disposition of the collateral was authorized by the Secured Party or where the collateral subject to the disposition was transferred to a buyer in the ordinary course as contemplated by § 9-307(1).

Lease rentals would also constitute proceeds of a secured party's collateral consisting of goods where the subsequent lease of those goods creates a "true" lease governed by Article 2A. Consider the following example:

Example 3. Debtor grants to Secured Party a security interest in Debtor's drill press which then has a predicted useful life of five years. Debtor leases the drill press to Lessee for a fixed term, not subject to termination by Lessee, of two years with no purchase option. The lease would appear to be a "true" lease governed by Article 2A. See §§ 1-201(37), 2A-102, and 2A-103(1)(j). Once again, the lease constitutes chattel paper under § 9-105(1)(b). The chattel paper was received by Debtor upon the granting of a leasehold interest in the drill press for a non-terminable period of two years out of a predicted useful life of the drill press of five years. Debtor has remaining to it a residual interest in the drill press, i.e., a right to the drill press arising only at the end of the two-year lease term. See § 2A-103(1)(q) (defining "lessor's residual interest"). But an interest in the drill press constituting a right by Lessee to use the drill press for a two-year period out of the drill press's predicted five-year useful life was conveyed by Debtor to Lessee. The granting of the leasehold interest constitutes a disposition of a portion of Debtor's interest in the drill press, and the chattel paper arising upon that disposition constitutes proceeds of Secured Party's collateral. When rental payments are made by Lessee on the true lease, those payments, arising upon the "collection" of "proceeds," also constitute proceeds of Secured Party's collateral.

The foregoing analysis in Example 3, by concluding that the granting of a true leasehold interest in goods constitutes a "disposition" of the goods for purposes of § 9-306(1), is consistent with the common law rule that the granting of a real estate leasehold interest constitutes a disposition of a portion of the lessor's ownership interest in the leased estate. See, e.g., Hueschen v. Stalie, 98 N.M. 696, 652 P.2d 246 (1982) (real estate lease is a conveyance of an estate for a limited term with conditions); Powell, Law of Real Property, § 221 (1990). It is also consistent with Article 9 cases which treat the totality of a debtor's interest in goods as comprising the debtor's leasehold interest as lessor plus the debtor's residual interest in the leased goods as owner, with the necessity of a secured party's security interest in the leasehold being perfected in one manner (e.g., possession or filing as to the chattel paper) and its security interest in the lessor's residual interest being perfected in another manner (e.g., filing as to the goods). See, e.g., In re Leasing Consultants, Inc., 486 F.2d 367, 13 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 189 (2d Cir.1973). Furthermore, this analysis is consistent with Article 2A's definition of a lease being a "transfer" of a right to possession and use of the leased goods even without being a "sale" of the goods. See §§ 2-106(1) and 2A-103(1)(j). Cf. Feldman v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 408 F.Supp. 24, 37–38, 18 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 776, 786–788 (E.D.Pa.1976) (while the court referred to chattel paper as "proceeds" of a security interest in underlying goods, the reference may be viewed as dicta since the secured party had in any event taken possession of the chattel paper). Cases such as General Electric Credit Corp. v. Cleary Brothers Construction Co., Inc. (In re Cleary Brothers Construction Co., Inc.), 9 B.R. 40, 30 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1444 (Bkrtcy.S.D.Fla.1980), and In re A.E.I. Corp., 11 B.R. 97, 31 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1467 (Bkrtcy.E.D.Pa.1981), to the extent that they hold that a subsequent lease of goods or payments thereon cannot constitute proceeds of a secured party's pre-existing collateral consisting of the goods, are not consistent with this analysis.

Lease rentals would constitute proceeds of a secured party's collateral consisting of goods even where the subsequent lease of the goods is for a term which is of a short duration in relation to the useful life of the goods. Where the goods have a limited useful life, any transfer of the use and possession of the goods in return for a consideration constitutes a disposition, however small, of the debtor's interest in the goods. If that consideration consists of chattel paper, that chattel paper and the payments thereon constitute proceeds of the secured party's collateral. For a case reaching an analogous conclusion in the context of a real estate mortgage, see Old Stone Bank v. Tycon I Building Limited Partnership, 946 F.2d 271 (4th Cir.1991) (forfeited earnest money deposit under a sales contract for mortgaged real estate constituted "proceeds" to which undersecured mortgagee is entitled under its mortgage since the deposit resulted from a disposition of valuable "lock up" rights to the collateral while the sales contract was in effect).

The foregoing analysis is intended to clarify the treatment of rental payments as proceeds of a secured party's collateral consisting of goods subsequently leased. It is not intended to address transactions where the goods become subject to the secured party's security interest at a time when the goods are already under lease by the debtor as lessor. See § 2A-307; In re Leasing Consultants, Inc., 486 F.2d 367, 13 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 189 (2d Cir.1973). Nor is it intended to address transactions where the goods, although subject to a secured party's pre-existing security interest, are not subsequently leased by the debtor as lessor. For example, the foregoing analysis is not intended to suggest that income generated from the debtor's own use and possession of goods should constitute proceeds of a secured party's pre-existing collateral consisting of the goods. Similarly, it is not intended to address other transactions where no disposition of the goods by security lease, determined by reference to § 1-201(37), or true lease, governed by Article 2A, has taken place. Cf. In re S & J Holding Corp., 42 B.R. 249, 39 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 668

Moreover, the foregoing analysis is not intended to suggest that, as a matter of federal bankruptcy law, a secured party is necessarily entitled to "adequate protection" compensation for the debtor's use of rental payments made under a post-petition lease by the debtor as lessor of goods in which a secured party held a perfected and unavoidable pre-petition security interest. Factors such as the term of the lease in relation to the useful life of the leased goods and the provision by the debtor of post-petition services associated with the post-petition lease of the goods may well affect the secured party's entitlement to such "adequate protection" compensation, without, however, affecting the status of the lease or the rental payments thereon as proceeds of the secured party's pre-existing collateral as a matter of state law. See 11 U.S.C. §§ 361, 363(e), and 552(b); cf. General Electric Credit Corp. v. Cleary Brothers Construction Co., Inc. (In re Cleary Brothers Construction Co., Inc.), 9 B.R. 40, 30 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1444 (Bkrtcy.S.D.Fla.1980) (instead of holding that the secured party could not claim, as proceeds of its pre-petition security interest in a crane, the rentals under a post-petition lease of the crane for a 10-day period, the court could have reached the same result by concluding that, although the rentals were proceeds of the secured party's collateral, the secured party was adequately protected).

CONCLUSION

Where a debtor has granted to a secured party a security interest in goods and the debtor later leases those goods as lessor, the lease rentals will constitute proceeds of the secured party's collateral consisting of the goods.

The Official Comment to § 9-306 is amended by adding the following:

6. Where a debtor has granted to a secured party a security interest in goods and the debtor later leases those goods as lessor, the lease rentals constitute proceeds of the secured party's collateral consisting of the goods. See PEB Commentary No. 9, dated June 25, 1992.

PREFACE TO PEB COMMENTARY

The Permanent Editorial Board (PEB) for the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) acts under the authority of The American Law Institute and the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. In March, 1987, the PEB resolved to issue from time to time supplementary commentary on the UCC to be known as PEB Commentary. These PEB Commentaries seek to further the underlying policies of the UCC by affording guidance in interpreting and resolving issues raised by the UCC and/or the Official Comments. The Resolution states that:

> "A PEB Commentary should come within one or more of the following specific purposes, which should be made apparent at the inception of the Commentary: (1) to resolve an ambiguity in the UCC by restating more clearly what the PEB considers to be the legal rule; (2) to state a preferred resolution of an issue on which judicial opinion or scholarly writing diverges; (3) to elaborate on the application of the UCC where the statute and/or the Official Comment leaves doubt as to inclusion or exclusion of, or application to, particular circumstances or transactions; (4) consistent with UCC § 1-102(2)(b), to apply the principles of the UCC to new or changed circumstances; (5) to clarify or elaborate upon the operation of the UCC as it relates to other statutes (such as the Bankruptcy Code and various federal and state consumer protection statutes) and general principles of law and equity pursuant to UCC § 1-103; or (6) to otherwise improve the operation of the UCC."

The full Resolution appears in the 1990 Edition of the UCC.

PEB COMMENTARY NO. 10
SECTION 1-203

ISSUE

Section 1-203 provides that "Every contract or duty within this Act imposes an obligation of good faith in its performance or enforcement."[1] While this concept applies generally to every contract, it finds particular expression throughout the Code. For example, out of over 400 Code provisions, more than 50 sections make specific reference to "good faith."[2]

The meaning of "good faith" varies with the context. Sometimes the context is as a standard of performance or enforcement; other times the context is that of good faith purchase.[3] This Commentary deals only with good faith performance or enforcement of a right or duty under a contract that is within the Code.

In the context in which the obligation of good faith functions as the standard of contract performance or enforcement, can the failure to meet this standard support a cause of action where no other basis for a cause of action exists? This Commentary examines this question in order to promote a uniform understanding of what it means to say that a general obligation of good faith is imposed on every contracting party. In so doing, several principles are discussed.

DISCUSSION

1 Good Faith, Commercial Expectations, and the Concept of Agreement

Section 1-201(19) defines good faith as "honesty in fact in the conduct or transaction concerned."[4] Commentators have said that this general requirement of good faith sets a "subjective" standard,[5] while the particularized definitions elsewhere also create an additional "objective" standard of the

[1]This does not mean that the obligation of good faith as defined in the Code will necessarily apply to all aspects of the same transaction. As written, the scope of § 1-203 is co-extensive with the Code's coverage. For example, if a loan agreement that provides for an Article 9 security interest also contains financial covenants which are not governed by the Code, § 1-203 would apply to the former and the general law of contracts would apply to the latter. See, e.g., Restatement, Second, Contracts § 205 (1981).

[3]See, e.g., UCC §§ 2-403 (good faith purchaser); 3-302 (holder in due course); 9-307 (buyer in the ordinary course of business). On the distinction between the doctrines of good faith performance and good faith purchase, see generally id.

[4]This sparse definition found in Article 1 is expanded elsewhere in the Code for purposes of particular Articles. See, e.g., §§ 2-103(1)(b); 2A-103(2); 3-103(a)(4); 4-104(c); 4A-105(a)(6). This expanded definition "is concerned with the fairness of conduct rather than the care with which an act is performed." UCC § 3-103, Comment 4.

[5]See Aronstein, Good Faith Performance of Security Agreements: The Liability of Corporate Managers, 120 U.Pa.L.Rev. 1, 31 (1971) ("Good faith [as] defined in § 1-201(19) . . . [has] been historically construed as applying only to the actor's subjective state of mind."); Braucher, The observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing. This Commentary applies with equal force to both standards of good faith.

The principal author of the Code, Karl Llewellyn, recognized that parties develop expectations over time against the background of commercial practices and that if commercial law fails to account for those practices, it will cut against the parties' actual expectations. In an unpublished commentary on the Proposed Final Draft of the Uniform Revised Sales Act, Llewellyn had this to say about good faith:

> No inconsistency of language and background exists merely because the words used mean something different to an outsider than they do to the merchants who used that language in the light of the commercial background against which they contracted. This is the necessary result of applying commercial standards and principles of good faith to the agreement . . .. Moreover, where the commercial background normally gives to a term in question some breadth of meaning so that it describes a range of acceptable tolerances rather than a sharp-edged single line of action, any attempted narrowing of this meaning by one party is so unusual as not likely to be expected or perceived by the other. Therefore, attention must be called to a desire to contract at material variance from the accepted commercial pattern of contract or use of language. Thus, this Act rejects any "surprise" variation from the fair and normal meaning of the agreement.[6]

Explaining the doctrine of good faith in such terms is thus a recognition that, as expressed in the Code, it serves as a directive to protect the reasonable expectations of the contracting parties. The general imperative that the reasonable expectations of the parties are the measure of the good faith of each suggests that good faith is a concept with conceptual content related to that of agreement.

The Code definition of "Agreement" reads:

> "Agreement" means the bargain of the parties in fact as found in their language or by implication from other circumstances including course of dealing or usage of trade or course of performance as provided in this Act (Sections 1-205 and 2-208).[7]

The agreement of the parties consists of more than their language alone. In elaborating on this theme, Comment 3 to § 1-201 emphasizes that "the word [agreement] is intended to include full recognition of usage of trade, course of dealing, course of performance and the surrounding circumstances

[7]UCC § 1-201(3). Furthermore, Comment 1 to § 1-205 ("Course of Dealing and Usage of Trade") reinforces this definition by stating:

> This Act rejects both the "lay-dictionary" and the "conveyancer's" reading of a commercial agreement. Instead the meaning of the agreement of the parties is to be determined by the language used by them and by their action, read and interpreted in the light of commercial practices and other surrounding circumstances. The measure and background for interpretation are set by the commercial context, which may explain and supplement even the language of a formal or final writing.

as effective parts thereof . . ..” (emphasis added).[8]

“Course of dealing” is defined as follows:

> A course of dealing is a sequence of previous conduct between the parties to a particular transaction which is fairly to be regarded as establishing a common basis of understanding for interpreting their expressions and other conduct.[9]

“Usage of trade” is defined as follows:

> A usage of trade is any practice or method of dealing having such regularity of observance in a place, vocation or trade as to justify an expectation that it will be observed with respect to the transaction in question. The existence and scope of such a usage are to be proved as facts. If it is established that such a usage is embodied in a written trade code or similar writing the interpretation of the writing is for the court.[10]

“Course of performance” is defined as follows:

> Where the contract for sale involves repeated occasions for performance by either party with knowledge of the nature of the performance and opportunity for objection to it by the other, any course of performance accepted or acquiesced in without objection shall be relevant to determine the meaning of the agreement.[11]

In addition to two definitional sections, § 1-205 contains two additional methodological sections which direct how express terms, course of dealing, and usage of trade are to be synthesized:

> (3) A course of dealing between parties and any usage of trade in the vocation or trade in which they are engaged or of which they are or should be aware give particular meaning to and supplement or qualify terms of an agreement.
> (4) The express terms of an agreement and an applicable course of dealing or usage of trade shall be construed wherever reasonable as consistent with each other; but when such construction is unreasonable express terms control both course of dealing and usage of trade and course of dealing controls usage of trade.[12]

At this juncture it is important to recognize that one acts in good faith

[8]This Commentary recognizes the fact that course of performance is defined in Articles 2 and 2A and was originally not a part of the general definition of “Agreement” in Article 1. The concept is included here as an element of the agreement of the parties because there exists no plausible justification for excluding it. This view is strongly supported by Comments 1 and 2 to § 2-208. Comment 2, in particular, emphasizes that “a course of performance is always relevant to determine the meaning of the agreement.” See also Westinghouse Credit Corp. v. Shelton, 645 F.2d 869, 31 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 410 (10th Cir.1981) (course of performance may also be used for discerning the meaning of “Agreement” in Article 9).

The Restatement, Second, of Contracts does not reflect the Code’s isolation of course of performance in Articles 2 and 2A. The Restatement provides that all four elements—express terms, course of dealing, course of performance, and usage of trade—are all elements of the meaning of “contract.” See Restatement, Second, Contracts § 203. In fact, § 202(4) states that “any course of performance accepted or acquiesced in without objection is given great weight in the interpretation of the agreement.”

[12]UCC § 1-205(3) (4). The connection between § 1-205 and good faith is made explicit in the Comment to § 1-203, wherein it is stated that the obligation of good faith “is further implemented by Section 1-205 on course of dealing and usage of trade.”

The interpretational priorities set forth in § 1-205 are, with the added inclusion of course of performance, duplicated in § 2-208(2). That section states as follows:

> The express terms of the agreement and any relative to the agreement of the parties. To decide the question whether a party has acted in good faith, a court must first ascertain the substance of the parties' agreement.

The performance and enforcement of agreements in a manner consistent with the reasonable expectations of the parties is in keeping with the broadest understanding of contract doctrine.[13] The Code is consistent with this tradition of thought. However, the Code's concept of agreement broadens the sources for determining the meaning of the parties' agreement. The concept of agreement is not limited to the terms of the parties' writing: it includes a variety of elements, all of which must be synthesized.

Under § 1-205(4), the initial interpretive effort is to read all the terms as consistent with one another. Only when this is impossible does the interpreter then move to a lexical ordering of the terms, with express terms at the head of the list. Cases which make no attempt to reconcile the various terms before according priority to express terms in the construction of the parties' agreement must be considered to have proceeded improperly.[14] The better application of § 1-205(4), and the issues of interpretation which are central to it, is illustrated in cases like Nanakuli Paving & Rock Co. v. Shell Oil Co., 664 F.2d 772, 32 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1025 (9th Cir.1981) (upholding a finding that the written price term in an asphalt supply contract was qualified by a trade practice requiring suppliers to delay price increases for jobs on which buyers have already bid). Accordingly, in order to answer the question, "Has a party performed or enforced a contractual right or duty in good faith?", the content of the parties' agreement must first be determined.[15] > such course of performance, as well as any course of dealing and usage of trade, shall be construed whenever reasonable as consistent with each other; but when such construction is unreasonable, express terms shall control course of performance and course of performance shall control both course of dealing and usage of trade (Section 1-205).

> If the purpose of contract law is to enforce the reasonable expectations of parties induced by promises, then at some point it becomes necessary for courts to look to the substance rather than to the form of the agreement, and to hold that substance controls over form. What courts are doing here, whether calling the process "implication" of promises, or interpreting the requirements of "good faith," as the current fashion may be, is but a recognition that the parties occasionally have understandings or expectations that were so fundamental that they did not need to negotiate about those expectations. When the court "implies a promise" or holds that "good faith" requires a party not to violate those expectations, it is recognizing that sometimes silence says more than words, and it is understanding its duty to the spirit of the bargain is higher than its duty to the technicalities of the language.

Id. Reiter & Swan, Contracts and the Protection of Reasonable Expectations, in Studies in Contract Law 1, 11 (B. Reiter & J. Swan eds. 1980) ("[T]hroughout the law of contract, a striving to protect reasonable expectations is visible . . ..").

[15]For a non-Code decision which is consistent with this approach, see Southwest Savings and Loan Association v. Sunamp Systems, Inc., 838 P.2d 1314 (Ariz.App. 1992) (holding that inquiry does not stop with recognition that lender had general authority in written loan agreement to take

2 UCC § 1-203 Does Not Create an Independent Cause of Action

The inherent flaw in the view that § 1-203 supports an independent cause of action is the belief that the obligation of good faith has an existence which is conceptually separate from the underlying agreement. As the above discussion demonstrates, however, this is an incorrect view of the duty. "A party cannot simply 'act in good faith.' One acts in good faith relative to the agreement of the parties. Thus the real question is 'What is the Agreement of the parties?' "[16] Put differently, good faith merely directs attention to the parties' reasonable expectations; it is not an independent source from which rights and duties evolve.[17] The language of § 1-203 itself makes this quite clear by providing that the obligation to perform or enforce in good faith extends only to the rights and duties resulting from the parties' contract. The term "contract" is, in turn, defined as "the total legal obligation which results from the parties' agreement . . .."[18] Consequently, resort to principles of law or equity outside the Code are not appropriate to create rights, duties, and liabilities inconsistent with those stated in the Code.[19] For example, a breach of a contract or duty within the Code arising from a failure to act in good faith does not give rise to a claim for punitive damages unless specifically permitted.[20]

CONCLUSION

Section 1-203 does not support a cause of action where no other basis for a cause of action exists.

The concept of Agreement permeates the entirety of the Code. For example, § 9-105(1)(l) incorporates the Article 1 concept of Agreement directly into Article 9. The "agreement of the parties" cannot be read off the face of a document, but must be discerned against the background of actual commercial practice. Not only does the Code recognize "the reasonable practices and standards of the commercial community . . . [as] an ap-the particular action, but inquiry extends to whether lender exercised that authority "for a reason beyond the risks" assumed by borrower in loan agreement, or beyond borrower's "justified expectations," in the context of how a reasonable lender might act).

[16]Patterson, supra, at 143. Good faith is sometimes the basis of an implied term to fill a gap or deal with an omitted case, e.g., the duty of cooperation frequently imposed on a party whose cooperation is essential and not unreasonably burdensome; or, the duty to give notice within a reasonable time of some important fact of which the other party would otherwise be unaware. See § 2-309(3) and Comment 8; 2 Farnsworth on Contracts §§ 7.17, 7.17a (1990). A breach of such duties gives rise to a cause of action for breach of the contract of which the implied term becomes a part. Although such a cause of action arguably has the same practical content as a cause of action based upon a purported breach of § 1-203, there is an important methodological difference in that this Commentary requires, in the case of contracts within the Code, that the focus be upon the Agreement of the parties and their reasonable expectations.

[17]Cases reaching this conclusion include Management Assistance, Inc. v. Computer Dimensions, Inc., 546 F.Supp. 666 (N.D.Ga.1982), aff'd 747 F.2d 708 (11th Cir.1984), and Chandler v. Hunter, 340 So.2d 818, 21 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 484 (Ala.Civ.App.1976). A contrary conclusion was reached in Reid v. Key Bank of Southern Maine, Inc., 821 F.2d 9, 3 UCC Rep.Serv.2d (Callaghan) 1665 (1st Cir.1987).

propriate source of legal obligation,"[21] but it also rejects the "premise that the language used [by the parties] has the meaning attributable to [it] by rules of construction existing in the law rather than the meaning which arises out of the commercial context in which it was used."[22] The correct perspective on the meaning of good faith performance and enforcement is the Agreement of the parties. The critical question is, "Has 'X' acted in good faith with respect to the performance or enforcement of some right or duty under the terms of the Agreement?" It is therefore wrong to conclude that as long as the agreement allows a party to do something, it is under all terms and conditions permissible. Such a conclusion overlooks completely the distinction between merely performing or enforcing a right or duty under an agreement on the one hand and, on the other hand, doing so in a way that recognizes that the agreement should be interpreted in a manner consistent with the reasonable expectations of the parties in the light of the commercial conditions existing in the context under scrutiny. The latter is the correct approach. Examples are: (1) Is it reasonable for a buyer in a particular locale or trade to expect that an express quantity term in a contract is "not really" a quantity term, but a mere projection to be adjusted according to market forces?[23]; (2) Does a party to a sales contract that permits discretionary termination have the right to expect that the decision whether to terminate will be made on the basis of sound business criteria?

The Official Comment to § 1-203 is amended by adding the following language at the end of the first paragraph:

> This section does not support an independent cause of action for failure to perform or enforce in good faith. Rather, this section means that a failure to perform or enforce, in good faith, a specific duty or obligation under the contract, constitutes a breach of that contract or makes unavailable, under the particular circumstances, a remedial right or power. This distinction makes it clear that the doctrine of good faith merely directs a court towards interpreting contracts within the commercial context in which they are created, performed, and enforced, and does not create a separate duty of fairness and reasonableness which can be independently breached. See PEB Commentary No. 10, dated February 10, 1994.

PREFACE TO PROPOSED PEB COMMENTARY

The Permanent Editorial Board (PEB) for the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) acts under the authority of The American Law Institute and the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. In March, 1987, the PEB resolved to issue from time to time supplementary commentary on the UCC to be known as PEB Commentary. These PEB Commentaries seek to further the underlying policies of the UCC by affording guidance in interpreting and resolving issues raised by the UCC and/or the Official Comments. The Resolution states that:

PEB COMMENTARY NO. 11
(AS AMENDED TO APPLY TO REVISED ARTICLE 9)*
SURETYSHIP ISSUES UNDER SECTIONS 3-116, 3-305, 3-415, 3-419, AND 3-605

INTRODUCTION

The promulgation of revised Article 3 of the Uniform Commercial Code has given rise to a number of questions concerning the provisions in that Article governing the rights and duties of accommodation parties. This heightened level of interest results from many factors. In particular, the provisions in revised Article 3 concerning accommodation parties differ significantly from those in former Article 3 in ways that are complex and not always obvious. Application of these rules often raises issues that were not pertinent under prior law. In addition, the promulgation in 1995 of the Restatement of Suretyship and Guaranty by The American Law Institute has generated greater interest in the rights and duties of sureties, including, of course, accommodation parties.

As a result of this heightened interest, the suretyship rules in Article 3 have been the subject of a great deal of scrutiny, which has resulted in a recognition that the treatment of some suretyship issues in revised Article 3 should be clarified. It is the purpose of this Commentary to answer several questions that have arisen concerning the rights and duties of accommodation parties. This Commentary concludes with a series of revisions and additions to the Comments to various sections in Article 3 that govern suretyship issues.

If another person agrees to be liable for the obligation of the maker of a note, are the rights and duties of that person determined by the provisions of Article 3 governing accommodation parties, by the general law of suretyship, or both?

DISCUSSION

A person who agrees to be liable for the debt of another is clearly a surety. See Restatement of Suretyship and Guaranty § 1. If the person effectuates the agreement by becoming a party (i.e., a co-maker or indorser) to the same instrument that creates the obligation, the surety is also an accommodation party. In such a case, the rules in §§ 3-116, 3-305, 3-415, 3-419, and 3-605 concerning accommodation parties are applicable. Of course, these sections will not resolve all possible issues concerning the rights and duties of the surety. In the event that a situation is presented that is not resolved by those sections, the resolution may be provided by the general law of suretyship because, pursuant to § 1-103, that law is applicable unless displaced by provisions of this Act. If the surety does not effectuate the obligation by becoming a party to the note, the surety is not an accommodation party. In that case, the surety's rights and duties are determined by the general law of suretyship.

*PEB Commentary No. 11, which addresses suretyship issues that arise under Article 3 of the Uniform Commercial Code, was originally issued in 1994. Issue 11 in the original Commentary dealt with the power of an accommodation party on an instrument that is secured by a security interest governed by Uniform Commercial Code Article 9 to waive the rights of that party that were provided for in Part 5 of former Article 9. Since the issuance of the original Commentary, former Article 9 has been replaced with Revised Article 9 and the Restatement of Suretyship and Guaranty, which was in the process of being drafted in 1994, has been promulgated by the American Law Institute. This amended Commentary updates the discussion of Issue 11 to reflect Revised Article 9 and the promulgation of the Restatement of Suretyship and Guaranty.

In unusual cases, two parties to an instrument may have a surety relationship that is not governed by Article 3 because the requirements of § 3-419(a) are not fulfilled. For example, assume that the payee of an instrument would like to sell it, but the potential buyer will agree to buy the instrument only if, in the event that the instrument is dishonored, the buyer has recourse not only against the issuer and the payee but also against someone more creditworthy. Accordingly, the payee produces a creditworthy person who agrees to stand behind the payee's obligations with respect to the instrument. The transfer to the buyer is then made after both the payee and the creditworthy person indorse the instrument. The creditworthy person is a party to the instrument as an indorser and is an accommodation party for the issuer who is the accommodated party. The creditworthy person is also a surety with respect to the obligation of both the issuer and the payee as indorser. The creditworthy person, however, is not an accommodation party for the payee and the payee is not an accommodated party under § 3-419(a) inasmuch as the instrument was not issued for value given for the benefit of the payee. Therefore, the general law of suretyship, and not the provisions in Article 3 concerning accommodation parties, provides the rules that govern the suretyship relationship between the creditworthy person and the payee.[1]

What are the differences between the rights of an accommodation party with respect to the accommodated party under revised Article 3 and former Article 3?

DISCUSSION

Under the general law of suretyship, as between the principal obligor and the secondary obligor, it is the principal obligor who ought to bear the cost of performance. Restatement of Suretyship and Guaranty § 1. Suretyship law provides three mechanisms to effectuate that cost allocation. First, if the principal obligor is charged with notice of the secondary obligation, the principal obligor owes the secondary obligor a duty of performance; this duty of performance can be enforced by the secondary obligor through the mechanism commonly known as exoneration. Restatement of Suretyship and Guaranty § 21. Second, a secondary obligor who performs may be subrogated to the rights of the obligee against the principal obligor (regardless of whether the principal obligor was charged with notice of the secondary obligation). Restatement of Suretyship and Guaranty § 27. Third, if the principal obligor is charged with notice of the secondary obligation, the principal obligor must reimburse a secondary obligor who performs the obligation. Restatement of Suretyship and Guaranty § 22. If the principal obligor is not charged with notice of the secondary obligation, a secondary obligor who performs is nonetheless entitled to restitution from the principal obligor. Restatement of Suretyship and Guaranty § 26.

[1]The revisions to Comment 3 to § 3-419 and Comment 6 to § 3-605 reflect this discussion. See Appendix, par. 3 and par. 10.

An accommodation party is always a surety. Former Article 3 explicitly provided in § 3-415(5) that an accommodation party who paid the instrument was entitled to enforce the instrument against the accommodated party. This right essentially codified the surety's right of subrogation. Other rights of the accommodation party against the accommodated party were left to the general law of suretyship through § 1-103. In § 3-419(e), revised Article 3 also in effect sets forth subrogation rights of accommodation parties by providing that such parties are "entitled to enforce the instrument against the accommodated party." That section also codifies the accommodation party's right to be reimbursed by the accommodated party. Unlike the general law of suretyship, however, that right is not limited to situations in which the accommodated party was charged with notice of the accommodation party's obligation. Thus, it need not be determined whether the accommodated party is charged with notice of the accommodation party's obligation, and the right of restitution that is present in the general law of suretyship is superfluous. Revised Article 3, like former Article 3, leaves the accommodated party's duty of performance and the accommodation party's concomitant right of exoneration to the general law of suretyship through § 1-103.[2]

Is an accommodation party entitled to reimbursement if the accommodated party had a defense to its obligation that could have been raised by the accommodation party against the person entitled to enforce the instrument?

DISCUSSION

The juxtaposition of the accommodated party's duty to reimburse the accommodation party (§ 3-419(e)) with the accommodated party's right to raise defenses (§ 3-305(b)) raises important policy issues. If a duty to reimburse exists even when the accommodated party had a defense, that duty could be said to obviate the value of the defense. On the other hand, if no duty to reimburse exists in such circumstances, the cost of performance will be borne ultimately by the accommodation party rather than the accommodated party.

There are a number of different contexts in which the situation may arise. Generally speaking, the accommodation party may raise as a defense to its obligation the defenses of the accommodated party to its obligation. See § 3-305(d). There are three exceptions. The accommodated party's defenses of discharge in insolvency proceedings, infancy, and lack of legal capacity are not available to the accommodation party. If the accommodation party pays the instrument when the accommodated party had one of these defenses, the accommodated party has no duty to reimburse the accommodation party. The accommodation party has, in a sense, assumed the risk that such defenses will exist.

Occasionally, an accommodation party will pay an instrument even though the accommodated party has a defense that is available to the accommodation party. In such cases, the existence of the duty to reimburse may depend on whether the accommodation party was aware of the defense at the time it paid the instrument. If the accommodation party was unaware of the defense, there is a duty to reimburse. Thus, there is an incentive for the accommodated party to make the accommodation party aware of any defenses it may have. If the accommodation party pays the instrument while aware of a defense of the accommodated party, however, reimbursement would ordinarily not be justified but might be justified in some circumstances. Resolution of this issue is left to the general law of suretyship through § 1-103.[3]

Section 3-415(a) provides that an indorser's obligation to pay the instrument upon dishonor is owed, inter alia, to a subsequent indorser who pays the instrument. What if both the prior indorser and subsequent indorser are anomalous indorsers?

DISCUSSION

In the general law of suretyship, when there are two secondary obligors for the same underlying obligation, the relationship between those two secondary obligors may be that of co-suretyship or sub-suretyship. In a co-suretyship situation, the two secondary obligors are jointly and severally liable and, as between themselves, have a right of contribution against each other. In a sub-suretyship situation, on the other hand, the second secondary obligor is, in a sense, a surety for the obligation of the first secondary obligor. Thus, as between the two secondary obligors, the first obligor occupies the position of a principal obligor while the later one occupies the position of a secondary obligor. It is often difficult to determine whether the two secondary obligors are co-sureties or sub-sureties, especially in the context of negotiable instruments when the obligations of those parties may be created by a signature alone, unaccompanied by words of explanation.

Article 3 treats successive anomalous indorsers as having joint and several liability on the instrument. See § 3-116(a). If one of the anomalous indorsers pays the instrument, that indorser has a right to receive contribution from the other indorser. See § 3-116(b). Accordingly, the general rule of § 3-415(a), that a subsequent indorser who pays the instrument may recover the full amount of the instrument from a prior indorser, does not apply in such cases. Section 3-116(b) does not recognize a distinction between a co-surety and a sub-surety, but in providing for a right to contribution, § 3-116(b) has the effect of treating anomalous indorsers as though they were co-sureties. Section 3-116(b), however, is subject to "agreement of the affected parties." If the subsequent indorser can prove an agreement with the prior indorser giving the subsequent indorser rights as a sub-surety, that agreement changes the rule of § 3-116(b). If the subsequent indorser pays the instrument and has rights under the agreement as a sub-surety, the subsequent indorser has a right of recourse against the prior indorser for the amount of the payment rather than only a right to contribution; if the prior indorser pays the instrument, there is no right of recourse against the subsequent indorser.[4]

What effect do words of guaranty have on the obligation of an indorser to a person entitled to enforce an instrument?

DISCUSSION

Under former § 3-416, the obligation of an indorser who added the words "payment guaranteed" or "collection guaranteed" to the indorsement was different than that of an indorser who did not add those words. The addition of the words "payment guaranteed" (or their equivalent) meant that if the instrument was not paid when due the indorser would pay it without resort to any other party. Thus, an indorser who guaranteed payment could be said to have waived presentment, notice of dishonor, and protest, as well as all demand upon the maker or drawee. In contrast, the addition of the words "collection guaranteed" (or their equivalent) meant that the indorser was required to pay only after the holder reduced its claim against the maker or acceptor to judgment or it was shown that such a proceeding would be useless.

Section 3-419(d) preserves the concept of a guaranty of collection, but no provision is made for a guaranty of payment. Moreover, the preferred treatment given to a guarantor of collection is only applicable when the words accompanying the indorsement indicate "unambiguously that the party is guaranteeing collection rather than payment of the obligation of another party to the instrument." Thus, an indorser who adds the words "payment guaranteed," or the like, to the indorsement has the same liability as an indorser who added no special words to the indorsement. Such an indorser may be entitled, inter alia, to notice of dishonor pursuant to § 3-503.[5]

May a person entitled to enforce an instrument avoid discharge of an accommodation party pursuant to § 3-605 by "reserving rights" against that party in conjunction with a release, extension, or other modification of the duty of the accommodated party?

[4]The addition of Comment 5 to § 3-415 reflects this discussion. See Appendix, par. 2.

[5]The revision to Comment 4 to § 3-419 reflects this discussion. See Appendix, par. 4.

DISCUSSION

Under former UCC § 3-606(1)(a), a release, extension, or other modification of the accommodated party's duty accompanied by an express "reservation of rights" against the accommodation party would not discharge that party. This provision paralleled the general law of suretyship in many jurisdictions.

Article 3 rejects the reservation of rights doctrine. The effects of a release, extension, or other modification of the accommodated party's duty cannot be changed by the incantation of a "reservation of rights." Pursuant to § 3-605(b), a release of the accommodated party does not discharge the accommodation party, so there is no need for the person entitled to enforce the instrument to take any action, such as a reservation of rights, to preserve recourse against the accommodation party. Pursuant to § 3-605(c)–(d), an extension or modification of the accommodated party's duty discharges the accommodation party to the extent that the extension or modification would otherwise cause the accommodation party a loss. This discharge cannot be avoided by a "reservation of rights" by the person entitled to enforce the instrument.[6]

If a person entitled to enforce an instrument agrees to extend the due date of the accommodated party's performance and, pursuant to § 3-605(c), the extension does not discharge the accommodation party, what is the effect of the extension on the obligation of the accommodation party? In particular, is the due date for the accommodation party's performance extended correspondingly? May the accommodation party perform on the original due date?

DISCUSSION

The person entitled to enforce the instrument will not be able to enforce the instrument against the accommodation party until the extended due date. If the accommodation party is an indorser, this is because an indorser is not liable until dishonor of the instrument, which, under these circumstances, cannot occur until it is unpaid on the extended due date. If the accommodation party is a co-maker, this is because, under § 3-305(d), until the extended due date the accommodation party will be able to assert the accommodated party's defense that, pursuant to the extension agreement, performance is not yet due.

The accommodation party may, however, perform on the original due date. The accommodation party is bound in accordance with the terms of its original engagement. The agreement between the accommodated party and the person entitled to enforce the instrument cannot bind the accommodation party to a change in its obligation without the accommodation party's consent. The effect on the recourse of the accommodation party against the accommodated party of performance by the accommodation party on the original due date is not addressed in § 3-419 and is left to the general law of suretyship.

Even though the accommodation party has the option of paying the instrument on the original due date, the accommodation party is not precluded from asserting its rights to discharge under § 3-605(c) if it does not exercise that option. The critical issue is whether the extension caused the accommodation party a loss by increasing the difference between the accommodation party's cost of performing its obligation on the instrument and the amount recoverable from the accommodated party pursuant to § 3-419(e). The decision by the accommodation party not to exercise its option to pay on the original due date may, under the circumstances, be a factor to be considered in the determination of that issue.[7]

What if the person entitled to enforce the instrument agrees, in one transaction, to both an extension of time for the accommodated party's performance and another modification of the accommodation party's obligation? What if there is a dispute as to whether, as a result of these changes, the accommodation party has suffered a loss?

DISCUSSION

This question highlights the difficulties in properly allocating the burden of persuasion when the agreement between the person entitled to enforce the instrument and the accommodated party involves both an extension governed by § 3-605(c) and a modification governed by § 3-605(d). The accommodation party has the burden of demonstrating loss from an extension, but the person entitled to enforce the instrument has the burden of overcoming a presumption of loss from other modifications.

If neither party introduces evidence as to loss causation, the result is full discharge of the accommodation party because § 3-605(d) applies. If the person entitled to enforce the instrument seeks to overcome the presumption of loss from the modification, it is entitled to a presumption that the extension alone caused no loss. Thus, the accommodation party will have to introduce evidence as to the effect of the extension, while the person entitled to enforce the instrument will have to introduce evidence as to the effect of the modification. On the basis of this evidence, the court will make an overall determination of the effect of the changes on the accommodation party's right of recourse against the accommodated party.[8]

How can § 3-305(d), which provides that the accommodation party can raise defenses of the accommodated party, be reconciled with § 3-605(b), which provides that a release of the accommodated party does not discharge the accommodation party?

DISCUSSION

While § 3-305(d) provides that an accommodation party can raise most defenses of the accommodated party, that section must be read in conjunction with § 3-605, which governs the effect on the obligation of the accommodation party of an act or omission of the person entitled to enforce the instrument. Section 3-605(b) provides that a release of the accommodated party does not discharge the accommodation party. Thus, while examined in isolation, § 3-305(d) might seem to allow the accommodation party to raise, as a defense to its obligation, a release of the accommodated party granted by the person entitled to enforce the instrument, the applicability of that section to such a release must be considered in light of § 3-605(b). If the release of the accommodated party is part of a settlement pursuant to which the person entitled to enforce the instrument accepts partial payment from an accommodated party who is financially unable to pay the entire amount of the note, the transaction falls within the scope of § 3-605(b) and the accommodation party cannot escape liability by asserting § 3-305(d) essentially to nullify § 3-605(b). If, on the other hand, the release of the accommodated party is part of an accord and satisfaction settling a dispute as to the obligation of the accommodated party, the accommodation party may utilize § 3-305(d) to assert that release as a defense to its obligation because § 3-605(b) is not intended to apply to settlement of disputed claims.[9]

What sort of language is sufficient to waive discharge under § 3-605?

DISCUSSION

Section 3-605(i) provides that a party is not discharged under that section if the instrument or a separate agreement of the party waives such discharge "either specifically or by general language indicating that parties waive defenses based on suretyship or impairment of collateral." Thus, no particular language or form of agreement is required, and the standards for enforcing such a term are the same as the standards for enforcing any other term in an instrument or agreement. There is no requirement of particularity in referring to the four grounds for discharge established by § 3-605 so long as the language used indicates that suretyship defenses are waived. By allowing the use of general language, the rule recognizes that the use of lengthy provisions containing detailed waivers or even separate identification of each ground for discharge does not necessarily promote greater understanding of an instrument's terms. Yet, the requirement that the language indicate that defenses are being waived assures that a diligent indorser or accommodation party will, at the least, not be unjustly surprised when it is asserted that the terms of the instrument or agreement delete protections that would otherwise be available. In adopting this course, § 3-605 is consistent with the general law of suretyship. See Restatement of Suretyship and Guaranty § 48.[10] protections it may have pursuant to Part 6 of Article 9?

DISCUSSION

Section 3-605(e) provides that impairment of an interest in collateral for the obligation of the accommodated party may discharge the accommodation party. Section 3-605(g) defines impairment of an interest in collateral as including, inter alia, failure to comply with applicable law in disposing of collateral. In the case of personal property or fixtures, applicable law includes, of course, Article 9. Thus, failure to comply with the rules in Part 6 of Article 9 concerning disposition of collateral for the accommodated party's obligation constitutes impairment of an interest in collateral. In addition, the accommodation party will qualify as an "obligor" and a "secondary obligor" with respect to that collateral. See § 9-102(a)(59), (71). Obligors and, to a much greater extent, secondary obligors, are provided with substantial protections in Part 6 of Article 9. Section 9-602 provides that, with few exceptions, obligors may not waive these protections. Section 3-605(i), on the other hand, provides that an accommodation party may waive discharge under this section (including discharge for impairment of an interest in collateral pursuant to § 3-605(e)). This does not mean that the accommodation party may waive all protections it may have concerning disposition of collateral; rather, it provides for the waiver of protections created by § 3-605. To the extent that Article 9 also provides the accommodation party similar protections, waiver of those protections is governed by Article 9 as interpreted in each jurisdiction.[11]

1. Comment 5 to § 3-305 is amended by adding an unnumbered paragraph as follows:

> Section 3-305(d) must be read in conjunction with Section 3-605, which provides rules (usually referred to as suretyship defenses) for determining when the obligation of an accommodation party is discharged, in whole or in part, because of some act or omission of a person entitled to enforce the instrument. To the extent a rule stated in Section 3-605 is inconsistent with Section 3-305(d), the Section 3-605 rule governs. For example, under Section 3-605(b), discharge under Section 3-604 of the accommodated party does not discharge the accommodation party. As explained in Comment 3 to Section 3-605, discharge of the accommodated party is normally part of a settlement under which the holder of a note accepts partial payment from an accommodated party who is financially unable to pay the entire amount of the note. If the holder then brings an action against the accommodation party to recover the remaining unpaid amount of the note, the accommodation party cannot use Section 3-305(d) to nullify Section 3-605(b) by asserting the discharge of the accommodated party as a defense. On the other hand, suppose the accommodated party is a buyer of goods who issued the note to the seller who took the note for the buyer's obligation to pay for the goods. Suppose the buyer has a claim for breach of warranty with respect to the goods against the seller and the warranty claim may be asserted against the holder of the note. The warranty claim is a claim in recoupment. If the holder and the accommodated party reach a settlement under which the holder accepts payment less than the amount of the note in full satisfaction of the note and the warranty claim, the accommodation party could defend an action on the note by the holder by asserting the accord and satisfaction under Section 3-305(d). There is no conflict with Section 3-605(b) because that provision is not intended to apply to settlement of disputed claims. Other examples of the use of Section 3-305(d) in cases in which Section 3-605 applies are stated in Comment 4 to Section 3-605. See PEB Commentary No. 11, dated February 10, 1994.

2. A new Comment 5 to § 3-415 is added as follows:

5. As stated in subsection (a), the obligation of an indorser to pay the amount due on the instrument is generally owed not only to a person entitled to enforce the instrument but also to a subsequent indorser who paid the instrument. But if the prior indorser and the subsequent indorser are both anomalous indorsers, this rule does not apply. In that case, Section 3-116 applies. Under Section 3-116(a), the anomalous indorsers are jointly and severally liable and if either pays the instrument the indorser who pays has a right of contribution against the other. Section 3-116(b). The right to contribution in Section 3-116(b) is subject to "agreement of the affected parties." Suppose the subsequent indorser can prove an agreement with the prior indorser under which the prior indorser agreed to treat the subsequent indorser as a guarantor of the obligation of the prior indorser. Rights of the two indorsers between themselves would be governed by the agreement. Under suretyship law, the subsequent indorser under such an agreement is referred to as a subsurety. Under the agreement, if the subsequent indorser pays the instrument there is a right to reimbursement from the prior indorser; if the prior indorser pays the instrument, there is no right of recourse against the subsequent indorser. See PEB Commentary No. 11, dated February 10, 1994.

3. Comment 3 to § 3-419 is amended by adding an unnumbered paragraph as follows:

An accommodation party is always a surety. A surety who is not a party to the instrument, however, is not an accommodation party. For example, if M issues a note payable to the order of P, and S signs a separate contract in which S agrees to pay P the amount of the instrument if it is dishonored, S is a surety but is not an accommodation party. In such a case, S's rights and duties are determined under the general law of suretyship. In unusual cases two parties to an instrument may have a surety relationship that is not governed by Article 3 because the requirements of Section 3-419(a) are not met. In those cases the general law of suretyship applies to the relationship. See PEB Commentary No. 11, dated February 10, 1994.

4. Comment 4 to § 3-419 is amended by adding the following two sentences:

Words added to an anomalous indorsement indicating that payment of the instrument is guaranteed by the indorser do not change the liability of the indorser as stated in Section 3-415. This is a change from former Section 3-416(5). See PEB Commentary No. 11, supra.

5. Comment 5 to § 3-419 is amended by deleting the struck-out words and adding the underlined words as follows:

5. Subsection (e) ~~restates subsection (5) of present Section 3-415~~ like former Section 3-415(5), provides that an accommodation party that pays the instrument is entitled to enforce the instrument against the accommodated party. Since the accommodation party that pays the instrument is entitled to enforce the instrument against the accommodated party, the accommodation party also obtains rights to any security interest or other collateral that secures payment of the instrument. Subsection (e) also provides that an accommodation party that pays the instrument is entitled to reimbursement from the accommodated party. See PEB Commentary No. 11, supra.

6. A new Comment 6 and a new Comment 7 to § 3-419 are added as follows:

6. In occasional cases, the accommodation party might pay the instrument even though the accommodated party had a defense to its obligation that was available to the accommodation party under Section 3-305(d). In such cases, the accommodation party's right to reimbursement may conflict with the accommodated party's right to raise its defense. For example, suppose the accommodation party pays the instrument without being aware of the defense. In that case the accommodation party should be entitled to reimbursement. Suppose the accommodation party paid the instrument with knowledge of the defense. In that case, to the extent of the defense, reimbursement ordinarily would not be justified, but under some circumstances reimbursement may be justified depending upon the facts of the case. The resolution of this conflict is left to the general law of suretyship. Section 1-103. See PEB Commentary No. 11, supra.

7. Section 3-419, along with Section 3-116(a) and (b), Section 3-305(d) and Section 3-605, provides rules governing the rights of accommodation parties. In addition, except to the extent that it is displaced by provisions of this Article, the general law of suretyship also applies to the rights of accommodation parties. Section 1-103. See PEB Commentary No. 11, supra.

7. Comment 3 to § 3-605 is amended by dividing it into two paragraphs, deleting the struck-out words, and adding the underlined words as follows:

3. Subsection (b) addresses the effect of discharge under Section 3-604 of the principal debtor. In the hypothetical case stated in Comment 1, release of Borrower by Bank does not release Accommodation Party. As a practical matter, Bank will not gratuitously release Borrower. Discharge of Borrower normally would be part of a settlement with Borrower if Borrower is insolvent or in financial difficulty. If Borrower is unable to pay all creditors, it may be prudent for Bank to take partial payment, but Borrower will normally insist on a release of the obligation. If Bank takes $3,000 and releases Borrower from the $10,000 debt, Accommodation Party is not injured. To the extent of the payment Accommodation Party's obligation to Bank is reduced. The release of Borrower by Bank does not affect the right of Accommodation Party to obtain reimbursement from Borrower or to enforce the note against Borrower if Accommodation Party pays Bank. Section 3-419(e). Subsection (b) is designed to allow a creditor to settle with the principal debtor without risk of losing rights against sureties. Settlement is in the interest of sureties as well as the creditor. Subsection (b), however, is not intended to apply to a settlement of a disputed claim which discharges the obligation.

Subsection (b) changes the law stated in former Section 3-606 but the change relates largely to formalities rather than substance. Under former Section 3-606, Bank in the hypothetical case stated in Comment 1 could settle with and release Borrower without releasing Accommodation Party, but to accomplish that result Bank had to either obtain the consent of Accommodation Party or make an express reservation of rights against Accommodation Party at the time it released Borrower. The reservation of rights was made in the agreement between Bank and Borrower by which the release of Borrower was made. There was no requirement in former Section 3-606 that any notice be given to Accommodation Party. ~~The reservation of rights doctrine is abolished in~~ Section 3-605 ~~with respect to rights on instruments~~ eliminates the necessity that Bank formally reserve rights against Accommodation Party in order to retain rights of recourse against Accommodation Party. See PEB Commentary No. 11, dated February 10, 1994.

8. Comment 4 to § 3-605 is amended by adding six unnumbered paragraphs as follows:

Under other provisions of Article 3, what is the effect of an extension agreement between the holder of a note and the maker who is an accommodated party? The question is illustrated by the following case:

Case #1. A borrows money from Lender and issues a note payable on April 1, 1992. B signs the note for accommodation at the request of Lender. B signed the note either as co-maker or as an anomalous indorser. In either case Lender subsequently makes an agreement with A extending the due date of A's obligation to pay the note to July 1, 1992. In either case B did not agree to the extension.

What is the effect of the extension agreement on B? Could Lender enforce the note against B if the note is not paid on April 1, 1992? A's obligation to Lender to pay the note on April 1, 1992 may be modified by the agreement of Lender. If B is an anomalous indorser Lender cannot enforce the note against B unless the note has been dishonored. Section 3-415(a). Under Section 3-502(a)(3) dishonor occurs if it is not paid on the day it becomes payable. Since the agreement between A and Lender extended the due date of A's obligation to July 1, 1992 there is no dishonor because A was not obligated to pay Lender on April 1, 1992. If B is a co-maker the analysis is somewhat different. Lender has no power to amend the terms of the note without the consent of both A and B. By an agreement with A, Lender can extend the due date of A's obligation to Lender to pay the note but B's obligation is to pay the note according to the terms of the note at the time of issue. Section 3-412. However, B's obligation to pay the note is subject to a defense because B is an accommodation party. B is not obliged to pay Lender if A is not obliged to pay Lender. Under Section 3-305(d), B as an accommodation party can assert against Lender any defense of A. A has a defense based on the extension agreement. Thus, the result is that Lender could not enforce the note against B until July 1, 1992. This result is consistent with the right of B if B is an anomalous indorser.

As a practical matter an extension of the due date will normally occur when the accommodated party is unable to pay on the due date. The interest of the accommodation party normally is to defer payment to the holder rather than to pay right away and rely on an action against the accommodated party that may have little or no value. But in unusual cases the accommodation party may prefer to pay the holder on the original due date. In such cases, the accommodation party may do so. This is because the extension agreement between the accommodated party and the holder cannot bind the accommodation party to a change in its obligation without the accommodation party's consent. The effect on the recourse of the accommodation party against the accommodated party of performance by the accommodation party on the original due date is not addressed in § 3-419 and is left to the general law of suretyship.

Even though X has the option of paying the instrument on the original due date, X is not precluded from asserting its rights to discharge under Section 3-605(c) if it does not exercise that option. The critical issue is whether the extension caused X a loss by increasing the difference between X's cost of performing its obligation on the instrument and the amount recoverable from Corporation pursuant to Section 3-419(e). The decision by X not to exercise its option to pay on the original due date may, under the circumstances, be a factor to be considered in the determination of that issue. See PEB Commentary No. 11, supra.

9. Comment 5 to § 3-605 is amended by adding seven unnumbered paragraphs as follows:

The following is an illustration of the kind of case to which Section 3-605(d) would apply:

Case #2. Corporation borrows money from Lender and issues a note payable to Lender. X signs the note as an accommodation party for Corporation. The loan agreement under which the note was issued states various events of default which allow Lender to accelerate the due date of the note. Among the events of default are breach of covenants not to incur debt beyond specified limits and not to engage in any line of business substantially different from that currently carried on by Corporation. Without consent of X, Lender agrees to modify the covenants to allow Corporation to enter into a new line of business that X considers to be risky, and to incur debt beyond the limits specified in the loan agreement to finance the new venture. This modification releases X unless Lender proves that the modification did not cause loss to X or that the loss caused by the modification was less than X's right of recourse.

Sometimes there is both an extension of the due date and some other modification. In that case both subsections (c) and (d) apply. The following is an example:

Case #3. Corporation was indebted to Lender on a note payable on April 1, 1992 and X signed the note as an accommodation party for Corporation. The interest rate on the note was 12 percent. Lender and Corporation agreed to a six-month extension of the due date of the note to October 1, 1992 and an increase in the interest rate to 14 percent after April 1, 1992. Corporation defaulted on October 1, 1992. Corporation paid no interest during the six-month extension period. Corporation is insolvent and has no assets from which unsecured creditors can be paid. Lender demanded payment from X.

Assume X is an anomalous indorser. First consider Section 3-605(c) alone. If there had been no change in the interest rate, the fact that Lender gave an extension of six months to Corporation would not result in discharge unless X could prove loss with respect to the right of recourse because of the extension. If the financial condition of Corporation on April 1, 1992 would not have allowed any recovery on the right of recourse, X can't show any loss as a result of the extension with respect to the amount due on the note on April 1, 1992. Since the note accrued interest during the six-month extension, is there a loss equal to the accrued interest? Since the interest rate was not raised, only Section 3-605(c) would apply and X probably could not prove any loss. The obligation of X includes interest on the note until the note is paid. To the extent payment was delayed X had the use of the money that X otherwise would have had to pay to Lender. X could have prevented the running of interest by paying the debt. Since X did not do so, X suffered no loss as the result of the extension.

If the interest rate was raised, Section 3-605(d) also must be considered. If X is an anomalous indorser, X's liability is to pay the note according to its terms at the time of indorsement. Section 3-415(a). Thus, X's obligation to pay interest is measured by the terms of the note (12%) rather than by the increased amount of 14 percent. The same analysis applies if X had been a comaker. Under Section 3-412 the liability of the issuer of a note is to pay the note according to its terms at the time it was issued. Either obligation could be changed by contract and that occurred with respect to Corporation when it agreed to the increase in the interest rate, but X did not join in that agreement and is not bound by it. Thus, the most that X can be required to pay is the amount due on the note plus interest at the rate of 12 percent.

Does the modification discharge X under Section 3-605(d)? Any modification that increases the monetary obligation of X is material. An increase of the interest rate from 12 percent to 14 percent is certainly a material modification. There is a presumption that X is discharged because Section 3-605(d) creates a presumption that the modification caused a loss to X equal to the amount of the right of recourse. Thus, Lender has the burden of proving absence of loss or a loss less than the amount of the right of recourse. Since Corporation paid no interest during the six-month period, the issue is like the issue presented under Section 3-605(c) which we have just discussed. The increase in the interest rate could not have affected the right of recourse because no interest was paid by Corporation. X is in the same position as X would have been in if there had been an extension without an increase in the interest rate.

The analysis with respect to Section 3-605(c) and (d) would have been different if we change the assumptions. Suppose Corporation was not insolvent on April 1, 1992, that Corporation paid interest at the higher rate during the six-month period, and that Corporation was insolvent at the end of the six-month period. In this case it is possible that the extension and the additional burden placed on Corporation by the increased interest rate may have been detrimental to X.

There are difficulties in properly allocating burden of proof when the agreement between Lender and Corporation involves both an extension under Section 3-605(c) and a modification under Section 3-605(d). The agreement may have caused loss to X but it may be difficult to identify the extent to which the loss was caused by the extension or the other modification. If neither Lender nor X introduces evidence on the issue, the result is full discharge because Section 3-605(d) applies. Thus, Lender has the burden of overcoming the presumption in Section 3-605(d). In doing so, Lender should be entitled to a presumption that the extension of time by itself caused no loss. Section 3-605(c) is based on such a presumption and X should be required to introduce evidence on the effect of the extension on the right of recourse. Lender would have to introduce evidence on the effect of the increased interest rate. Thus both sides will have to introduce evidence. On the basis of this evidence the court will have to make a determination of the overall effect of the agreement on X's right of recourse. See PEB Commentary No. 11, supra.

10. The second paragraph of Comment 6 to § 3-605 is amended to read as follows:

In some states a real property grantee who assumes the obligation of the grantor as maker of a note secured by the real property becomes by operation of law a principal debtor and the grantor becomes a surety. The meager case authority was split on whether former Section 3-606 applied to release the grantor if the holder released or extended the obligation of the grantee. Revised Article 3 takes no position on the effect of the release of the grantee in this case. Section 3-605(b) does not apply because the holder has not discharged the obligation of a "party," a term defined in Section 3-103(a)(8) as "party to an instrument." The assuming grantee is not a party to the instrument. The resolution of this question is governed by general principles of law, including the law of suretyship. See PEB Commentary No. 11, supra.

11. Comment 8 to § 3-605 is amended by adding the underlined words as follows:

8. Subsection (i) is a continuation of former law which allowed suretyship defenses to be waived. As the subsection provides, a party is not discharged under this section if the instrument or a separate agreement of the party waives discharge either specifically or by general language indicating that defenses based on suretyship and impairment of collateral are waived. No particular language or form of agreement is required, and the standards for enforcing such a term are the same as the standards for enforcing any other term in an instrument or agreement.

Subsection (i), however, applies only to a "discharge under this section." The right of an accommodation party to be discharged under Section 3-605(e) because of an impairment of collateral can be waived. But with respect to a note secured by personal property collateral, Article 9 also applies. If an accommodation party is a "debtor" under Section ~~9-105(1)(d)~~ 9-102(a)(28), an "obligor" under Section 9-102(a)(59), or a "secondary obligor" under Section 9-102(a)(71), the accommodation party has rights under Article 9. Under Section ~~9-501(3)(b)~~ 9-602, many rights of an Article 9 debtor or obligor under Part 6 of Article 9 ~~under Section 9-504(3) and Section 9-505(1), which deal with disposition of collateral,~~ cannot be waived except as provided in Article 9. These Article 9 rights are independent of rights under Section 3-605. Since Section 3-605(i) is specifically limited to discharge under Section 3-605, a waiver of rights with respect to Section 3-605 has no effect on rights under Article 9. With respect to Article 9 rights, Section ~~9-501(3)(b)~~ 9-602 controls. See PEB Commentary No. 11, supra.

PREFACE TO PEB COMMENTARY

The Permanent Editorial Board (PEB) for the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) acts under the authority of The American Law Institute and the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. In March, 1987, the PEB resolved to issue from time to time supplementary commentary on the UCC to be known as PEB Commentary. These PEB Commentaries seek to further the underlying policies of the UCC by affording guidance in interpreting and resolving issues raised by the UCC and/or the Official Comments. The Resolution states that:

> "A PEB Commentary should come within one or more of the following specific purposes, which should be made apparent at the inception of the Commentary: (1) to resolve an ambiguity in the UCC by restating more clearly what the PEB considers to be the legal rule; (2) to state a preferred resolution of an issue on which judicial opinion or scholarly writing diverges; (3) to elaborate on the application of the UCC where the statute and/or the Official Comment leaves doubt as to inclusion or exclusion of, or application to, particular circumstances or transactions; (4) consistent with UCC § 1-102(2)(b), to apply the principles of the UCC to new or changed circumstances; (5) to clarify or elaborate upon the operation of the UCC as it relates to other statutes (such as the Bankruptcy Code and various federal and state consumer protection statutes) and general principles of law and equity pursuant to UCC § 1-103; or (6) to otherwise improve the operation of the UCC."

The full Resolution appears in the 1990 Edition of the UCC.

PEB COMMENTARY NO. 12
SECTION 9-302

ISSUE

Section 9-302(3) provides that the filing requirements of Article 9 are not applicable to the perfection of a security interest in goods covered by a certificate of title statute. In that circumstance, perfection of a relevant security interest can be had only through compliance with the certificate of title statute. If the secured party perfects its security interest pursuant to such a statute and then assigns the security interest, must the assignee take some further action to reflect that it has become the secured party in order to continue such perfection, for example, having the certificate of title endorsed or reissued to name itself as the secured party or lienholder? Or is § 9-302(2), which provides that if a secured party assigns a perfected security interest, "no filing under this Article is required in order to continue the perfected status of the security interest against creditors of and transferees from the original debtor," applicable in this instance so that the assignee need not take any further action?

DISCUSSION

Section 9-302(1) states the general rule that in order to perfect a security interest under Article 9, a financing statement must be filed, except for certain specified transactions. See Comment 1. Section 9-302(3) provides for an additional exception: "The filing of a financing statement otherwise required by this Article is not necessary or effective to perfect a security interest in property" (emphasis supplied) that is subject to a filing system set up outside the UCC, including specifically, the certificate of title statute "of this state" (subsection (b)) or "a certificate of title statute of another jurisdiction under the law of which indication of a security interest on the certificate is required as a condition of perfection (subsection (2) of Section 9-103)" (subsection (c)).[1]

Inasmuch as every jurisdiction that has enacted Article 9 has also enacted a certificate of title (or ownership) statute, the effect of these provisions is that perfection of Article 9 security interests in property covered by certificate of title laws must always be accomplished by compliance with those laws. In essence, § 9-302(3) substitutes compliance with the requirements of the applicable certificate of title statute for filing a financing statement under Article 9 as the means for perfecting a security interest in the affected property. (A major exception to this rule is that the filing provisions of Article 9 remain applicable where the collateral is inventory held for sale by a person who is in the business of selling goods of that kind, for example, an automobile dealer. Section 9-302(3)(b).)

[1]Although some certificate of title statutes condition perfection on a physical notation being placed on the certificate and are clearly covered by § 9-302(3)(c) and the conflict provisions of § 9-103(2), others, while contemplating notation, provide that perfection is achieved by delivery of designated documents to a state official and could, therefore, arguably fall outside of the provisions of § 9-302(3)(c) and § 9-103(2). The Alabama Supreme Court in Lightfoot v. Harris Trust & Savings Bank, 357 So.2d 654, 23 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 750 (Ala.1978), dismissed the argument and held that Article 9 applies to goods covered by a certificate of title issued under either kind of statute. This Commentary supports the position taken in Lightfoot.

Section 9-302(2) states a corollary rule to § 9-302(1)'s general rule on perfection, which is that the perfected security interest can be assigned by the secured party to another person without the need for a further filing under Article 9 and that the security interest of the assignee continues to be perfected, without further action, against the creditors of and transferees from the original debtor. The security interest created in favor of the secured party is transferred by the assignment to the assignee;[2] it is the same security interest and not a new security interest. Accordingly, neither a new financing statement nor a statement of assignment is required to continue the perfection of the assignee's security interest in the property. Section 9-405 permits, but does not require, the assignee to file a statement of assignment against the original debtor. By not filing, the assignee may encounter certain risks with adverse business and legal consequences, and therefore, the assignee may opt to file a statement of assignment even though not required to do so. Some risks an assignee may encounter if the statement of assignment is not filed are: the assignor might fraudulently or inadvertently release or terminate the security interest; the assignor might assign the security interest to an innocent third party who might then file a statement of assignment and become the secured party of record; or the assignor might go out of business or disappear and make it difficult or impossible for the assignee to be able to respond to inquiries from third parties concerning the status of the security interest. The decision whether to file or not file a statement of assignment is essentially a business decision for the assignee to make, taking into account these various risk factors, as well as the cost, administrative convenience, and the like.

Inasmuch as the purpose of § 9-302(3) and (4) is to substitute compliance with the perfection requirements of the applicable certificate of title statute for filing under Article 9, § 9-302(4) makes it clear that it is only with regard to such perfection requirements that Article 9 is displaced by the certificate of title statute: "in all other respects the security interest is subject to" Article 9. Therefore, in order to determine whether § 9-302(2) is applicable to security interests perfected under § 9-302(3) and (4), it is first necessary to ascertain whether the certificate of title statute applicable to the particular transaction contains provisions concerning an assignment of a security interest and, if so, whether such provisions relate to perfection.

[2]The assignment of that security interest, whether a grant of a security interest in the underlying security agreement (chattel paper) between the assignor-secured party and the original debtor, or a sale of that chattel paper (§ 9-102(1)(b)), is a separate and distinct secured transaction and involves different considerations. The validity and perfection of the assignee's security interest against the creditors of and transferees from the assignor-secured party is governed entirely by Article 9 and a jurisdiction's certificate of title statute has no applicability. Perfection would be accomplished by the assignee either taking possession of the chattel paper (§ 9-305) or by filing a financing statement against the assignor-secured party (§ 9-304(1)). Comment 7 to § 9-302 makes it clear that the rules set forth in § 9-302(1) and (2) do not apply to the perfection of the assignee's interest in the security agreement when viewed in relation to the creditors of and transferees from the assignor-secured party. Section 9-302(2) only obviates the need to take further steps in order to continue perfection of the security interest in the underlying vehicle against the creditors of and transferees from the original debtor.

Even though all jurisdictions have enacted certificate of title statutes, there is a wide variation among those statutes. The Uniform Motor Vehicle Certificate of Title and Anti-Theft Act (the "Uniform Act") has been enacted in 11 jurisdictions. 11 Uniform Laws Annotated 250 (1993 Supp.). In a jurisdiction that has enacted the Uniform Act, it is clear from the provisions thereof concerning the assignment of a security interest that such provisions do not affect the perfected status of the assigned security interest. Section 22(b) of the Uniform Act expressly provides that the "assignee may, but need not to perfect the assignment, have the certificate of title endorsed or issued with the assignee named as lienholder, upon delivering to the Department [of Motor Vehicles] the certificate and an assignment by the lienholder named in the certificate in the form the Department prescribes." (Emphasis supplied.)

In other jurisdictions, however, the certificate of title statute contains provisions concerning the assignment of a security interest, but the statute is not clear whether such provisions relate to perfection. In that circumstance, the guiding principle is that "[t]he certificate of title statutes, when applied as lien perfection statutes, should be construed in harmony with the general U.C.C. scheme for perfection of security interests." In re Little-john, 519 F.2d 356, 358, 17 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 254, 257 (10th Cir.1975). Accord, General Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Rupp, 951 F.2d 283, 16 UCC Rep.Serv.2d (Callaghan) 510 (10th Cir.1991); In re Circus Time, Inc., 641 F.2d 39, 30 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1475 (1st Cir.1981). In so construing the statutes, the courts have recognized that the primary purposes of the certificate of title statutes are to facilitate the identification of motor vehicles or boats, the ascertainment of their owners, and the prevention of theft or fraud in their transfer; to provide the state with a convenient and accessible record of title for tax purposes; and to lend stability to the business climate surrounding the sale of motor vehicles and like goods. As observed by the court in In re Circus Time, Inc.:

> Absolute compliance with the requirements of the Certificate of Title Acts is not necessary to perfect a security interest in a vehicle. Courts have properly interpreted such acts in light of the perfection provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code, which recognize as effective to perfect a security interest any filing that 'substantially compl[ies] with the requirements of [the Code] . . . even though it contains minor errors which are not seriously misleading.' U.C.C. § 9-402(8); [other citations omitted] . . ..

641 F.2d at 42, 30 UCC Rep.Serv. at 1479. To the extent that § 9-302(2) and the certificate of title statutes can be construed as consistent with each other, the Code's underlying purpose and policy of making "uniform the law among the various jurisdictions" (§ 1-102(2)(c)) will, of course, be better served. See In re Hollis, 301 F.Supp. 1, 3 (D.Conn.1969) ("[I]t is the duty of a court construing the [Certificate of Title] Act to create a uniform national interpretation.").

The corollary of the foregoing principle is that a strict and literal construction of a certificate of title statute should be avoided if it produces a result that unnecessarily conflicts with the Uniform Commercial Code. Additionally, courts have refused to apply a highly refined and technical interpretation to a certificate of title statute to defeat the perfection of a security interest. See In re Williams, 608 F.2d 1015 (5th Cir.1979) and Janney v. Bell, 111 F.2d 103 (4th Cir.1940). By way of analogy, the overwhelming majority of courts have upheld the rights of a buyer in ordinary course of business under § 2-403 even though the buyer did not obtain certificate of title. See, e.g., Dugdale of Nebraska, Inc. v. First State Bank, 420 N.W.2d 273, 277, 6 UCC Rep.Serv.2d (Callaghan) 111, 116–17 (Neb.1988) and Comment 7 to § 2A-304, approving this line of cases; see also Associates Discount Corp. v. Rattan Chevrolet, Inc., 462 S.W.2d 546, 8 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 117 (Tex.1970) and Sterling Acceptance Co. v. Grimes, 168 A.2d 600, 1 UCC Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 487 (Pa.Super.1961), applying the same rationale to § 9-307. This same rationale should be applied to the question of whether an assignee must do something under a certificate of title statute to continue the perfected status of an assigned security interest when the statute contains provisions on assignments but does not specifically mandate any action by the assignee for perfection, or makes no or only isolated references to assignments, or is ambiguous as to what action an assignee must take and makes no mention of the consequence of the assignee's failure to take action with respect to the issue of perfection.

A number of other jurisdictions have incorporated parts of § 22 of the Uniform Act into their certificate of title statutes, but most of these states did not include the phrase "but need not to perfect the assignment" in their versions of § 22. See, e.g., Code of Alabama § 32-8-63. Even without the quoted phrase, it would be consistent with § 9-302(2) to view these statutes as permitting but not requiring the assignment to be noted on the certificate of title. This would also be consistent with § 9-405, which provides a permissive device for noting assignments in the public records. Those certificate of title statutes that do not specifically require, as a condition of perfection, that an assignee have the certificate of title endorsed or reissued to name itself as lienholder, but instead contain phrases like: "the title officer shall file each assignment received," or "upon receiving a certificate," or other words of similar import, may be construed consistently with § 9-302(2) as being merely permissive on this issue and as not requiring further action in order to continue perfection.

Section 9-302(2) can also be construed consistently with the certificate of title statutes in those jurisdictions where the latter is either silent as to assignments, e.g., Arizona Revised Statutes Annotated § 28-325 (Liens and encumbrances), or where there is an isolated reference to an assignee but no mention of perfection. For example, New Jersey Statutes Annotated § 39:10-9 states that "the name and the business or residence address of the secured party or his assignee shall be noted on the certificate of ownership," but makes no reference to the assignee having to note its name on the certificate in place of a secured party whose name is already noted or taking any other action such as filing a notice or document with the Division of Motor Vehicles. In those circumstances, § 9-302(3) and (4) do not have the effect of substituting the requirements of the certificate of title statute relating to perfection for "filing under this Article," inasmuch as the certificate of title statute does not state, within the purview of those UCC provisions, any requirement that the assignment of the security interest be noted on the certificate of title. As a result, § 9-302(2) remains applicable.

Some jurisdictions have certificate of title statutes that are ambiguous about what an assignee must do or whether the assignee must act in a particular way, but do not, within the meaning of § 9-302(2), relate such required action by the assignee to the continued perfection of the security interest. Pennsylvania is an example of a jurisdiction having such a statute. Section 1134(b) of Pennsylvania Consolidated Statutes Annotated, 75 Pa.C.S.A. § 1134(b), is an assignment section in the certificate of title statute which provides that the "assignee shall deliver to the department the certificate of title and an assignment by the lienholder . . .." The certificate of title statute does not specify either a time period within which such action is to be performed or the consequences of the assignee's failure to act with respect to perfection. Id. The only consequence specified in the statute for the assignee's failure to act is contained in § 1134(a) which says, "any person without notice of the assignment is protected in dealing with the lienholder as the holder of the security interest and the lienholder remains liable for any obligations as lienholder until the assignee is named as lienholder on the certificate." 75 Pa.C.S.A. § 1134(a). That language is identical to that in § 22(a) of the Uniform Act. Section 9-302(2) and these statutes may be construed consistently with each other as not requiring the security interest to become unperfected because of the assignee's failure to have its name noted on the certificate of title. In view of the express provision in § 22(b) obviating the need for the assignee to take any action "to perfect the assignment" (see pages 3–4), the language in § 22(a), viewed in that context, does not appear to relate to perfection. The language merely restates the other potential risks and adverse business and legal consequences discussed above that might result from the failure of the assignee to have its name noted on the certificate. (See page 3.)

In summary, § 9-302(2) and certificate of title statutes that do not specifically address perfection in connection with the assignment of a security interest can be construed consistently. As a result, in accordance with the mandate of § 9-302(4) that "in all other respects the security interest is subject to" Article 9, § 9-302(2) remains applicable. In order to interpret and apply § 9-302(2) in a manner that is harmonious with the various certificate of title statutes and to simplify, clarify, and modernize the law applicable to the assignment of security interests, "no filing under this Article" as used in § 9-302(2) should be liberally and broadly construed to include "no notation of a security interest on a certificate of title" when not expressly required as a condition for perfection by the applicable certificate of title statute. See § 1-102. This interpretation is consistent with the basic function of certificate of title statutes in that the continued notation of the security interest on the certificate gives notice to creditors of and transferees from the original debtor of the existence of the security interest in the property covered by the certificate of title.

CONCLUSION

If a security interest has been perfected under the applicable certificate of title statute and is thereafter assigned, and that statute does not expressly require the assignee to take some further action with respect to the certificate of title to reflect that it has become the secured party in order to continue such perfection, § 9-302(2) is applicable and the assignee is not required to place its name on the certificate of title "in order to continue the perfected status of the security interest against creditors of and transferees from the original debtor." If the assignee, nevertheless, wishes to have the assignment noted on the certificate of title, its right to do so and the procedure therefor are governed by the applicable certificate of title statute.

10. If a security interest has been perfected under the applicable certificate of title statute and is thereafter assigned, and that statute does not expressly require the assignee to take some further action with respect to the certificate of title to reflect that it has become the secured party in order to continue such perfection, § 9-302(2) is applicable and the assignee is not required to note its name on the certificate of title "in order to continue the perfected status of the security interest against creditors of and transferees from the original debtor." PREFACE TO PEB COMMENTARY

The Permanent Editorial Board (PEB) for the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) acts under the authority of The American Law Institute and the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. In March, 1987, the PEB resolved to issue from time to time supplementary commentary on the UCC to be known as PEB Commentary. These PEB Commentaries seek to further the underlying policies of the UCC by affording guidance in interpreting and resolving issues raised by the UCC and/or the Official Comments. The Resolution states that:

> "A PEB Commentary should come within one or more of the following specific purposes, which should be made apparent at the inception of the Commentary: (1) to resolve an ambiguity in the UCC by restating more clearly what the PEB considers to be the legal rule; (2) to state a preferred resolution of an issue on which judicial opinion or scholarly writing diverges; (3) to elaborate on the application of the UCC where the statute and/or the Official Comment leaves doubt as to inclusion or exclusion of, or application to, particular circumstances or transactions; (4) consistent with UCC § 1-102(2)(b), to apply the principles of the UCC to new or changed circumstances; (5) to clarify or elaborate upon the operation of the UCC as it relates to other statutes (such as the Bankruptcy Code and various federal and state consumer protection statutes) and general principles of law and equity pursuant to UCC § 1-103; or (6) to otherwise improve the operation of the UCC."

The full Resolution appears in the 1990 Edition of the UCC.

PEB COMMENTARY NO. 13
THE PLACE OF ARTICLE 4A IN A WORLD OF ELECTRONIC FUNDS TRANSFERS

ISSUE

Article 4A of the UCC deals primarily with electronic funds transfers made through the banking system.[1] Adopted by the ALI and the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1989, Article 4A has had a substantial measure of success. At this time it is law in all but a few states, has been incorporated into Regulation J of the Federal Reserve System[2] and, through their incorporation of New York State law, has been written into the Rules of CHIPS[3] and NACHA.[4]

For a transfer of funds to be governed by Article 4A, an instruction must be given to a bank ("Bank I" in this scenario) either to make payment to the person who is the ultimate recipient of the funds or to instruct some other bank ("Bank II") to make the payment.[5] If the instruction is that Bank I make payment to the ultimate recipient, the bank is dealing with its own depositor or someone who has a direct customer relationship with the bank. That relationship, while occasionally dealt with by Article 4A, is largely outside the coverage of the statute.[6]

Article 4A concentrates principally upon the relationship of one bank with another bank. Assuming that the instruction given to Bank I is that Bank I instruct Bank II to make the payment,[7] Bank II can as easily be located abroad as in the United States. For this reason, it is desirable that Article 4A find compatibility with such international law as exists in this area.

The major international legal document dealing with the subject of electronic funds transfers is the Model Law on International Credit Transfers ("Model Law") adopted in 1992 by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law ("UNCITRAL"). It covers basically the same type of transaction as does Article 4A, although it requires the funds

[1]While Article 4A was clearly drafted with electronic funds transfers in mind and while its present effect will be upon such transfers, it is not limited to electronic transfers and applies by its terms to all transfers among banks outside the checking system. This concept is elaborated upon in Comment 6 to § 4A-104.

[3]New York Clearing House Interbank Payments Systems, CHIPS Rule 3.

[4]National Automatic Clearing House Association, ACH Rule 1.7.

[5]We need not deal with who gives the instruction to Bank I. It might be a company or an individual originating a funds transfer; it might be another bank which is moving along an instruction that had been given to it.

[6]Provisions of Article 4A that do deal with the relationship of beneficiary's bank and beneficiary are §§ 4A-404 and 4A-405.

[7]Bank II can, having received the instruction from Bank I, in turn instruct another bank to make the payment. In this way, a series of banks can be involved in one transfer of funds from the party originating the transfer (called the "Originator") to the party ultimately receiving it (called the "Beneficiary").

transferred to have an international component.[8]

No foreign State has, to date, adopted the Model Law as its own local law. Nevertheless, in examining international payments, this Commentary assumes that the United States is subject to Article 4A and that the remainder of the world, because of the lack of development in the law otherwise, has adopted the Model Law now offered to it by the United Nations.[9]

DISCUSSION

We will hypothesize two funds transfers. One is sent by a New York bank to San Francisco ("NY-SF") and the other to London ("NY-L").[10]

We may correctly assume that a New York bank will have both business reason and technical capacity to send funds with equal ease to both San Francisco and London. Administratively, it will normally make little if any difference to the bank whether the transfer goes east or west. For the two transfers to be subject to different legal regimes can, however, create problems. For example, if New York imposes a different level of responsibility upon the bank for completion of the funds transfer depending upon where it goes, the bank's fee structure might vary between the two. Similarly, if there are different requirements, depending upon the location of the receiving bank, of persons who must receive notices or duties as to correcting a transfer made in error, different expectations will be created for the bank's systems. The banking system was clear in its reactions to Article 4A and the Model Law through its drafting that it would find it both difficult and expensive to administer electronic funds transfers subject to conflicting legal systems.

In its final form, the Model Law is close to Article 4A both in its overall structure and in its details, but is not the same.

A. Conflicts of Laws

The conflicts of law provisions of Article 4A and the Model Law tell us what law will apply to these transfers. In this respect, the two statutes are essentially harmonious: § 4A-507(a)(1) and an optional Article Y[11] in the Model Law both prescribe that, for most issues, the law of the receiving bank will govern.[12] Thus, Article 4A will generally govern for NY-SF, and

[8]Model Law, Article 1(1) requires that "any sending bank and its receiving bank (be) in different States." Henceforth, references to Article numbers will refer to the Model Law; references to sections beginning with "4A" will refer to the UCC.

[9]Full uniformity would of course occur if the United States adopted the Model Law. It is unlikely in the extreme that this will occur. See the Conclusion to this Commentary.

[10]We need not deal with funds transfers made to New York from different sending banks. The UCC and the Model Law generally base their choice of law provisions on the law of the receiving bank. Thus, all funds transfers received in New York would be dealt with by New York law and there would be no problem of inconsistencies. See the discussion, infra, under A. Conflicts of Laws.

[11]UNCITRAL was unable to agree whether a conflicts of law article belonged in the Model Law and, consequently, created an optional provision.

[12]Details of both Article 4A and the Model Law introduce complexities. For example, both permit the parties to select the Model Law for NY-L.[13]

B. Working of the Two Laws

Some examples will illustrate differences between Article 4A and the Model Law:

1. Consumer Transactions

Both Article 4A and the Model Law were written without a focus on consumer-related transactions and, therefore, without the particular protections that typically accompany laws written for the benefit of consumers. In Article 4A, this is evidenced by an exclusion through § 4A-108 of transactions covered by the federal Electronic Fund Transfer Act of 1978 ("EFTA"), which is tailored for the consumer funds transfer. In the Model Law, a footnote to Article 1 provides that the Law "does not deal with issues related to the protection of consumers."[14]

This surface harmony leads, however, to problems. For example, the EFTA does not deal with the number of issues treated by Article 4A. It does not, for example, define the time when the originator of a consumer funds transfer has made payment to the beneficiary, a question answered by both Article 4A and the Model Law. If the NY-L and the NY-SF funds transfers were consumer in nature and this question arose, it would be answered for NY-L and not for NY-SF (since the latter would be governed by the EFTA).[15] the applicable law. In an Article 4A transaction, the relationship between a beneficiary (that is, the party who will ultimately receive the money being transferred) and its bank are governed pursuant to § 4A-507(a)(2) by the law of the jurisdiction where the bank is located. Article 4A also contains rules that will govern when the funds transfer is made through a funds-transfer system (see text infra, at Notes 22–24), and that system has its own choice of law rules. This Commentary does not deal with such variations.

[13]One cannot exhaust the potential conflicts problems that arise even within this simple structure. For example, when the originator of the funds transfer instructs its New York bank to send funds to San Francisco or to London, the relationship of originator and bank is governed by the law of the receiving bank—New York. A funds transfer may also pass through several jurisdictions and raise additional issues. For the NY-SF and the NY-L transfers, however, the rule is that the law of California and of England will, respectively, apply.

[14]The Model Law does not present the sharp distinction between consumer and business transactions represented by the positioning of Article 4A and EFTA. The quoted language reflects the philosophy behind the Model Law—that its design is really for large, commercially oriented funds transfers—and justifies the positions taken on various issues. The Model Law on its face governs both consumer and commercial funds transfers and it was left to individual states to decide how their consumers would be treated.

[15]Presumably a court would look to analogies in other laws to see how the question should be answered in the NY-SF context. Presumably, the closest law for this purpose would be Article 4A and the court would use the Article 4A solution.

A limited number of consumer transactions—those handled through the FedWire system and a few others such as unplanned telephone transfers—are excluded from the EFTA by Federal Reserve Regulation E and returned to coverage under Article 4A. See 12 C.F.R. § 205.3(b) (1992).

2. Variation by Agreement

Both Article 4A[16] and the Model Law[17] generally permit the parties to vary their statutory obligations by agreement except as may be specifically prohibited. Areas of specific prohibition vary, however, between the two laws.

For example, the obligation of a receiving bank that is also the beneficiary's bank to pay the amount of an order that it has accepted to the beneficiary may not be varied by agreement under § 4A-404(c). It may be varied under Article 10 of the Model Law. If our New York bank were to enter into agreements with its receiving banks defining circumstances under which an accepted order should not thereupon be paid to the beneficiary, the agreements would be effective for the NY-L transfer and not for the NY-SF transfer.[18]

3. Use of a Funds-Transfer System

Most electronic funds transfers are executed through funds-transfer systems.[19] Section 4A-206(a) provides that a funds-transfer system is the agent of the sender. Errors made by a funds-transfer system are, therefore, the errors of the bank that sent the funds through the system. (For this purpose, however, the FedWire system is excluded, and the Federal Reserve bank operating FedWire is deemed to be just another bank.) The Model Law is silent on this subject.

Thus, if, in a NY-SF transfer, the New York bank gives a payment order of $100,000 to the CHIPS system and CHIPS mistakenly transmits $1,000,000, the error is that of the New York bank, which is considered to have sent $1,000,000.[20] In a NY-L transfer, one cannot be certain. It appears, however, that the error is that of CHIPS.[21]

[18]One might imagine a New York bank agreeing with certain of its correspondents that they would not pay money to certain named beneficiaries without checking first with New York. That such an agreement would be effective for foreign banks but not for American banks was not the subject of detailed discussion, but one might imagine that foreign spokesmen could have wanted to support greater freedom for their banking system than the United States believes should be tolerated.

[19]A "funds-transfer system" is defined under § 4A-105(a)(5) as a "wire transfer network, automated clearing house, or other communication system of a clearing house or other association of banks through which a payment order by a bank may be transmitted to the bank to which the order is addressed." Well-known domestic funds-transfer systems include the FedWire system of the Federal Reserve Banks, the CHIPS system of the New York Clearing House Association, and the systems of the National Automated Clearing House Association. Foreign systems include the Society of Worldwide Interbank Financial Telecommunication ("SWIFT"), the United Kingdom Clearing House Automated Payments System ("CHAPS"), and the Japanese BOJ-NET system.

[21]This sort of event and its consequences are typically covered in the rules of a funds-transfer system. As discussed above, both Article 4A, § 4A-501, and the Model Law, Article 4, authorize agreements varying their provisions. Rules of a funds-transfer system would probably be considered agreements under the Model Law and are agreements specifically under § 4A-501.

Under Article 4A,[22] funds-transfer system rules are given legal effect and may bind even parties who are not members of the system. Under the Model Law, the effect of a systems rule upon nonparties is not prescribed and, therefore, will be determined according to the law of contracts.[23] Generally, under American contract law, those who are not parties to a contract are not bound by its terms. If a funds-transfer system with its own rules is part of the two described funds transfers, the law applicable to the NY-L and the NY-SF transfers can be different.

4. Authentication Procedures

For the protection of the banking system and bank customers, both Article 4A and the Model Law establish procedures for the authentication of messages. The two systems work in similar manners.[24] Both protect a receiving bank if it properly authenticates a message, even if the message was sent without the sender's proper authority.[25] Both also relieve the sender of responsibility if it can prove that the message was sent by someone outside the sender's influence.[26] The Model Law[27] reimposes responsibility on the sender if the receiver can prove that the sender was responsible. Article 4A does not contain the reimposition responsibility, although this is implicit since the receiving bank will attempt to disclaim its liability by proving that the sender was responsible.

The effect of agreements varying the terms of the law again varies between Article 4A and the Model Law. Article 4A holds that (subject to certain limited and restricted exceptions) the parties may not vary its statutory authentication rights and liabilities by agreement.[28] The Model Law has no such prescription and the parties may alter their legal authentication relationships by agreement.[29] Thus, if the New York bank in our hypothetical agrees with its customers for a result other than as provided by the statutes, it will be effective for the NY-L transfer, but not for the NY-SF transfer.

5. Acceptance and Rejection

Under both Article 4A and the Model Law, a receiving bank is given the essentially unrestricted power to accept or reject an order sent to it. An order may be rejected by a notice sent to the sender.[30]

a. Receiving Banks Other Than the Beneficiary's Bank

If a bank (other than the beneficiary's bank) does not send a rejection notice, the legal consequences vary between the two laws; on the other hand, they resolve themselves, as the following discussion illustrates, without undue tension between them.

[28]Section 4A-202(f).

[29]Article 5(3) does provide that for the parties to agree that a sending bank will be bound by an authenticated message, the authentication must be reasonable. Section 4A-202(b) has a similar requirement.

[30]Section 4A-210(a) and Model Law Articles 7 and 9.

Under Article 4A, an order may be accepted by a bank other than the beneficiary's bank only by that bank executing a new order in favor of the next bank in line.[31] Failure to give a notice of rejection does not cause the bank to incur a penalty; neither does it result in acceptance. If the bank does not move, or "execute," the order, it is not deemed to have accepted the order, and the order is automatically canceled by operation of law in five days.[32] If the receiving bank has received actual funds covering the order, it must return the funds and pay interest to the sending bank until cancellation.[33]

Under the Model Law, a receiving bank that executes a new order is deemed to have accepted the order sent to it as under Article 4A.[34] An order that is neither executed nor rejected is deemed—unlike the Article 4A approach—to be accepted if funds covering the order have been paid to the receiving bank.[35] The receiving bank then is obligated to issue a new order in accordance with the responsibilities put by the Model Law upon the acceptor of an order. Similar to Article 4A, the payment order ceases to have effect after five days.[36] If the transfer is not completed, however, the bank must return any payment received by it plus interest to the date of payment[37] and does not suffer any further liability for its failure to execute the accepted order.

In the instant situation, still assuming that the San Francisco and the London banks are receiving banks that are not the beneficiary's bank, if an order is neither accepted nor rejected and if funds have been advanced to that bank (that is, if the order is "covered"), there would not be any duty upon the San Francisco bank to accept (that is, to execute the order in favor of the next bank in line) and the funds paid would bear interest for five days; for the NY-L transfer, the payment order would be accepted by the London bank, there would be a duty—albeit for a brief time—to move the funds, the acceptance would cease after five days, and the payment (the "cover") would bear interest until returned. The financial differences do not appear consequential since the receiving bank has the use of the funds until they are returned. Under the general structure of both laws not to impose more than interest penalties for failure to reject, the receiving bank in London would not incur other penalties for failing to honor its responsibility to move the funds.

b. The Beneficiary's Bank as a Receiving Bank

The ability of the beneficiary's bank to accept or reject payment orders is handled with essential comparability under the two laws. Under Article 4A, there are three events that trigger such a bank's acceptance, including rules based upon the relationship between the bank and the beneficiary,

"cover" of the order to the bank, and the passage of time.[38] The Model Law contains eight events signifying acceptance by the beneficiary's bank.[39] One does not anticipate significant variations in practice between the two laws.

6. Time for Execution

Although their approaches to the question of when a receiving bank must take action upon an accepted payment order differ in the two laws, they have an essential similarity. For example, both Article 4A[40] and the Model Law[41] basically require that an order be executed on the day it is received. The Model Law, however, permits the order to be sent on the next day. In the event that occurs, however, the receiver must "execute for value as of" the prior day (that is, must give the next bank in line interest for the day that execution was delayed).

7. Cancellation

Both statutes provide the mechanism for a payment order to be canceled. Under Article 4A, if there is a security procedure between sender and receiver guarding the authenticity of the original order, "the" (that is, the same) procedure must be followed for cancellations.[42] If the original order was not subject to a security procedure, the cancellation order need not be authenticated. Under the Model Law, it is necessary that every cancellation be subject to some security procedure, not necessarily the same one originally used and even if no security procedure was originally used.[43] If the cancellation order is not authenticated, it is ineffective.

In addition, under the Model Law, it appears that every cancellation order must be authenticated. Under Article 4A, the cancellation must be authenticated only if there was an authentication procedure applicable to the original order.

The Article 4A approach is applicable in the NY-SF transfer; the Model Law governs the NY-L transfer.

8. The "Money-Back Guarantee"

As part of their underlying philosophy that the originator's funds will be transferred by the banking system, both Article 4A and the Model Law contain a so-called "money-back guarantee." This provides that, if the total transfer of money is not completed, the originator (who, under the model we have been following, either gave an order to the New York bank or was someone who gave an order at an earlier stage in the total funds transfer that was transmitted by another bank to the New York bank) will obtain a refund plus accumulated interest and certain other charges.[44] The provisions of the two laws are consistent in major respects. Neither permits variation by agreement. The Model Law, however, relieves receiving banks from the guarantee if they can demonstrate that they accepted the transfer despite what had been perceived as "a significant risk."[45]

9. Underpayments and the Recovery of Overpayments

Both laws contain essentially comparable provisions requiring sending banks who sent orders in amounts less than the amounts sent to them to send the differences and to permit banks who sent excessive payments to recover the excess.[46]

10. Consequential Damages

In general, the measure of damages provided by both laws for violations of their standards is the payment of interest for moneys held for the times beyond which the law allows. Occasionally, additional charges incident to the transfer will be included.[47]

Probably the single most controversial issue underlying the drafting of Article 4A was whether banks should have liability for consequential damages resulting from their negligence or failure to comply with the requirements of the statute. The banks argued that, given the traditionally low fees that they charged to transfer funds electronically, they could not at the same time subject themselves to the risk of immense and unquantifiable consequential damage recoveries. Business users of electronic funds-transfer systems asserted that consequential damages were an appropriate result of the banks' transfer responsibilities. Consequential damages were ultimately eliminated from Article 4A.[48]

Consequential damages may, however, be imposed against a bank under the Model Law. In view of the intense opposition of some national banking systems and their representatives in the United Nations to this concept, however, they were reduced in scope to where they will be imposed only where a bank has acted "(a) with the specific intent to cause loss, or (b) recklessly and with actual knowledge that loss would be likely to result."[49]

Thus, the NY-L transfer by a New York bank involves greater risk than does the NY-SF transfer.

11. Request for Assistance

Article 13 of the Model Law "requests" a bank that receives a payment order to assist the originator and each prior bank and to seek the assis-

[45]A "prudent" originator's bank may agree with the originator that the money-back guarantee will not apply to a funds transfer if the bank accepted the transfer despite what it perceived as a "significant risk" that the transfer might not be completed. The example frequently given for this situation is where the transfer is to pass through areas involved in armed conflict.

[48]This result was ultimately agreed to by the major business interests in exchange for the consent by the banks to the "money-back guarantee" discussed in paragraph 8 above. Consequential damages were, however, authorized in favor of an ultimate beneficiary of a funds transfer against its bank that refuses to pay it after being notified of the particular circumstances giving rise to such damages. Section 4A-404(a). Consequential damages may also be provided for by express written agreement with a receiving bank. Section 4A-305(c).

tance of the next receiving bank "in completing the banking procedures of the credit transfer." Article 4A has no equivalent. In the NY-L transfer, the New York bank is subject to the request; in the NY-SF transfer, it is not. There is no penalty for failing to abide by the request.[50]

The absence of penalty may suggest that a bank need have no concern about the requirement. On the other hand, the presence of a law does impose an obligation to comply. In addition, assuming that there are bank regulators enforcing compliance, the regulators in London could bring an action against the New York bank for specific performance of its obligation to assist under Article 13; United States regulators could not.

CONCLUSION

The Model Law was drafted for world-wide enactment. It is, however, unlikely in the extreme that it will be enacted in the United States in the foreseeable future.[51] It was generally accepted by the foreign states in UNCITRAL that there would be no movement to repeal Article 4A in the United States and adopt the Model Law in its stead. The two laws basically live together in harmony, but to the extent there are differences they must be recognized and, to the extent possible, avoided or adjusted by agreement.

The PREFATORY NOTE to Article 4A is amended by adding the following paragraph at the end of the PREFATORY NOTE:

International transfers.

The major international legal document dealing with the subject of electronic funds transfers is the Model Law on International Credit Transfers adopted in 1992 by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law. It covers basically the same type of transaction as does Article 4A, although it requires the funds transferred to have an international component. The Model Law and Article 4A basically live together in harmony, but to the extent there are differences they must be recognized and, to the extent possible, avoided or adjusted by agreement. See PEB Commentary No. 13, dated February 16, 1994.

missioners on Uniform State Laws. In March, 1987, the PEB resolved to issue from time to time supplementary commentary on the UCC to be known as PEB Commentary. These PEB Commentaries seek to further the underlying policies of the UCC by affording guidance in interpreting and resolving issues raised by the UCC and/or the Official Comments. The Resolution states that:

> "A PEB Commentary should come within one or more of the following specific purposes, which should be made apparent at the inception of the Commentary: (1) to resolve an ambiguity in the UCC by restating more clearly what the PEB considers to be the legal rule; (2) to state a preferred resolution of an issue on which judicial opinion or scholarly writing diverges; (3) to elaborate on the application of the UCC where the statute and/or the Official Comment leaves doubt as to inclusion or exclusion of, or application to, particular circumstances or transactions; (4) consistent with UCC § 1-102(2)(b), to apply the principles of the UCC to new or changed circumstances; (5) to clarify or elaborate upon the operation of the UCC as it relates to other statutes (such as the Bankruptcy Code and various federal and state consumer protection statutes) and general principles of law and equity pursuant to UCC § 1-103; or (6) to otherwise improve the operation of the UCC."

The full Resolution appears in the 1990 Edition of the UCC.

PEB COMMENTARY NO. 14
SECTION 9-102(1)(B)

ISSUE

Does the application of Article 9 to the sale of accounts and chattel paper prevent the transfer of ownership of accounts or chattel paper?

DISCUSSION

Section 9-102(1)(b) provides, subject to certain exceptions,[1] that Article 9 applies "to any sale of accounts or chattel paper."[2] Comment 2 to § 9-102 explains that "a sale of [accounts or chattel paper is] covered by subsection (1)(b) whether intended for security or not . . .. The buyer then is treated as a secured party, and his interest as a security interest."[3] This Commentary examines whether that application means that ownership of receivables may not be transferred or that a buyer's interest in receivables is limited to one of security.

It is a fundamental principle of law that an owner of property may transfer ownership to another person.[4] Were a statute intended to take away that right, it would do so explicitly and such a significant curtailment of rights would be supported by substantial reason. No such reason is expressed or implied in the Code or the Official Comments. Indeed, the sale of receivables long antedates adoption of the Code, and it cannot be supposed that either the drafters of the Code or the legislatures that enacted it intended to work so drastic a change in existing law without clearly saying so. Moreover, a close reading of the text of Article 9 and its Comments, particularly in the context of the pre-Code history, compels the conclusion that Article 9 does not prevent the transfer of ownership.

Article 9 contemplates that sales of receivables may exist, and that the consequences of a sale differ from those of a transfer for security. For example, § 9-502(2) recognizes a distinction in the consequences under Article 9 between sales of receivables and transactions secured by

[2]For ease of reference, this Commentary refers to accounts and chattel paper collectively as "receivables."

[3]This drafting technique is implemented by conforming definitions. Section 1-201(37), for example, states that the term "security interest" includes "any interest of a buyer of accounts or chattel paper which is subject to Article 9." Section 9-105(1)(m) provides that the term "secured party" includes "a person to whom accounts or chattel paper have been sold." Section 9-105(1)(d) provides that the term "debtor" includes "the seller of accounts or chattel paper." Section 9-105(1)(c) provides that the term "collateral" includes "accounts and chattel paper which have been sold." That such inclusion was simply a drafting technique was long ago freely acknowledged by Homer Kripke in paragraph 2 of his Practice Commentary to § 9-502 of the New York UCC, Cons.Laws N.Y.Annot.Book 62½, Part 3 (McKinney 1964): "Subsection (2) of [§ 9-502] recognizes throughout the fact that this article [9] includes within its coverage not only true security transactions in which accounts are collateral, but also sales of accounts . . . which are included by artificial definitions."

receivables. It provides that, "[i]f the security agreement secures an indebtedness, the secured party must account to the debtor for any surplus . . .. But, if the underlying transaction was a sale of accounts or chattel paper, the debtor [as seller of the receivables] is entitled to any surplus [from collections of the sold receivables] . . . only if the security agreement so provides." (Emphasis added.) Section 9-504(2) has virtually identical language. Furthermore, Comment 4 to § 9-502, after acknowledging that "there may be a true sale of accounts or chattel paper," clarifies that "[t]he determination whether a particular assignment constitutes a sale or a transfer for security is left to the courts."[5]

Why, then, was Article 9 made "applicable" to the sale of receivables? The introductory Comment and Comment 2 to § 9-102 explain that Article 9 applies to both sales and security transfers of receivables to avoid the need to distinguish between such transfers for Article 9 purposes:

> [C]ertain sales of accounts and chattel paper are brought within this Article [9] to avoid difficult problems of distinguishing between transactions intended for security and those not so intended.
> Commercial financing on the basis of accounts and chattel paper is often so conducted that the distinction between a security transfer and a sale is blurred, and a sale of such property is therefore covered by subsection (1)(b) whether intended for security or not . . ..

The reason for subjecting both sales and secured transactions to Article 9 was to inform third parties of existing interests in a debtor's receivables and to provide protection for all types of assignments of receivables:

> There was an obvious reason for the inclusion of sales: it was necessary to protect [transferees] not only [in] straight accounts receivable financing but also [in] arrangements of the factoring type. [Emphasis added.] Article 9 merely follows the pre-Code accounts receivable statutes [covering sales of accounts and chattel paper as well as security transfers].[6]

This is not to say, however, that Article 9 has no impact upon a buyer's

[5]This Commentary likewise does not discuss what factors a court should look to in determining whether a particular transfer of receivables constitutes a sale or a secured loan. It addresses only whether Article 9 negates sale treatment even though a court viewing those factors would, but for Article 9, determine that the transfer was a sale. For a discussion of factors that courts have found relevant in determining whether a given transfer of receivables constitutes a sale or a secured loan, see Steven L. Schwarcz, Structured Finance, A Guide to The Principles of Asset Securitization, at 28–35 (2d ed. 1993).

[6]1 Gilmore, Security Interests in Personal Property § 8.7, at 275; § 10.5, at 308 (Little Brown & Co. 1965). Indeed, § 1-201(37) of the 1952 Official Draft of the UCC referred to a "financing buyer" of receivables and § 9-102(1)(b) referred to a "financing sale" of receivables. The word "financing" was deleted from both sections in Supplement No. 1 to the 1952 Official Draft, January 1955, pursuant to the 1954 Recommendations of the Editorial Board, for the reason that the phrases "financing buyer" and "financing sale" were perceived as "undefined concepts" and it was thought better to include all sales of receivables, subject to the exclusion provisions of § 9-104. The exclusion in § 9-104(f) was correspondingly broadened to exclude from Article 9 certain types of sales of receivables that, "by their nature, have nothing to do with commercial financing transactions." See Comment 6 to § 9-104.

ownership rights regarding the purchased receivables. For example, a failure to perfect as required by Article 9 may leave the transferee's ownership of the receivables subject to the claims of third parties, such as the seller's lien creditors or trustee in bankruptcy.[7] This perfection requirement, however, does not by its terms or by implication affect the transfer of ownership as between the seller and buyer.[8]

At least two Circuit Court opinions interpret the Code consistently with this Commentary. In Major's Furniture Mart v. Castle Credit Corp.,[9] the Third Circuit considered whether a transfer of a company's receivables should be construed as a sale or a secured loan. By considering that question, the court started from the premise that a transaction that Article 9 calls a security interest could nonetheless be a sale. If the transaction was a sale, the transferee would be entitled to surplus collections of the receivables. If the transaction was only for security, then the transferor would be entitled to the surplus collections. The court followed Comment 4 to § 9-502 and looked to non-UCC law to determine whether the transaction was a sale.

In In re Contractors Equipment Supply Co.,[10] the Ninth Circuit affirmed a lower court decision by looking to non-UCC law to determine that the transfer of receivables in question was a loan. The court stated that had there been a sale, the transferor would not be entitled to any surplus because "[a] sale entails the passage of title."[11]

In Octagon Gas Systems, Inc. v. Rimmer,[12] however, the Tenth Circuit, after stating that a purchased royalty interest in a natural gas system was [7]Section 9-301(1). Just as Article 9's perfection requirement may impact upon the rights of a buyer of receivables without negating that a sale has occurred, so too does the requirement of § 9-502(2) that a buyer of receivables with a right of recourse against the seller "must proceed in a commercially reasonable manner . . .." Section 9-502(2) does not, however, articulate an ownership principle but rather is an abbreviated codification of the rule that would be applicable in any event under common law and § 1-103, whether the recourse right is characterized as one of suretyship or contract. Assuming perfection, the sold receivables are beyond the reach of the seller's creditors or purported transferees from the seller not earlier filed or perfected. The buyer does not have to account in any way to the seller or its creditors, and the seller has no right of redemption or other legal or equitable interests in the receivables. These absolute ownership rights can exist in the buyer even if the purchase of the receivables is "with recourse." See Comment 4 to § 9-502.

[8]Provisions of Article 9 that deal with matters other than perfection and priority likewise are not intended to give a seller any legal or equitable interests in receivables that have been sold. For example, the debtor's right under § 9-506 to redeem collateral prior to consummation of foreclosure by a secured party applies only where the transfer of the collateral was intended for security because it is only there that the debtor has retained rights that must be foreclosed.

an account, erroneously stated that "[t]he impact of applying Article 9 to [the buyer's] account is that Article 9's treatment of accounts sold as collateral would place [the buyer's] account within the property of [the seller's] bankruptcy estate."[13] The court reached this determination despite the transfer of the royalty interest purporting to be an outright sale of all the seller's interest. To the extent the court relied on Article 9 in reaching its determination, this Commentary adopts a contrary position.

CONCLUSION

Article 9's application to sales of receivables does not prevent the transfer of ownership. Official Comment 2 to § 9-102 therefore is amended by adding the following paragraph:

> Neither Section 9-102 nor any other provision of Article 9 is intended to prevent the transfer of ownership of accounts or chattel paper. The determination of whether a particular transfer of accounts or chattel paper constitutes a sale or a transfer for security purposes (such as in connection with a loan) is not governed by Article 9. Article 9 applies both to sales of accounts or chattel paper and loans secured by accounts or chattel paper primarily to incorporate Article 9's perfection rules. The use of terminology such as "security interest" to include the interest of a buyer of accounts or chattel paper, "secured party" to include a buyer of accounts or chattel paper, "debtor" to include a seller of accounts or chattel paper, and "collateral" to include accounts or chattel paper that have been sold is intended solely as a drafting technique to achieve this end and is not relevant to the sale or secured transaction determination. PEB COMMENTARY NO. 15
ELECTRONIC FILING UNDER ARTICLE 9

ISSUE

Do data transmitted electronically to a filing office, which provide all the information required under the applicable provision of Article 9, constitute a financing statement or other filing under Article 9?

DISCUSSION

Under § 9-402(1), a financing statement is sufficient if it gives the names of the debtor and secured party, is signed by the debtor, and gives the specified other information. Similar signing and writing requirements appear for amendments, continuation and termination statements, assignments, and other filings. Under § 1-201(39), "signed" includes any symbol executed or adopted by a party with present intention to authenticate a writing. A "writing" includes any intentional reduction to tangible form. Section 1-201(46). Obviously a paper signed by the debtor meeting the other requirements of § 9-402(1) qualifies as a financing statement.

The UCC mandates that it is to "be liberally construed and applied to . . . modernize the law governing commercial transactions [and] to permit the continued expansion of commercial practices." Section 1-102. This provision mandates that the provisions of the UCC be interpreted and applied in a manner that is consistent with and furthers the utilization of advances in technology and resultant changes in commercial practices. See, e.g., Goss v. Trinity Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 813 P.2d 492, 13 UCC Rep. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 1138 (Okla. 1991) (intent of UCC is to aid in expansion of commercial practices; court, when faced with widespread commercial practice, should acknowledge it). Two of the stated purposes of the PEB Commentaries are "to apply the principles of the UCC to new or changed circumstances" and "to otherwise improve the operation of the UCC." Applying the statutory mandate, this Commentary concludes that data transmitted electronically to a filing office which provide all the information required under the applicable provision of Article 9 constitute a financing statement or other filing under Article 9. No statutory change is required to accommodate electronic filing.

This Commentary addresses only the issue of electronic filing under Article 9. Conclusions concerning the meaning of "signed" and "writing" in that context are not intended to suggest a meaning for those terms in other contexts, where relevant policies and factual considerations may differ. This Commentary also does not mandate that any state offer electronic filing or require any filing party to utilize that technique merely because it is offered. Prudent business practices to guard against fraud and forgery should be observed in the electronic environment just as they should be in the paper environment.

With respect to electronic filing under Article 9, Iowa has been accepting electronically transmitted financing statements and other filings since 1992, and Kansas initiated an electronic filing system in 1995. Texas, the state with the largest annual volume of filings in the nation, has recently implemented an electronic filing system. The American National Standards Institute has already created a standard (ANSI standard X12 154) for the electronic transmission to filing offices of financing statements and subsequent Article 9 filings. The Texas program is based on this standard.

Nothing in Article 9 mandates a particular mode of transmission of a filing to the filing office. Section 9-403 is written in media neutral language, providing that either "[p]resentation for filing . . . or acceptance of the statement by the filing officer constitutes filing . . .. " Indeed, although Part 4 of Article 9 does not utilize the term "send" with respect to filing a financing statement, it is instructive that the drafters defined that term as follows: "in connection with any writing . . . [send] means to deposit in the mail or deliver for transmission by any other usual means of communication . . .. The receipt of any writing . . . within the time at which it would have arrived if properly sent has the effect of a proper sending." Section 1-201(38). This definition further illustrates the Code's policy of flexibility, a desire to enable commercial practices to utilize future technological development, and a methodology of looking to practical results. Moreover, nothing in Article 9 appears to limit the filing officer's use of any particular technology for the receipt, storage, or retrieval of filings, whether such use occurs pursuant to published rules or regulations or simply as a matter of administrative procedure, suggesting that filing officers have the authority to adopt procedures and methodologies deemed by them to be reasonably suited to carrying out their legislatively mandated tasks. Finally, nothing in Article 9 mandates that a financing statement or other filing be on paper or any other particular medium. Article 9 prescribes the sufficiency of a financing statement filing not in terms of its form but in terms of its content, i.e., the presence or absence of the required data.

Signing is not limited to the cursive writing of the letters of the party's name by means of a pen grasped in the hand.[1] The focus of the definition is not on the technique but rather on the intent to authenticate. Official Comment 39 to § 1-201 states: "The inclusion of authentication in the definition of 'signed' is to make clear that as the term is used in this Act a complete signature is not necessary. Authentication may be printed, stamped or written; it may be by initials or by thumbprint. It may be on any part of the document and in appropriate cases may be found in a billhead or letterhead. No catalog of possible authentications can be complete and the court must use common sense and commercial experience in passing upon these matters. The question always is whether the symbol was executed or adopted by the party with present intention to authenticate the writing."

[1]With respect to sufficiency of a typed or printed (i.e., non-manually written) name as a signature, see, e.g., In re Save-On-Carpets of Arizona, Inc., 545 F.2d 1239, 20 UCC Rep. Serv. (Callaghan) 1081 (9th Cir. 1976) (secured party's intent to authenticate manifested by typed corporate name and its credit manager's name typed in appropriate spaces and submission for filing). Cases such as In re Kane, 1 UCC Rep. Serv. (Callaghan) 582, 587 (E.D. Pa. 1962) (required "an actual signature manually produced by a writing instrument in the hand of the signer in direct contact with the document being executed"), and In re Carlstrom, 3 UCC Rep. Serv. (Callaghan) 766, 772, 773 (D. Me. 1966) (stating that to incorporate § 1-201(39) into § 9-402 "does considerable violence to the language and context of § 9-402," and that § 1-201(39) "must be held to be inconsistent with the context of § 9-402 and hence inapplicable") are disapproved. Other cases where a filing without a manual signature was held insufficient are consistent with the analysis set forth in this Commentary because they are grounded not on the proposition that a manual signature is absolutely required but on the absence of evidence that the debtor had adopted some other symbol or otherwise intended to authenticate.

The statute and the Official Comment support the conclusions that (i) any symbol, including a typed or printed expression of the person's name, can constitute a signature; (ii) the person need not be the party who places it, physically or otherwise, on the financing statement; and (iii) the adoption of the symbol by the signer need not occur at the instant of such placement but can occur theretofore or thereafter.[2] In an electronically transmitted financing statement or other filing, the signature requirement is satisfied by the signer's adoption of a symbol that is transmitted electronically to the filing office. The symbol may be the signer's name, an asterisk, or any other symbol, provided that it is adopted by the signer. The symbol may be keyed or otherwise placed on the electronic "form" in the signature "box" (a field agreed upon by the sender and the filing office as the field for authentication data, such as that approved for such use under the ANSI standard). For validity as a "signature," there is no statutory requirement that the authentication data or symbol be transmitted to or received by the filing office in any particular medium or form.[3] The ultimate fact of legal significance, the signer's intent to authenticate, can

[2]For example, in Barber & Ross Co. v. Lifetime Doors, Inc., 810 F.2d 1276, 3 UCC Rep. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 41 (4th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 823 (1987), the seller's pre-printed sales literature, given to the buyer prior to the making of an oral requirements agreement, was sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds requirement of a signed writing by virtue of the printed trademark on the literature. See also John Deere Co. v. First Interstate Bank of Arizona, N.A., 709 P.2d 890, 42 UCC Rep. Serv. (Callaghan) 1110 (Ariz. App. 1985) (corporate debtor's name signed by principal in his representative capacity sufficient as debtor's signature although debtor did not come into existence until six days later).

[3]In Barber-Greene Co. v. National City Bank of Minneapolis, 816 F.2d 1267, 3 UCC Rep. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 1234 (8th Cir. 1987), the court held that the adoption need not be in writing. In that case, a financing statement was signed by the debtor's typewritten name followed by a cursive writing of the debtor's name that had been manually performed by the secured party's manager. The jury was instructed that the debtor had signed the financing statement by adoption if the debtor "intended [it] to be valid and expressed that intent by word or deed . . .. " 816 F.2d at 1269, 3 UCC Rep. Serv. 2d at 1237. The jury found that the debtor had knowingly authorized the secured party to sign on its behalf and had, before the filing, adopted the signature with present intent to authenticate. Id. The appellate court reviewed the statutory definition of "signed" and the related Official Comment, and looked to the policy supportive of continued expansion of commercial practices. 816 F.2d at 1270–71, 3 UCC Rep. Serv. 2d at 1239. It rejected the argument that adoption required a writing, relying both on the "common sense and commercial practice" language in the Official Comment and on Benedict v. Lebowitz, 346 F.2d 120, 2 UCC Rep. Serv. (Callaghan) 747 (2d Cir. 1965) ("creditor had not [manually] signed the financing statement but court held that the act of typing in the name [in body of the statement, not in the signature block at the bottom] coupled with [the] subsequent act of filing the statement indicated creditor's intent to authenticate"). 816 F.2d at 1271, 3 UCC Rep. Serv. 2d at 1240. Rejecting the assertion that a requirement of adoption in writing was intended by the draftsmen in order to eliminate issues of authentication or fraud, the court stated: "But it is undis-be established by any evidence lawfully admissible in court. A common mode of establishing such intent to authenticate will likely be the presentation of language to that effect in a security agreement or other writing signed by the debtor. A prudent secured party, of course, will obtain and preserve evidence of the debtor's adoption of a particular data or symbol with the intent to authenticate.

"Writing" includes any intentional reduction to tangible form. Even when the electronically transmitted filing data are not in tangible form before or during transmission, they are reducible to such form by the filing officer. Data in fact reduced to such form constitute "writings." Data transmitted electronically to the filing office may be reduced to tangible form in a variety of ways; common forms include microfilm, microfiche, magnetic tape, CD-ROM, other disks, other tapes, optical storage devices, and paper. All of these (and no attempt is here made to be exhaustive) are tangible and are writings.

Courts have repeatedly demonstrated their ability and willingness, in many contexts, in and outside of the Uniform Commercial Code, to accommodate technological developments and resultant changes in business practices. For example, telegrams have long been accepted by the courts as "writings" sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds.[4] See, e.g., Howley v. Whipple, 48 N.H. 487 (1869) ("it makes no difference whether [the agent] writes the offer or the acceptance in the presence of his principal and by his express direction, with a steel pen an inch long attached to an ordinary penholder, or whether his pen be a copper wire a thousand miles long"). More recently, the statute of frauds was held to have been satisfied by a telegram transmitted pursuant to telephonic instructions to the telegraph operator. Hillstrom v. Gosnay, 188 Mont. 388, 614 P.2d 466 (1980). To the same effect in the case of a "signed writing" sent by teletype, see Joseph Denunzio Fruit Co. v. Crane, 79 F. Supp. 117 (S.D. Cal. 1948), mot. for new trial granted, 89 F. Supp. 962 (S.D. Cal. 1950), rev'd, 188 F.2d 569 (9th Cir. 1951), cert. denied, 342 U.S. 820 (1951), and cert. denied, 344 U.S. 829 (1952), and by mailgram, see Hessenthaler v. Farzin, 388 Pa. Super. 37, 564 A.2d 990 (1989) (mailgram is a "signed writing" within real estate statute of frauds; dictum in a footnote alludes favorably to e-mail, telexes, and faxes), and McMillan, Ltd. v. Warrior Drilling & Engineering Co., Inc., 512 So.2d 14, 4 UCC Rep. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 1546 (Ala. 1986). In Apex Oil Co. v. Vanguard Oil & Service Co., Inc., 760 F.2d 417, 40 UCC Rep. Serv. (Callaghan) 1221 (2d Cir. 1985), a telex was held to constitute a "writing" satisfying the requirement of § 2-201(2) of a writing confirming puted in this case that the debtor was aware of the financing statement, the debtor had read the statement, and by its word and deed had accepted the statement as authentic. From time to time, [debtor] requested and received from [secured party] releases of its security interest. A written adoption in this case was unnecessary." Id.

[4]Article 9 does not state that a financing statement must be in writing. It is only the signature requirement, an authentication requirement, that speaks in terms of a "writing." The Article 9 requirement of a financing statement serves a notice function which can be fulfilled electronically; the requirement is not based on possibilities of fraud. Statute of frauds cases are mentioned simply as illustrations of courts being able to deal with new technology in relation to a pre-existing statutory framework.

A telecopy or "fax" is a commonly used device for the electronic transmission of data. A fax may send data directly from one computer to another without the data having been on paper at the outset or being "printed out" on paper by the recipient; or the data might be on paper at one end and not the other; or the data might be on paper at both ends, giving the appearance of a reproduction.[5] Accepting telecopies as writings within the meaning of § 2-201, see International Products & Technologies, Inc. v. Iomega Corp., 1989 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13589, 10 UCC Rep. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 694 (E.D. Pa. 1989), aff'd without op., 908 F.2d 962 (3d Cir. 1990); Bazak Int'l Corp. v. Mast Industries, Inc., 73 N.Y.2d 113, 538 N.Y.S.2d 503, 535 N.E.2d 633, 7 UCC Rep. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 1380 (1989). Approximately a dozen states presently accept financing statements transmitted to the filing office by fax.

CONCLUSION

Data transmitted electronically to a filing office, which provide all the information required under the applicable provision of Article 9, constitute a financing statement or other filing under Article 9 and no statutory change is required to accommodate electronic filing under Article 9. Official Comment 1 to § 9-402 is amended by the addition of the following language at the end: Nothing in Article 9 mandates a particular mode of transmission to the filing office of the data required to be supplied for a financing statement or other filing, mandates that a filing be on paper or any particular medium, or limits the filing officer's use of any particular technology for the receipt, storage, or retrieval of filings. Accordingly, data transmitted electronically to the filing office and reduced to tangible form constitute a financing statement or other filing under Article 9 if they provide all the information required under the applicable provision of Article 9. See PEB Commentary No. 15, dated July 16, 1996.

PREFACE TO PEB COMMENTARY

The Permanent Editorial Board (PEB) for the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) acts under the authority of The American Law Institute and the Uniform Law Commission (also known as the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws). In March 1987, the PEB resolved to issue from time to time supplementary commentary on the UCC to be known as PEB Commentary. These PEB Commentaries seek to further the underlying policies of the UCC by affording guidance in interpreting and resolving issues raised by the UCC and/or the Official Comments. The Resolution states that:

> "A PEB Commentary should come within one or more of the following specific purposes, which should be made apparent at the inception of the Commentary: (1) to resolve an ambiguity in the UCC by restating more clearly what the PEB considers to be the legal rule; (2) to state a preferred resolution of an issue on which judicial opinion or scholarly writing diverges; (3) to elaborate on the application of the UCC where the statute and/or the Official Comment leaves doubt as to inclusion or exclusion of, or application to, particular circumstances or transactions; (4) consistent with UCC § 1-102(2)(b),* to apply the principles of the UCC to new or changed circumstances; (5) to clarify or elaborate upon the operation of the UCC as it relates to other statutes (such as the Bankruptcy Code and various federal and state consumer protection statutes) and general principles of law and equity pursuant to UCC § 1-103; or (6) to otherwise improve the operation of the UCC."

PEB COMMENTARY NO 16
SECTIONS 4A-502(D) AND 4A-503

INTRODUCTION

A funds transfer is a series of payment orders starting with an originator's order to the originator's bank to cause a sum certain amount of money to be paid to a beneficiary. The series of payment orders culminates with a beneficiary bank crediting the account of a beneficiary for that sum certain. U.C.C. § 4A-104(a) (definition of funds transfer). The series of payment orders is a mechanism used to make a transfer of value through the debiting and crediting of bank accounts from the originator to the beneficiary. The funds transfer often involves one or more intermediary banks that receive a payment order from the originator's bank or another bank. The receiving intermediary bank then issues its own payment order to another intermediary bank or the beneficiary's bank. Several cases have raised the issue of whether a creditor of the beneficiary may serve creditor process on an intermediary bank and thus "capture" the value transfer while it is in process.

Article 4A provides that the creditor of the beneficiary may not serve creditor process on any bank other than the beneficiary's bank. U.C.C. § 4A-502(d). Official Comment 4 to § 4A-502 further explains the concept, and does so in relation to a creditor of either the beneficiary or the originator:

> A creditor of the originator can levy on the account of the originator in the originator's bank before the funds transfer is initiated . . . [but] cannot reach any other funds because no property of the originator is being transferred. A creditor of the beneficiary cannot levy on property of the originator and until the funds transfer is completed by acceptance by the beneficiary's bank of a payment order for the benefit of the beneficiary, the beneficiary has no property interest in the funds transfer which the beneficiary's creditor can reach (emphasis supplied).

Official Comment to § 4A-503 further explains both § 4A-502(d) and § 4A-503 are designed to prevent interruption of a funds transfer after it has been set in motion and that, in particular, intermediary banks are protected.

A funds transfer is a series of payment orders that create contractual obligations only as to the sender and receiver of each payment order. Those contractual obligations are not the property of either the originator or the beneficiary. In a simple funds transfer, the originator instructs its bank, the originator's bank, to debit the originator's account and order the beneficiary's bank to credit the beneficiary. Those instructions are payment orders. U.C.C. § 4A-103 (definition of "payment order," "beneficiary," and "beneficiary's bank"; § 4A-104 (definition of "funds transfer," "originator," and "originator's bank"). See also Regulation J, 12 C.F.R. § 210.26 (governing payment orders issued to or by a federal reserve bank). The originator is the "sender" of the payment order and the originator's bank is the "receiving bank." U.C.C. § 4A-103 (definitions of "sender" and "receiving bank"). If the originator's bank accepts the originator's payment order, the originator owes an obligation to the originator's bank to pay the amount of the payment order. U.C.C. § 4A-402(b). The originator's bank owes an obligation to the originator to execute the accepted payment order according to the instructions of the originator. U.C.C. § 4A-302.

In execution of the originator's payment order, the originator's bank may send its own payment order to the beneficiary's bank, but more commonly it will send its payment order to an intermediary bank. U.C.C. § 4A-104 (definition of "intermediary bank"). The originator's bank is the sender of its payment order and the intermediary bank is the receiving bank of that second payment order. Upon acceptance of that second payment order, the intermediary bank owes an obligation to the originator's bank, not the originator, to execute its own payment order that replicates the originator's bank's payment order (emphasis supplied). U.C.C. § 4A-302 (obligation in execution owed by receiving bank to its sender). The originator's bank, not the originator, owes payment of the originator bank's payment order to the intermediary bank. U.C.C. § 4A-402(b) (sender owes obligation to pay the amount of an accepted payment order to its receiving bank). In the event the originator is not able to pay the amount of its payment order to the originator's bank, but the originator's bank's payment order has been accepted by the intermediary bank, the originator's bank still owes a payment obligation to the intermediary bank. The intermediary bank has no right of recovery against the originator, but only has a right of recovery against the originator's bank (its sender) for payment of the payment order.

Further, the intermediary bank will then issue its own payment order to the beneficiary's bank for the beneficiary's bank to credit the account of the beneficiary when the beneficiary's bank accepts that payment order. Accordingly, the intermediary bank owes an obligation to pay for that order to the beneficiary bank, not the beneficiary. U.C.C. § 4A-402(b). Upon the beneficiary bank's acceptance of the payment order, it is the beneficiary's bank that owes an obligation to pay the beneficiary, usually by crediting an account of the beneficiary. U.C.C. § 4A-404. See also Regulation J §§ 210.28, 210.29, 210.30, 210.31, and 210.32.

In summation, under the Article 4A structure, the issuance and acceptance of payment orders create rights and obligations only as between the sender of the payment order and its receiving bank (e.g., between originator and originator's bank as to the originator's payment order), between the originator's bank and an intermediary bank as to the originator's bank's payment order, between the intermediary bank and the beneficiary bank as to the intermediary bank's payment order, and finally as between the beneficiary bank that has accepted a payment order and the beneficiary. Accepted and executed payment orders thus create contractual obligations that result in a series of credits and debits to bank accounts. They do not involve a transfer of property of the originator to the beneficiary. A receiving bank owes its contractual obligation to its sender to execute the payment order and the sender owes its contractual obligation to pay the amount of the payment order to its receiving bank. The intermediary bank has no contractual obligation to the originator or to the beneficiary, and neither the originator nor the beneficiary has any contractual obligation to or rights flowing from the intermediary bank. Thus, credits in an intermediary bank are credits in favor of the originator's bank, and are not property of either the originator or the beneficiary (emphasis supplied).

DISCUSSION

In a series of cases applying Admiralty Rule B regarding attachment, the federal courts in New York have held that the intermediary bank in a funds transfer is holding "property" of the originator or beneficiary and have thus allowed creditor process on an intermediary bank in an effort to collect a debt owed by either the originator or the beneficiary (as the case may be).[1] See, e.g., Winter Storm Shipping, Ltd. v. TPI, 310 F.3d 263 (2d Cir. 2002), cert. denied, 539 U.S. 927 (2003); Aqua Stoli Shipping Ltd. v. Gardner Smith Pty Ltd., 460 F.3d 434 (2d Cir. 2006); Consub Delaware LLC v. Schahin Engenharia Limitada and Standard Chartered Bank, 534 F.3d 104 (2d Cir. 2008); Navalmar (U.K.) Ltd. v. Welspun Gujarat Stahl Rohren, Ltd., 485 F. Supp. 2d 399 (S.D.N.Y. 2007); Compania Sudamericana de Vapores S.A. v. Sinochem Tianjin Co., 2007 WL 1002265 (S.D.N.Y. 2007); but see Seamar Shipping Corp. v. Kremikovtzi Trade Ltd., 461 F. Supp. 2d 222 (S.D.N.Y. 2006).

These decisions stem from the opinion of the court in Winter Storm that the value held by the intermediary bank is property of the originator. Under Article 4A, which is also adopted federal law in Regulation J for funds transfers through a federal reserve bank, the originator does not have any claim against the intermediary bank for return of the value in the event the funds transfer is not completed. Rather, the only party with a claim against the intermediary bank is the sender to that bank, which is typically the originator's bank. In an uncompleted funds transfer, it is the originator's bank that must refund the value to the originator. U.C.C. § 4A-402(d). The intermediary bank owes its refund obligation to its sender, the originator's bank, not to the originator. The originator's bank must refund to the originator even if it cannot recover from the intermediary bank.[2] The beneficiary likewise has no claim to any payment from the intermediary bank. The beneficiary's only claim to the funds is against its bank, the beneficiary bank, and then only when the beneficiary bank has accepted the payment order. U.C.C. § 4A-404. The intermediary bank thus holds no property of either the originator or the beneficiary. Since

[1]Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Supplemental Rules for Certain Admiralty and Maritime Claims, Admiralty Rule B(1)(a) permits attachment of "the defendant's tangible or intangible personal property" in the hands of named garnishees and thus allows garnishment of such property held by a bank.

[2]A simple example illustrates how these courts conflated privity-based contract claims between two parties to create property rights in a third party. Assume A owes B an obligation, B owes C an obligation, and C owes D an obligation. Under garnishment law, D cannot garnish A to satisfy the obligation C owes D. A holds no property of C (A owes B). Now substitute the Article 4A terms to this simple example. A is the intermediary bank who has received payment of a payment order issued by B, the originator's bank, and C is the originator. D is the garnishing creditor. The court in Winter Storm and its progeny have in essence allowed D (the originator's creditor) to garnish A (the intermediary bank) to collect on the debt C (the originator) owes to D.

Admiralty Rule B does not define what is "property" of a party, normally courts look to other law on that issue.

Other law is sufficient to define the parties' rights in a funds transfer. Article 4A is uniform law, enacted in every state in the United States, and Regulation J, which adopts in large part Article 4A's provisions, is uniform in applying to all funds transfers through the federal reserve system. Both define uniformly the rights of parties in a funds transfer. The Consub court reasoned that leaving the functional usefulness of Rule B attachments to the vagaries of the laws of 50 states would create a measure of anarchy, but did not take into account that Article 4A is uniform law in all U.S. jurisdictions and is adopted federal law.[3] Neither did the court explain how Rule B provides any basis for determining whether anyone had any

[3]The courts following Winter Storm have not followed the applicable law directly on point regarding property rights, but have also not followed applicable precedent predating Article 4A. The court in Reibor International Limited v. Cargo Carriers (Kacz-Co.) Ltd., 759 F.2d 262 (2d Cir. 1985), considered whether the CHIPS credit involved was property subject to attachment under the Admiralty Rules. The court said that federal law generally governs questions as to the validity of Rule B attachments, but the Admiralty Rules themselves offered little guidance and so the court agreed with the district court that state law more directly in point should be turned to. This is entirely consistent with respect to other contexts where federal law relies on state law to determine whether property is involved, such as in bankruptcy. See, e.g., Butner v. United States, 440 U.S. 48 (1979). Also the Court in Grain Traders, Inc. v. Citibank, N.A., 160 F.3d 97 (2d Cir. 1998), recognized the applicability of U.C.C. Article 4A when it held that law prevents an originator of a funds transfer from suing an intermediary bank. Id. at 102. Grain Traders remains good law in the Second Circuit and its logic applies to suits by beneficiaries as well.

Further, looking for a federal precedent concerning the "susceptibility of funds involved in an EFT to attachment under Admiralty Rule B," Winter Storm turned to United States v. Daccarett, 6 F.3d 37 (2d Cir. 1993), a forfeiture case involving the drug trafficking and money laundering activities of a Colombian drug cartel. 310 F.3d at 276–77 ("The case is instructive in the admiralty field because the attachments of funds in Daccarett were accomplished pursuant to the Admiralty Rules, incorporated by reference into the forfeiture statute.") Reasoning from Daccarett*'s* holding that " 'an EFT while it takes the form of a bank credit at an intermediary bank is clearly a seizable res under the forfeiture statutes,' " id. at 276 (quoting Daccarett, 6 F.3d at 55), Winter Storm concluded that the "inclusive language of [Rule B] and the EFT analysis in Daccarett combine to fashion a rule in this Circuit that EFT funds in the hands of an intermediary bank may be attached pursuant to [Rule B]." 310 F.3d at 276. Consub endorsed Winter Storm*'s* reliance on Daccarett, with minimal independent analysis. See 543 F.3d at 110–11. It should be noted that Rule B remains unchanged for all relevant intents and purposes since Winter Storm was decided in 2002 even though, effective December 1, 2006, the rules embodying the practice of maritime attachment in civil forfeiture actions and other in rem proceedings have been renamed the Supplemental Rules for Admiralty or Maritime Claims and Asset Forfeiture Actions (the "Supplemental Rules"). The revised Supplemental Rules added, inter alia, the reference to "Asset Forfeiture Actions," and Rule G, governing forfeiture actions in rem arising from a federal statute, "to bring together the central procedures that govern civil forfeiture actions." Supplemental Rule G, Advisory Committee's Note. The point is that Daccarett never decided whether either an originator or a beneficiary of the funds transfer had a property interest in the amount involved in a funds transfer received by an intermediary bank. It did not need to do so because in a forfeiture case funds can be seized even if they do not constitute property of the defendant. The Daccarett court, as appropriate in a forfeiture case, identified the amount of the funds as "traceable" to an illicit activity and therefore subject to attachment under 21 U.S.C. § 881(a). This is a critical differ-

Moreover, as a remedy quasi in rem, the validity of a Rule B attachment depends entirely on the determination that the res at issue is property of the judgment debtor at the moment it is attached. See J. Lauritzen A/S v. Dashwood Shipping, Ltd., 65 F.3d 139, 141 (9th Cir. 1995) (Rule B attachment characterized as quasi in rem jurisdiction "because jurisdiction is derived solely from the attachment of the property of the defendant"). Forfeiture, on the other hand, is a remedy in rem, based as it is on the legal fiction that " 'property used in violation of law [is] itself the wrongdoer that must be held to account for the harms it [has] caused.' " United States v. 92 Buena Vista Avenue, 507 U.S. 111, 125 (1993). This is a critical distinction between actions proceeding under Supplemental Rule C—now Rule G—and those brought under Rule B; it is not a "distinction[] without a difference," as Winter Storm found. 310 F.3d at 278.

Accordingly, unless there is superseding federal law, such as a drug forfeiture law or a regulation of the Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Assets Control ("OFAC"), Article 4A must be honored. Rule B is not such a superseding law.

[4]The Consub court believed that the Winter Storm rule was not shown to be unworkable. Note that U.C.C. Article 4A is substantially premised on the ability to net obligations because of the large sums involved. U.C.C. § 4A-403. If a particular creditor can seize funds and frustrate that plan, the resultant systemic risk may provide the demonstration that the Winter Storm approach and its progeny are unworkable.

Even absent that scenario, the Winter Storm approach is proving to be practically unworkable. The result of the Winter Storm approach has been a staggering number of maritime writs that New York banks are required to process on a daily basis. For example, from October 1, 2008 to January 31, 2009, maritime plaintiffs filed 962 lawsuits seeking to attach more than $1.35 billion. These lawsuits constituted 33 percent of all lawsuits filed in the Southern District of New York during that period, and the resulting maritime writs only add to the burden of 800 to 900 prior writs already served daily on the District's banks. The numbers have tapered off only slightly during the past months; from February 1, 2009 to April 30, 2009, maritime plaintiffs filed 498 lawsuits seeking to attach a total of $720 million. The explosion of maritime writs served on the banks has been logistically overwhelming.

Of even more significance, however, this explosion of writs creates an additional threat to the U.S. dollar as the world's primary reserve currency and New York's standing as a center of international banking and finance. Confronted with this situation, companies around the world may well consider restructuring their transactions to provide for payments in euros, sterling, yen, or some other currency to avoid using U.S. dollars cleared through intermediary banks in the United States, or clear transactions through one of the proliferating off-shore dollar clearing networks. Because the only contact with the United States in most of these transactions is the use of an intermediary bank in the United States to clear U.S. dollars, the U.S. litigation apparatus can be avoided entirely by the relatively simple expedient of using a different currency. As a result, Winter Storm and its progeny have had a far greater, and damaging, potential impact on U.S. and foreign banks located in New York than might have been anticipated.

An additional significant problem for banks is that the only practical way in which they can accommodate post-Winter Storm attachments is by frequent amendments to their software filters used to identify transactions involving entities and other persons whose financial transactions are blocked under OFAC regulations. OFAC administers U.S. economic sanctions programs arising under the Trading with the Enemy Act, 50 U.S.C. app. § 5, the International Emergency Economic Powers Act, 50 U.S.C. §§ 1701 to 1706, and other statutes. OFAC regularly issues bulletins that add or delete entities or persons from its lists, and banks must update their screening software to reflect these changes. This year, OFAC has updated its lists 19 times through May 6, 2009 (83 business days). By contrast, new maritime attachment orders were filed nearly every business day. The process of constantly amending the software filters to deal with this flood of maritime attachments has greatly increased the burden on the banks, requiring them to take down their OFAC filters almost

In uniform law under Article 4A and under Regulation J, neither the originator nor the beneficiary of a funds transfer has any property claim to the value held by an intermediary bank in a funds transfer. Thus, neither a creditor of an originator nor the creditor of a beneficiary may successfully issue creditor process[5] to an intermediary bank as the intermediary bank is not holding property of either the originator or the beneficiary. To the extent that the cases cited earlier indicate to the contrary, that reasoning is disapproved and should not be followed.

every day, vastly increasing the chance that the OFAC database will be corrupted by the manipulation, and substantially increasing the number of "hits," including numerous false positives that these filters now generate, creating real risks of inefficiency and error.

In addition, permitting a beneficiary's creditor to attach a funds-transfer credit, ordinarily held only momentarily in New York, would exacerbate the considerable due-process concerns inherent in restraining a funds transfer. The defendants in maritime cases invariably are foreign corporations with few or no contacts with the United States. In many of the cases the defendant does not appear to have significant contacts, if any, with New York. Indeed, for a maritime defendant's property to be prima facie subject to a Rule B attachment, the plaintiff is required to attest, pursuant to Rule B(1)(b), that the defendant could not be found within the District. See STX Panocean (UK) Co., Ltd. v. Glory Wealth Shipping Pte Ltd., 560 F.3d 127, 130–31 (2d Cir. 2009). Moreover, the funds transfers at issue are often meant to effect payment from a third party's non-U.S. account to the defendant's non-U.S. account, or vice versa. The New York garnishee banks in most cases are involved as intermediary banks only because the payment was denominated in U.S. dollars.

[5]"Creditor process" means levy, attachment, garnishment, notice of lien, sequestration, or similar process issued by or on behalf of a creditor or other claimant with respect to an account. As to "account," see "authorized account" defined in U.C.C. § 4A-105(a)(1).

APPENDIX B

1972 Official Text Showing Changes Made in former Text of Article 9, Secured Transactions, and of Related Sections and Reasons for Changes

General Comment on the Approach of the Review Committee for Article 9*

Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code was the first integration of the badly fragmented field of chattel security. It was, therefore, the most innovative of the articles of the Code, and many persons have indicated their belief that it is the Code's most valuable article.

Nevertheless, the fact that it was a first integration of complex problems led to some imperfection of the drafting. The Reporters have reported to the Committee many instances in which the drafting could be improved for clarity or to answer questions that can be posed that are not now clearly answered. Yet the outstanding result of Article 9 in practice has been that it has been gratifyingly successful; that no errors with serious consequences have been disclosed; and that the demands for change have been in relatively narrow areas. The Committee has therefore felt that it is not its responsibility, consistent with the terms of creation of the Permanent Editorial Board, to seek perfection where the Code appears to be working satisfactorily without significant problems in practice, for to do so would run the risk of opening up still further problems.

The Committee has in mind that at a minimum the changes finally adopted by it, the Permanent Editorial Board and the sponsoring organizations will take several years to enact in the 51 jurisdictions which have now adopted the Code, and that it would be a great mistake to introduce serious non-uniformity into any fundamental aspect of operations under Article 9. The Code must remain uniform in its day-to-day impact and operation even if there should be a significant period which may elapse before the Committee's ultimate proposals are adopted in all enacting jurisdictions. Thus the proposed changes must be compatible in operation with the existing Code, and the Committee has eschewed amendment merely for the sake of theoretical improvement where there was no pressing problem illustrated by non-uniform amendment or by substantial demand for change.

*The Review Committee for Article 9 prepared the following document to aid understanding of its recommendations. The discussion is by topics rather than by section as in the Reasons for Change and in the Comments. This document has not been approved by the Permanent Editorial Board for the Uniform Commercial Code or by the Council of the American Law Institute. This document is in the form approved at the last meeting of the Committee in October, 1970. Where the Permanent Editorial Board recommended changes in the statutory text which are inconsistent with the Committee's discussion, that fact is noted in footnotes.

The proposed changes have been limited to Article 9 except in a few instances where an individual section of Article 1, 2 or 5 had to be changed to correspond with the changes in Article 9.

The Review Committee has not sought herein to follow the Permanent Editorial Board's past practice of commenting individually on non-uniform amendments, but has proposed a revision in depth of Article 9 to take into account the amendments and also criticisms that might lead to non-uniform amendments. To the extent that the Committee has not incorporated amendments in its proposals in exact words or in substance, they should be deemed disapproved as merely stylistic or mere matters of detail, or because the problem was handled in some other fashion, or because the Committee disagreed as a matter of policy.

There will be Reasons for Change and revised Comments to the sections changed. In addition, because the proposed changes in any given section may be related to several different problems, and the solution to one problem involves changes in more than one section, there is set forth below a Description of Proposed Changes from the 1962 Text, with Reasons Therefor, arranged by topic.[1]

The topics discussed are the following:

A. Fixtures
B. Crops and Farm Products
C. Timber
D. Oil, Gas and Minerals
E. Intangibles, Proceeds and Priorities
F. Conflict of Laws

[1]The Committee has had a difficult judgmental task in determining the length and the amount of detail in this Statement. To outline the problems considered in full detail with discussion of arguments pro and con and other possible solutions would have expanded this Statement to the length of a treatise. The Committee has sought to find an appropriate middle ground in succinct statements of the difficulties of the existing Code and the intended operation of suggested solutions. These should be understandable to persons basically familiar with the concepts of Article 9. There is an extensive literature in which the reader can find most of the problems discussed in more detail. It would not be possible in this Statement to cite all of the worthwhile discussions, but mention may be made of Gilmore, Security Interests in Personal Property (2 volumes, 1965); Coogan, Hogan and Vagts, Secured Transactions under the Uniform Commercial Code (2 volumes, 1963); Hawkland, A Transactional Guide to the Uniform Commercial Code (ALI-ABA Joint Committee on Continuing Legal Education, 2 volumes, 1964, (hereinafter referred to as ALI-ABA Joint Committee)); Spivack, Secured Transactions (ALI-ABA Joint Committee, 1960); Davenport and Henson, Secured Transactions—ii, (ALI-ABA Joint Committee, 1966); and Uniform Commercial Code Handbook, (American Bar Ass'n, 1964). There have been published transcripts of three discussions in which various members of the Committee, Reporters, Consultants and other specialists have discussed in depth some of the problems here considered: A Practical Approach to Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code, 19 Bus.Law. 20 (1963); Advanced ALI-ABA Course of Study on Banking and Secured Transactions Under The Uniform Commercial Code (ALI-ABA Joint Committee, 1968); Problems of Lenders, Borrowers and Sellers Under the Uniform Commercial Code (1968). The extensive and valuable discussions of some of these problems in periodic legal literature may be located through the usual indices and also through Ezer, Uniform Commercial Code Bibliography and Supplements (ALI-ABA Joint Committee, 1966, 1967 and 1969).

G. Motor Vehicles and Related Problems of Perfection
H. Matters of Scope
I. Filing
J. Default

A. Fixtures

A-1. Section 9-313 deals with the problem that certain goods which are the subject of chattel financing become so affixed or otherwise so related to real estate that they become part of the real estate, and the chattel interests would be subordinate to real estate interests except as protected by the priorities regulated by the section. Such goods are called "fixtures." Some fixtures also retain their chattel nature in that a chattel financing with respect to them may exist and may continue to be recognized. But this concept does not apply if the goods are integrally incorporated into the real estate.

A-2. Existing Section 9-313 states that the rules of the Section do not apply to goods incorporated in the structure in the manner of lumber, etc. This formulation of the problem would lead to the conclusion that these goods integrally incorporated into real estate are not fixtures. In contrast, the Committee's proposal defines "fixture" to include any goods which become so related to particular real estate that an interest in them arises under real estate law and therefore, goods integrally incorporated into the real estate are clearly fixtures. This usage, in the Committee's opinion, conforms more clearly to pre-Code usage in most states than does the existing Section 9-313, and therefore permits a less confusing reference to pre-Code cases. There is no practical difference, however, because the Committee's proposal, like the existing Section 9-313, provides in substance that no security interest exists under Article 9 in ordinary building materials incorporated into an improvement on land.

A-3. Thus both the existing section and the Committee proposal recognize three categories of goods: (1) those which retain their chattel character entirely and are not part of the real estate; (2) ordinary building materials which have become an integral part of the real estate and cannot retain their chattel character for purposes of finance; and (3) the intermediate class which has become real estate for certain purposes, but as to which chattel financing may be preserved. This third and intermediate class is the primary subject of Section 9-313. The demarcation between these classifications is not delineated by this section.

A-4. Goods may be technically "ordinary building materials," e.g., window glass, but if they are incorporated into a structure which as a whole has not become an integral part of the real estate, the rules applicable to the ordinary building materials follow the rules applicable to the structure itself. The outstanding examples presenting this kind of problem are the modern "mobile homes" and the modern prefabricated steel buildings usable as warehouses, garages, factories, etc. In the case of the mobile homes, most of them are erected on leased land and the right of the debtor under a mobile home purchase contract to remove the goods as lessee will make clear that his secured party ordinarily has a similar right. See proposed paragraph (5)(b) of Section 9-313. In cases where mobile homes or prefabricated steel buildings are erected by a person having an ownership interest in the land, the question into which category the buildings fall is one determined by local law. In general, the governing local law will not be that applicable in determining whether goods have become real property between landlord and tenant, or between mortgagor and mortgagee, or between grantor and grantee, but rather that applicable in a three-party situation, determining whether chattel financing can survive as against parties who acquire rights through the affixation of the goods to the real estate.

A-5. The assertion that no security interest exists in ordinary building materials is only for the operation of the priority provisions of this section. It is without prejudice to any rights which the secured party may have against the debtor himself if he incorporated the goods into real estate or against any party guilty of wrongful incorporation thereof in violation of the secured party's rights.

A-6. In considering fixture priority problems, there will always first be a preliminary question whether real estate interests per se have an interest in the goods as part of real estate. If not, it is immaterial, so far as concerns real estate parties, as such, whether a chattel security interest is perfected or unperfected. In no event does a real estate party acquire an interest in a "pure" chattel just because a security interest therein is unperfected. If on the other hand real estate law gives real estate parties an interest in the goods, a conflict arises and this section states the priorities.

A-7. The general principle of priority announced in the proposed Section 9-313 is set forth in paragraph (4)(b). It is basically that a fixture filing gives to the fixture security interest priority as against other real estate interests according to the usual priority rule of conveyancing, that is, the first to file or record prevails. An apparent limitation to this principle set forth in paragraph (4)(b), namely that the secured party must have had priority over any interest of a predecessor in title of the conflicting encumbrancer or owner, is not really a limitation, but is an expression of the usual rule that a person must be entitled to transfer what he has. Thus, if the fixture security interest is subordinate to a mortgage, it is subordinate to an interest of an assignee of the mortgage even though the assignment is a later recorded instrument. Similarly if the fixture security interest is subordinate to the rights of an owner, it is subordinate to a subsequent grantee of the owner and likewise subordinate to a subsequent mortgagee of the owner.

A-8. A qualification of the rule based on priority of filing or recording is paragraph (4)(d), where rules of priority in filing or recording are preserved, but there is no requirement that as against a judgment lienor of the real estate, the prior filing of the fixture security interest must be in the real estate records. The Committee thought that the fixture security interest if perfected first should prevail even though not filed or recorded in real estate records, because a judgment creditor is not[2] a reliance creditor who would have searched records. Thus, even a prior filing in the chat-

[2]It has since been pointed out that in Pennsylvania, because of the use of the confession of judgment to obtain a real estate lien, the judgment creditor may be a tel records should protect the priority of a fixture security interest against a subsequent judgment lien.

It is hoped that this rule will also have the effect of preserving a fixture security interest against invalidation by a trustee in bankruptcy. That would, of course, be the result under Section 60a of the Bankruptcy Act if the time of perfection of the fixture security interest were measured by the judgment creditor test applicable to personal property. It would not be the result if the time of perfection were measured by the purchaser test applicable to real estate. It is hoped that since the fixture security interest arises against the goods in their capacity as chattels, the bankruptcy courts will apply the judgment creditor test. But the effectiveness of the Committee's drafting to achieve its purpose cannot be known certainly until the courts adjudicate the question or until it is settled by amendment to Section 60a of the Bankruptcy Act.

The phrase "lien by legal or equitable proceedings" is taken from Section 70c of the Bankruptcy Act, and is intended to encompass all of the three ways in which judgment liens are there described.

It has been suggested that a fixture security interest perfected against lien creditors but subordinate to other real estate interests might be vulnerable to attack under Section 70e of the Bankruptcy Act. The interpretation involved is in dispute among bankruptcy scholars. In any event, those concerned with the question can avoid the issue by not taking advantage of the proposed statutory sanction of a filing in other than the real estate records.

It was also suggested that paragraph (4)(d) should provide for a 10-day grace period like those in Sections 9-301(2) and 9-312(4). But the Committee thought the practical need for such a provision was slight and did not justify the resulting complexities.

A-9. A special exception to the usual rule of priority based on time is the one of paragraph (4)(c) in favor of holders of security interests in factory and office machines, and in certain replacement domestic appliances, as discussed below. This is not as broad an exception as it might seem. To repeat, a fixture conflict is reached only if the goods are held as a matter of local law to have become part of the real estate. If so, the rule of paragraph (4)(c) operates only if the fixture security interest is perfected before the goods become fixtures. Having been perfected, it would of course have priority over subsequent real estate interests under the rule of paragraph (4)(b). Since it would in almost all cases be a purchase money security interest, it would also have priority over other real estate interests under the purchase-money priority of paragraph (4)(a), to be discussed in paragraph A-11. The rule is stated separately because the permitted perfection is by any method permitted by the article, and not exclusively by fixture filing in the real estate records. This rule is made necessary by the confusions of the law as to whether certain machinery and appliances become fixtures.

As an additional point, in the case of machinery, the separate statement of this rule makes clear that it is not overridden by the construction mortgage priority of subsection (6), as would have been true if reliance had been solely on the purchase money priority. The Committee considers that factory and office machines are not always financed as part of a construction mortgage, and that it is reasonable to expect the mortgagee to be alert to conflicting chattel financing of these machines.

A-10. As to appliances, the rule stated is limited to readily removable replacements, not original installations of appliances. To facilitate financing of original appliances in new dwellings as part of the real estate financing of the dwellings, no special priority is given to chattel financing of the appliances. The section leaves to other law of the state the question whether original installations are fixtures to which the protection accorded by this section to construction mortgages would be applicable. Likewise, it is recognized that (when not supplied by tenants) appliances in commercial apartment buildings are intended as permanent improvements, and no special rule is stated for appliances in that case. The special priority rule here stated in favor of chattel financing is limited to situations where the installation of appliances may not be intended to be permanent, i.e., replacement appliances in apartment units that are likely to be owner-occupied—those with not more than four family units.[3] The principal effect of the rule is to make clear that a secured party financing occasional replacements of domestic appliances in dwellings, duplexes or similar units need not concern himself with real estate descriptions or records but may perfect by ordinary chattel filing; indeed, a purchase-money replacement in the buyer's own dwelling will be consumer goods, and perfection without filing will be possible. (The priority against the construction mortgage has no application to replacement appliances.)

A-11. The principal exception to the rule of priority based on time of filing or recording is a priority given in paragraph (4)(a) to purchase money security interests in fixtures as against prior recorded real estate interests, provided that the purchase money security interest is filed as a fixture filing in the real estate records before the goods become fixtures or within 10 days thereafter. This priority corresponds to one given in Section 9-312(4), and the 10 days of grace represents a reduction of the purchase money priority as against prior interests in the real estate under the present Section 9-313, where the purchase money priority exists even though the security interest is never filed.

It should be emphasized that this purchase money priority with the 10-day grace period for filing is limited to rights against prior real estate interests. There is no such priority with the 10-day grace period as against subsequent real estate interests. The fixture security interest can defeat subsequent real estate interests only if it is filed first and prevails under the usual conveyancing rule recognized in paragraph (4)(b).

A-12. The purchase money priority presents a difficult problem in relation to construction mortgages. The latter will ordinarily have been recorded even before the commencement of delivery of materials to the job, and therefor will be "prior" as against the fixture security interests. Present Section 9-313(4) seeks to work this out by treating each advance under a construction mortgage as a separate subsequent loan, but then gets into difficulties of language as to the times of actual advance and the times of commitment. The Committee's proposal is far more favorable to real estate interests, because it provides that the purchase money priority does not apply as against construction mortgages. The latter will ordinarily be recorded before the filing of the fixture security interest, and therefore will have priority over the latter under the basic rule of paragraph (4)(b), and subsection (6) expressly states this subordination. It is the Committee's intention that the priority of a construction mortgage shall apply only during the construction period leading to the completion of the improvement; and that as to additions to the building made long after completion of the improvement, the construction priority will not apply simply because the additions are financed by the real estate mortgagee under an open end clause of his construction mortgage. In such case, the applicable principles will be those of paragraphs (4)(a) and (4)(b). The Committee has further provided that a refinancing of a construction mortgage has the same priority as the mortgage itself. The phrase "an obligation incurred for the construction of an improvement" is intended to cover both optional advances and advances pursuant to commitment, and to include advances for incidental expenses such as financing and title costs.[4]

[3]The Permanent Editorial Board revised the Committee's draft to limit this rule, so far as it concerns replacement appliances, to consumer goods, i.e., those used for the buyer's personal or family purposes. The reference to buildings of four units or less was eliminated.

A-13. The term "fixture filing" has been introduced and defined. It helps to emphasize a point that was intended but not clearly set forth in the existing Code—that when a filing is intended to give the priority advantages herein discussed against real estate interests, the filing must be for record in the real estate records and indexed therein, so that it will be found in a real estate search (except as stated in paragraphs A-8 to A-10).

A-14. The prior uniform provisions seemed to make it possible for a fixture supplier to retain a security interest against a contractor, to the possible surprise and deception of real estate interests. Proposed Section 9-313(4)(a) and (b) preclude such retention by a fixture supplier by denying priority to the security interest unless the debtor has an interest of record in the real estate.

A-15. The status of fixtures installed by tenants (as well as such persons as licensees and holders of easements) is unclear under the present Code. The Committee's proposal in paragraph (5)(b) is that if the debtor (tenant or other interest mentioned) has the right to remove the fixture as against a real estate interest, the secured party has priority over that real estate interest.

A-16. The Committee proposes a change in Section 9-302(1)(d) so that there will be no exception of fixtures from the rule that a purchase money security interest in consumer goods is perfected without filing, and thus good against lien creditors and the trustee in bankruptcy. See paragraph [4]The Permanent Editorial Board changed the text of Section 9-313(1)(c) to make clear that the term "construction mortgage" may cover land acquisition costs.

A-8. The fixture security interest would no longer have to be filed in all cases, but only in cases (for goods other than replacement appliances) in which priority against real estate parties is desired.

A-17. In summary, effort has been made by a fresh approach to provide substantive rules that should satisfy the legitimate interests of all parties. In the Committee's opinion, there remains a necessity to preserve the possibility of purchase money fixture financing notwithstanding the existence of mortgages on the real property. Real estate lending is typically long-term, and is usually done by institutional investors who can afford to take a long view of the matter rather than concentrating on the results of any particular case.

It is apparent that a rule which permits and encourages purchase money fixture financing, which in contrast is typically short term, will result in the modernization and improvement of real estate rather than in its deterioration and will on balance benefit long-term real estate lenders. Because of the short-term character of the chattel financing, it will rarely produce any conflict in fact with the real estate lender. The contrary rule would chill the availability of short-term credit for modernization of real estate by installation of new fixtures and in the long run could not help real estate lenders.

The reported difficulty in locating relevant fixture security interests applicable to particular parcels of real estate has been cured by new provisions as to real estate description in fixture filings, the indexing thereof, and other related provisions in Part 4 of Article 9.

The weightiest objection to present Section 9-313 was to the possibility that fixtures constituting material portions of the value of a building might come into the building subject to fixture security interests which might have priority over the rights of a construction mortgagee. The proposed treatment reverses the position of the existing Code and accords priority to the construction mortgagee.

The draft does not go as far as some of the non-uniform amendments, which would subject fixture filing to the burden of obtaining full "legal descriptions" of real estate and would deny fixture security interests priority against existing real estate parties who had not consented thereto, thus negating the purchase money concept. The Committee's changes move very substantially toward the views which gave rise to such amendments, but do not go all the way.

B. Crops and Farm Products

B-1. In contrast with dissatisfaction with the Code's classification of timber, discussed in Section C, no difficulty seems to have arisen with respect to the recognition in Section 2-107 and in the definition of goods in Section 9-105(1) that growing crops are goods and therefore chattels. This still leaves a possibility that real estate parties such as mortgagees or grantees may have some interest in them. Section 2-107(3) recognizes that a contract for sale of growing crops may have to be recorded in realty records for protection of the buyer against real estate rights, and the Committee has found no indication that this provision declaratory of the pre-Code law has caused any difficulty. Thus no change is proposed.

B-2. The assumption that crops are chattels was carried through in pre-Code law by the treatment of crop mortgages as chattel mortgages. In some states description of the land was required, not for the purpose of placing the crop mortgages into the real estate records, but primarily for identification.

B-3. The Code carries through this treatment. It treats an encumbrance of growing crops as a Code security interest for which a financing statement is required for perfection. A description of the land in the security agreement is required in Section 9-203(1)(a) and a requirement of description of the land in the financing statement is set forth in Section 9-402(1) and (3). Alternatives (2) and (3) of Section 9-401(1) add to the usual rule that a filing for farm products be at the residence of the debtor an additional rule that there be a filing on growing crops in the county where the land is situated, but these provisions do not indicate that the filing in the latter county should be in the real estate records. This is clear from two circumstances: The name of the applicable office is left blank in these two Alternatives of Section 9-401(1) rather than being specified (as is true for fixtures) as the office where a mortgage on the real estate concerned would be filed or recorded. Also, Alternative (1) for Section 9-401(1) contemplates filing for crops only in the office of the Secretary of State, and this could not be intended as a real estate filing.

B-4. Several states have departed from the Official Text by making it clear that the filing of a crop mortgage should be treated as a real estate filing and there is logic to this. But the Official Text seems to have worked satisfactorily without extensive criticism in other states, and the Committee has determined not to make so extensive a change in theory and practice as to require crop mortgages to be filed or recorded in the real estate records. To have made the change would have required the real estate on which crops are growing to be described with a particularity suitable for real estate records, as set forth in proposed Section 9-402(5). But practice in crop mortgages has never been to require particularity in describing land on which crops are growing, and a substantial change in practice would have been required.

B-5. There may nevertheless be rights of real property mortgagees or grantees in growing crops if Code security interests in the crops have not been properly filed, comparable to the rights referred to in Section 2-107(3). The Committee has not thought it possible in the Uniform Code to deal with the diversity of existing state law on the interrelation of chattel security interests in growing crops and real estate interests.

B-6. Existing Section 9-204(4)(a) provides that no security interest in crops attaches under an after-acquired property clause to crops which become such more than one year after the security agreement, unless the agreement involves certain real estate transactions. The obvious purpose of this provision was to protect a necessitous farmer from encumbering his crops for many years in the future. The provision does not work because there is no corresponding limit on the scope of a financing statement covering crops, and under the Code's notice-filing rules the priority position of a security arrangement covering successive crops would be as effectively protected by the filing of a first financing statement whether the granting clause as to successive crops was in one security agreement with an after-acquired property clause or in a succession of security agreements. On the other hand the section does require an annual security agreement for crops even when the encumbrance on crops is agreed to as part of a long-term financing covering farm machinery and other assets. The provision thus appears to be meaningless in operation except to cause unnecessary paperwork, but it does introduce some element of uncertainty as to its purpose. The Committee proposes to eliminate it. See also the next paragraph.

B-7. The priority provision of Section 9-312(2) seems related to the same thinking as discussed in the preceding paragraph, and was intended perhaps to permit enabling crop financing, notwithstanding the existence of prior crop financing. However, subsection (2) is severely limited by a provision that the priority granted to current enabling financing applies only as against earlier interests which are six months or more in default. In the absence of any demand therefor, it would be inappropriate to attempt to create a revolutionary change in crop financing with a broad enabling priority to finance current crops. Such an attempt would probably be ineffectual in any event because lenders on machinery and real estate who claim crops could readily provide that it would be an event of default for the debtor to finance under the proposed enabling priority. The Committee has determined therefore to leave subsection (2) unchanged, even while recognizing that it is of little practical effect.

B-8. Several states have indicated their dissatisfaction with existing Section 9-302(1)(c), which provides a non-filing rule for purchase money security interests in farm equipment having a purchase price of $2500 or less, by reducing the amount. Authors on farm problems have suggested that the section is disadvantageous rather than advantageous to a farmer, because it in effect makes his farm machinery useless as collateral in view of prospective lenders' fear that there may be unfiled perfected security interests. The $2500 amount cannot be dismissed by lenders as immaterial, because substantial aggregates of collateral could have been financed by separate purchase money transactions each of which was no greater than $2500.

The Committee proposes that Section 9-302(1)(c) be eliminated. This makes unnecessary the reference to farm equipment in Section 9-307(2), which deals with the rights of certain buyers against perfected but unfiled security interests.

B-9. A comparable problem exists with respect to the provision of Section 9-307(1) which makes inapplicable to farm products the usual rule of that section protecting a buyer in ordinary course of trade who buys goods from a person engaged in selling goods of that kind and permitting him to take free of any security interest created by his seller. The existing section reflects pre-Code practice in distinguishing between a farmer's inventory and inventory of any other kind of businessman, but it must be seriously questioned whether the pre-Code practice is still sound under modern conditions. Feelings run strong on this issue, as evidenced by the fact that the New Mexico legislature amended other sections of the Code to make sure that waiver would not nullify the rule excluding farm products from Section 9-307(1), as had been held in Clovis National Bank v. Thomas, 425

P.2d 776 (N.M.1967). The federal government, an important farm lender, likewise insists on the preservation of its security interest on farm products as against buyers or auctioneers, in reliance on a federal rule independent of the state rule embodied in Section 9-307(1). See U.S. v. McCleskey Mills, Inc., 409 F.2d 1216 (5th Cir.1969). On the other hand, strong representations have been made to the Committee by food processers and by authors who have written on farm problems under the Code that the inapplicability of Section 9-307(1) to farm products is anomalous and unfair. Georgia has amended the section to protect auctioneers of livestock. Recognizing that the Committee's recommendation is unlikely to induce the removal of the exception for farm products from Section 9-307(1) in all enacting jurisdictions, the Committee nevertheless recommends it as an optional amendment.[5] The Committee considered various possibilities, such as distinguishing between the first buyer and sub-buyers or between a buyer of an entire annual crop and multiple buyers of milk, eggs and the like. But no solution was found. Differences of opinion on basic policy seem to be so sharp that they are unlikely to be resolved by an appeal to the goal of uniformity.

B-10. There has been criticism of the unreality of the present Code's requiring filing against farmers at the "residence". This concept is most unsatisfactory for the reality of the modern corporate farm. The Committee proposes a new Section 9-401(6) to the effect that the residence of an organization is its place of business if it has one, or its chief executive office if it has more than one place of business. The rule is thus very similar in result to the rule as to the location of a debtor in proposed Section 9-103(3), although the latter rule starts as a matter of form with the assumption that the debtor has a place of business, with resort to residence as an exception, while the rule in Section 9-401(6) starts with residence, with the place of business as an exception for the corporate case. See paragraphs F-11 and F-12.

C. Timber

C-1. In contrast with its treatment of growing crops as chattels (paragraphs B-1 to 4 of this Statement), the present Code treats timber as real estate until cut. Section 2-107; note the omission of timber from the definition of "goods" in Section 9-105(1). This treatment has proved to be unsatisfactory, and many of the important timber-cutting states have changed it to provide that timber to be cut under a conveyance or contract for sale is "goods". One reason for this is to facilitate loans by banks on timber to be cut without complying with restrictions relating to real estate mortgages.

C-2. The Committee has decided to recommend adoption of this view. See proposed changes in Section 2-107 and the definition of "goods" in Section 9-105(1). The assertion in Section 9-204(2) that the debtor has no rights in timber until it is cut is proposed to be deleted together with the remainder of that subsection. See paragraph E-18 of this Statement.

[5]The Permanent Editorial Board deleted the committee's optional recommendation. For states that are determined to change the present policy, it is recommended that this be done by deleting the words in Section 9-307(1): "other than a person buying farm products from a person engaged in farming operations."

C-3. Corresponding changes have been made in Section 9-401(1) and in Section 9-402(1) and (3) to recognize a Code filing as to timber before it is cut, to require that filing to be in the real estate records of the county wherein is the land on which the timber is growing, and a new provision (Section 9-403(7)) requires the indexing thereof in real estate records. These requirements conform to the requirements for fixture filing (paragraph A-10 of this Statement). In contrast to growing crops (paragraph B-3 of this Statement), the Committee considers that standing timber has been traditionally a part of the real estate and it could not be assumed that it would normally be cut at any specific time of maturity. Therefore, the filing of security interests thereon has to be in real estate records. This filing will conform to the practice of recording timber deeds in real estate records.

D. Oil, Gas and Minerals

D-1. In general, the existing Code treats oil, gas and minerals as part of the real estate until they have been extracted from the land. See Section 2-107 and the definition of "goods" in Section 9-105(1). There is no provision for filing a security interest against minerals to be effective prior to their extraction from the land, because the Code does not recognize such a security interest and therefore there is no provision for a description of the land in a financing statement covering minerals.

In contrast, the Code requires a description of the land in a security agreement covering minerals to be extracted (Section 9-203(1)(b)). Though this has caused no particular difficulty, it is incongruous and the Committee proposes to delete it.

D-2. Various requests have been made that the Committee clarify the question whether well-drilling equipment is on the one hand fixtures or on the other hand mobile equipment of the kind referred to in Section 9-103. The Committee has sought to avoid encumbering the Code with details in response to inquiries of this nature. It seems fairly clear that well casings and related material that are removable are neither fixtures nor mobile equipment.

D-3. The most significant problems in reference to minerals relate to the split ownership characteristic of oil and gas drilling and the practice of selling the product at wellhead, with the proceeds of the resulting receivable being distributed pursuant to a division order and the proceeds being sometimes repledged to the holder of the oil and gas mortgage. Since the holders of fractional interests in a well or of production payments with respect thereto may be investors living anywhere, the problem of search to determine whether they have encumbered the receivables under the "chief place of business" rule of present Section 9-103(1) or "location" rule of proposed Section 9-103(3) is a cumbersome one. It is proposed that all filings with respect to these receivables be authorized and required in the county where the well is, thus conforming to much pre-Code practice which assumed that everything related to sales at wellhead should be filed (if at all) in the real estate records in the county where the well is located. See proposed Sections 9-103(5) and 9-401(1).

The term "at wellhead" is intended to encompass all arrangements intended to cover sale of the product when it issues from the ground and is measured, without technical distinctions as to whether title passes at the "Christmas tree" or the far side of a gathering tank or some other point. "At minehead" is a comparable concept.

It is essential to note that this special rule is applicable only to security interests created by persons who have interests in the production from the well which attach when the mineral is extracted, not to buyers of the production who may have an underlying security interest on their inventory which may happen to attach to the mineral as inventory or at the wellhead or minehead when that is where the buyer acquires rights therein.

D-4. A related problem is whether, where the form of contract of sale at wellhead results in the minerals being sold by the persons who had the fractional interests, the purchaser of the product is protected from any encumbrances of the product, pursuant to Section 9-307(1) protecting buyers in ordinary course of business. The Committee has proposed in Section 1-201(9) to clarify the fact that buyers of minerals at wellhead or minehead are buyers in ordinary course of business because all persons who regularly sell the product under those circumstances are deemed to be engaged in selling goods of that kind, even though realistically the sellers may merely be investors.

E. Intangibles, Proceeds and Priorities

The Code has six classifications of intangibles, of which three are semi-intangibles embodied in pieces of paper, namely, documents, instruments and chattel paper (all defined in Section 9-105).

There are also three classifications of completely intangible rights, namely, accounts, contract rights and general intangibles (all defined in Section 9-106).

Proposals as to Semi-Intangibles

E-1. As to the classifications of semi-intangibles, experience has been generally satisfactory and few specific changes are proposed by the Committee.

E-2. A new rule is proposed in Section 9-103(4) as to the jurisdiction in which to file a financing statement relating to chattel paper, thus curing an omission in the present Code. See paragraphs F-14–15 of this Statement.

E-3. Another problem is the classification of money, which is frequently proceeds of original collateral and in some types of financing is itself original collateral. In the absence of an express specification, it could be argued that money is a general intangible, which would permit filing for a security interest therein. While this result would be so obviously unsound that it is doubted that a court would reach that result under the existing Code, it has been thought wise to provide expressly in Section 9-106 that the term "general intangibles" does not include money.

E-4. Sections 9-304(1) and 9-305 have been amended to state specifically that money may be pledged.

E-5. Section 9-304(1) makes clear that as to negotiable instruments, a non-possessory perfection of a security interest is not permitted except for temporary periods without either filing or possession under Sections 9-304(4) and (5). No doubt the failure of Section 9-304(1) to refer to temporary perfection for 10 days under the proceeds provisions of Sections 9-306(2) and (3) is a mere inadvertence of the present Code which the Committee proposes to correct, since this temporary perfection is also clearly contemplated. However, the present Section 9—306(2) and (3) go further and seemingly would permit perfection by filing continued indefinitely as to negotiable instruments which constitute proceeds of original collateral in which a security interest had been perfected by a filed financing statement which also claimed proceeds. The Committee considers this to be an error of the present Code and proposes to rectify it by providing in Section 9-306(3) that a security interest in proceeds does not persist beyond 10 days unless the security interest could have been directly filed against the proceeds as independent collateral. See also paragraphs E-22–23 of this Statement for other applications of this proposal.

E-6. The foregoing discussion should not apply to negotiable instruments which are essentially cash payment, i.e., money and checks. The proceeds security interest should apply to these cash proceeds so long as they are identifiable, and the proposed revision of Section 9-306(3) so provides.

E-7. The Committee considers that another anomaly exists between Sections 9-308 and 9-309. Under the present Code, a purchaser of negotiable instruments prevails against a conflicting proceeds claim thereto only if the purchaser is a holder in due course, which means that he cannot have notice of the conflicting claim to the instrument as proceeds of prior collateral. In contrast, the purchaser of chattel paper may under the second sentence of Section 9-308 defeat a claim to the chattel paper as proceeds of prior collateral even though the purchaser of the chattel paper knows that the specific paper is subject to the proceeds security interest. Thus, the holder of a negotiable note which is not part of chattel paper is governed by less favorable rules than the holder of an equally negotiable note which is part of chattel paper, or than the holder of non-negotiable chattel paper. The Committee has sought to remedy this by rewriting Section 9-308 so that the rights therein conferred on holders of chattel paper and non-negotiable instruments also apply to holders of negotiable instruments. Thus, holders of negotiable instruments which are proceeds may be protected under Section 9-309 if they are holders in due course, and if they do not qualify as holders in due course, they may nevertheless have the rights provided in clause (b) of Section 9-308. Section 9-308 has also been reorganized for clarity.

Proposals as to Intangibles

E-8. As to pure intangibles, i.e., intangibles not embodied in a piece of paper, the Committee considered the question whether three categories are necessary. The Committee concluded that the category "contract rights" is not necessary and proposes to eliminate the definition thereof from Section 9-106 and the references thereto in other sections. The Committee proposes to broaden the term "accounts" to include rights which under the present Code would be "contract rights" since there had not yet been complete performance by the person to whom the monetary obligation is owing.

The elimination of the term "contract rights" avoids the risk of inadvertent error where a financing statement is filed as to "accounts" and the designation turns out to be inapplicable because performance has not been completed, so that the collateral is at the stage of "contract rights."

E-9. This elimination also avoids proceeds problems and possible resulting priority questions where collateral was originally a "contract right" and after performance it became an "account." As a conforming change the Committee proposes to eliminate the statement in Section 9-306(1) that an account is proceeds of a contract right.

E-10. The only place in the 1962 Code where the concept of "contract right" was used to contrast with the concept of "account" was in Section 9-318(2). The Committee proposes to rewrite this subsection to draw the distinction between a right to money not yet completed by performance and a right so completed, without having to preserve the term "contract right" just for this purpose.

E-11. As to the substantive standard of Section 9-318(2) respecting the power of the debtor and assignor to modify a contract before performance to the prejudice of the assignee, the Committee has given consideration to the non-uniform New York amendment which limited the rights of the original parties so to do to cases where the assignee was not materially prejudiced. The Permanent Editorial Board in its Report No. 2 took the position that this New York change merely articulates a condition already included in the requirement of good faith contained in the Official Text. The Committee has considered Professor Gilmore's view that the change goes beyond articulation of the meaning implied in the term "good faith" (2 Gilmore, Security Interests in Personal Property, 1117–21 (1965)) and his view disapproving the New York change on substantive grounds. The Committee adheres to the views expressed by the Permanent Editorial Board that the term "good faith" so limits the extent of the permissible change as not to make desirable adoption of the New York amendment.

E-12. The elimination of the term "contract right" requires the re-editing of the 1966 change approved by the Permanent Editorial Board in Section 9-106. The purpose of this change was to choose a single classification of intangibles for ship charters and all related rights. The classification chosen was "contract rights." With the elimination of this term, Section 9-106 has to be re-written to place all these rights in the category "accounts."

E-13. The term "account debtor" is defined in Section 9-105(1)(a) as a person who is obligated not merely on an account but also on chattel paper, general intangibles (and under the present Code, contract rights). Present Section 9-318(3) speaks of account debtors and, therefore, would apply to the debtors under all of these types of intangibles, but its scope in protecting an account debtor who pays without notice that his obligation has been assigned is limited by the phrase "that the account has been assigned." The Committee proposes changes in Section 9-318(3) to afford the intended protection to all account debtors without limitation by the term "account."

E-14. The Committee considered the suggestion that there is not reason for distinguishing between "accounts" and "general intangibles," both of which are defined in Section 9-106. To eliminate the two separate terms would cause great drafting difficulty in preserving Article 9's present useful distinction in the inclusion in its scope of the sale of monetary obligations represented by accounts, contract rights and chattel paper and in the exclusion from its scope of the sale of non-monetary rights known as general intangibles. Therefore, the Committee proposes to retain the two terms.

E-15. A more limited suggestion is to rectify the definitions of "accounts" and "general intangibles." It has been pointed out that some obligations for payment of money are not accounts, but are general intangibles, because the definition of "account" is limited to rights to payment for goods sold or leased or for services rendered. Thus, rights to payments constituting royalties for use of patents, copyrights, etc., or for exhibition rights to moving pictures and television, seemingly constitute general intangibles rather than accounts. A potential source of error by inadvertence thus arises. The Committee nevertheless concluded that it would be undesirable to broaden the definition of accounts to include all rights for the payment of money, because too many standard forms of agreement use the term "accounts" and reflect intention of the parties to include only traditional accounts arising from the sale of goods or services, and not miscellaneous rights for the payment of money.

Attachment and Perfection

E-16. The Code has two important concepts, attachment of security interests and perfection thereof. Attachment is in a sense defined in present Section 9-204. In general, it means the time when a security interest becomes enforceable between the primary parties because there is agreement, value has been furnished, and the debtor has rights in the collateral to which the agreement can apply.

The term "perfection" is not defined by the Code. In general, it means the point at which a security interest becomes good against third parties when there is also attachment. The additional requirements for perfection beyond the requirements for attachment are set forth in Sections 9-302 to 9-305. It would be unwise to attempt a formal definition of perfection, because of the subtlety of the problems involved in rights against many groups of third persons.

E-17. The Committee deemed the existing treatment of the concept of attachment in Section 9-203 and Section 9-204 (which also affects perfection, as indicated) to be unsatisfactory. Section 9-203 contains a statute of frauds which must be satisfied in order that the security interest be enforceable against the debtor or third parties, yet the combined treatments of attachment and perfection indicate that there could be perfection without compliance with the statute of frauds. This obvious anomaly would be corrected by proposed revisions of these sections. The three elements of attachment have been transferred to Section 9-203 from Section 9-204 and there combined with the requirement of a writing (except when the secured party is in possession), which thus becomes part of the concept of attachment.

E-18. The Committee proposes to eliminate from Section 9-204 existing subsection (2) which states various times at which the debtor acquires right in certain kinds of collateral. Some of these statements, notably the statement in paragraph (d) that the debtor has no rights in an account until it comes into existence, have played an unfortunate part in confusing the application of bankruptcy law to Code security interests. None of them seems to serve any purpose.

Proceeds

E-19. Existing Section 9-203 provides that the word "proceeds" is a sufficient description in a security agreement of collateral constituting proceeds. This seems to imply that a claim to proceeds must be based on a term in a security agreement. Yet Section 9-306(2) contemplates that the secured party will have a right in proceeds following sale of original collateral, and this right is not made dependent on the existence of a term in the security agreement. The Committee proposes to resolve this apparent inconsistency by deleting the provision in Section 9-203 and substituting proposed Section 9-203(3) to the effect that a reference to proceeds is not necessary in the security agreement to give the secured party the automatic rights provided by Section 9-306.

The Committee does not consider that this converts the security interest in proceeds into a non-contractual or statutory lien presenting problems under the Bankruptcy Act, for the security interest is still an aspect of the basically contractual security interest under the security agreement.[6]

E-20. Another anomaly appears in the provisions of present Section 9-306(3)(a) that the 10-day right to proceeds recognized by subsection (3) may be continued without further perfection if the filed financing statement covering the original collateral also covers proceeds. The form of financing statement set forth in Section 9-402(3) makes provision for a claim to proceeds, and the forms prescribed by most state filing officials contain a box by which a claim to proceeds may be made simply by checking the box. The claim is almost universally made in the case of inventory which is to be sold or receivables which are to be collected, thus producing proceeds; and the claim is very frequently made routinely in the cases of other collateral. There was deleted from Section 9-306 in the prior history of the Code a statement that a claim to proceeds constituted permission to sell, and a court has recently held that such a claim does not constitute permission to sell. Vermilion County Production Credit v. Izzard, 111 Ill.App.2d 190 (1969).

E-21. Since the claim to proceeds is routinely made, there seems to be no reason that it be required to be made in the financing statement in order to continue the perfection of the security interest in proceeds. If there is a claim to proceeds as presumed intent of the security agreement, notice of the claim comes from the claim to the original collateral claimed in the financing statement, and nothing is accomplished by the routine checking of a box. Many privately printed forms have the box checked in the print itself. The Committee therefore proposes in Section 9-306(3) to eliminate any requirement for claiming proceeds specifically.

E-22. A problem appears as to whether perfection by filing as to original collateral automatically perfects as to all types of proceeds. One such problem has already been discussed, namely whether the claim to proceeds perfected by filing as to original collateral negates the basic provision of the Code that one cannot file as to instruments. See paragraph E-5 of this Statement. A provision has been added to Section 9-306(3) making it clear that the proceeds claim does not permit filing as to instruments.

E-23. A similar problem arises when the appropriate place for filing as to accounts resulting from sale of inventory collateral under Section 9-103 is in another state where the debtor is located. The revision of Section 9-306(3) makes it clear that the perfection of the security interest in the accounts as proceeds will not last more than 10 days unless there is a filing as to the accounts in the appropriate jurisdiction.

E-24. Another problem is whether the extension to proceeds of the filed security interest in original collateral (perfected by checking a box as in the existing Code or automatically perfected as in the Committee's proposal, paragraph E-21 of this Statement) really serves the intended function of public notice of the security interest. Under the existing Section 9-306 the security interest in proceeds extends without limit through cash in the debtor's hand to repeated cycles of the business so long as the proceeds can be traced, unless sometimes terminated by priority rules like those in Sections 9-308 and 9-309 or by receipt of the cash by the secured party. See In re Platt, 58 Berks Co.L.J., 275, 6 UCC Rep. 275, 281 (Referee, E.D.Pa.1966), aff'd 257 F.Supp. 478 (E.D.Pa.1966). Thus a financing statement on automobiles could theoretically operate to perfect a security interest in an oil painting traded in for an automobile or bought with the cash proceeds thereof. Several possibilities of limiting the notice as to a security interest in proceeds resulting from a filing as to original collateral present themselves. The Committee has determined not to limit the proceeds claim applicable to direct trade-ins, but to limit the claim to proceeds which have been acquired through cash proceeds to cases where the description of collateral in the financing statement indicates the types of property constituting these remote proceeds. See the proposed revision of Section 9-306(3).

E-25. Several cases have held that the proceeds of insurance on destroyed or damaged collateral are not proceeds of the collateral within the meaning of Section 9-306(1). The Committee considers the result of these cases to be unsatisfactory and proposes to revise Section 9-306(1) to make clear that insurance proceeds are proceeds. But a possibility exists that, under a contract with an insurer through a co-insurance clause or a loss payable clause, a junior secured party will be entitled to receive the insurance proceeds, and the revision has been so drafted that the Code's proceeds rules will not operate to disturb contractual arrangements.

E-26. Proceeds frequently find their way to bank or deposit accounts, and Section 9-306(4)(b) expressly contemplates that the secured party will have a security interest in the proceeds so deposited. But existing Section 9-104(k) provides that Article 9 does not apply to deposit accounts and similar accounts. The Committee proposes to amend the treatment in Section 9-104 so that it is not inconsistent with the recognition of proceeds security interests in these accounts, and to add in Section 9-105 a new definition of "deposit account" to cover all the types of accounts intended to be covered by these provisions.

E-27. Section 9-306(4) deals with cash proceeds, and is intended to substitute for difficult problems of tracing a provision that the secured party has a perfected security interest in cash proceeds (and deposit accounts derived therefrom) received within ten days before the institution of insolvency proceedings by or against the debtor, less the cash proceeds paid over to the debtor within the ten days. In the study of this subsection in connection with adoption of the Code in California, certain imperfections in the drafting were pointed out, and California amended the provision. The Committee recommends adoption of a clarifying amendment based on the California amendment. No significant change of substance is intended.

Priorities between Security Interests

E-28. In many ways Article 9 facilitates the perfection of security interests. This ease of perfection brings to the fore numerous problems of priority between security interests, or between secured parties and other persons. Each proposed change may affect priority problems by affecting the time or the method by which perfection is achieved, as in the proposed limitations of perfection as to proceeds, paragraphs E-5, 22, 23 of this Statement. Certain priority problems are discussed elsewhere in this statement—in Part A as to Fixtures; in Part E as to Sections 9-308 and 9-309; and in Part I as to the effect of lapse.

Some of the major problems of priorities are discussed in the following paragraphs.

A number of problems relate to the purchase money priority as to inventory in Section 9-312(3).

E-29. The existing Section 9-312(3) does not state how often the notification by the purchase-money financer to earlier financers of record must be given. The Committee's revision will make the notice effective for five years, by analogy to the duration of a financing statement.

E-30. The existing subsection requires notice to any secured party known to the purchase money secured party, regardless of perfection by the former. This emphasis on knowledge is inconsistent with the general disregard of knowledge as an operative fact in priority issues between secured parties in Article 9. It is also an ineffective provision, because if the purchase money secured party fails to give the necessary notice to obtain priority over the earlier unperfected secured party under subsection (3), the purchase money secured party will nevertheless obtain priority under Section 9-312(5) as the first to file or perfect. Finally, the existing subsection might be read to deny the contemplated priority to the purchase money secured party against another secured party to whom he has given proper notice unless he also gave notice to all other persons entitled to notice. The Committee proposes a revised Section 9-312(3) to rectify these points.

E-31. Under the existing Code there is uncertainty as to the relationship of Section 9-312(3) to the period of temporary perfection for 21 days of an interest in inventory without either filing or possession under Section 9-304(5), typically coming through release of a document of title to the debtor following a documentary draft or letter of credit transaction. One could conceivably take the view that the security interest under Section 9-304(5) has priority against an earlier filed security interest during the 21 days. If so, one would then have to decide either (a) that the security interest, if filed before the end of the 21 days, continued to have priority without a notice; or (b) that the notice under Section 9-312(3) had to be given before the end of the 21 days; or (c) that the priority reversed after the 21 days. None of these results seems consistent with the obvious purpose of Section 9-312(3) to permit a first-filed inventory financer to rely on his priority in making advances unless he receives notice of a competing purchase money security interest before the debtor receives the inventory. Accordingly, the Committee's proposed revision of Sections 9-304(5) and 9-312(3) requires the notice to be given before the debtor receives the inventory, and if this is done, the purchase money security interest obtains a priority and retains it so long as the interest remains perfected. The Committee's inquiry to several leading banks engaged in foreign trade indicated that this rule would not seriously inconvenience them, and the rule will certainly clarify the position of these banks and all other lenders when acting as general inventory financers.

E-32. The existing Code leaves it uncertain whether the filing required of a consignor under Section 2-326(3) includes a required notice to prior inventory financers of the consignees under Section 9-312(3). An underlying inventory financer assured of his first-filed position could as readily be deceived by consigned merchandise as he could by new inventory subject to the purchase money inventory financing priority, in the absence of notice. Accordingly, the Committee proposes a new Section 9-114 to require the consignor to give the same notices as a purchase money secured party, to attain priority against earlier-filed security interests in inventory of the debtor. These provisions are limited to true consignments. The usual rules apply to consignments that are deemed to be security interests. See Section 1-201(37).

E-33. Another group of priority problems relates to the basic priority rules of Section 9-312(5). This subsection contains two principal rules. Paragraph (a) is a first-to-file rule where both competing security interests are perfected by filing. Paragraph (b) is a first-to-perfect rule when either of the security interests is or both of them are perfected otherwise than by filing. A traffic rule is provided by existing Section 9-312(6) to the effect that a continuously perfected security interest shall be treated for the purpose of the foregoing rules as if at all times perfected in the manner it was first perfected. The problems raised have been the subject of an enormous legal literature. They are complicated by the unforeseeable effect of the temporary perfection of security interests in proceeds under Section 9-306 without filing, and by speculation as to whether a secured party could claim that his security interest was originally perfected without filing under this rule even though the security interest in proceeds was claimed in his filing as to the original collateral. They are further complicated by the question whether different rules would apply when a financing statement was drawn to cover, e.g., inventory and its proceeds (which would include accounts) and when it was drawn to cover inventory and accounts.

E-34. The Committee is convinced that to settle these questions the present paragraphs (a) and (b) of Section 9-312(5) must be replaced by a single rule. The Committee proposes a revised Section 9-312(5) and the elimination of existing Section 9-312(6). Together with this treatment should be noted the fact that an interest in proceeds automatically arises from a filed security interest in original collateral under the proposed revision of Section 9-306(3), subject to the limitations therein stated and discussed in paragraphs E-5, 22, 23 of this Statement. New proposed Section 9-312(6) makes it clear that subject to these limitations the filing as to original collateral constitutes a filing as to proceeds.

E-35. The new rule ranks conflicting perfected security interests by their priority in time, dating back to the respective times when without interruption the security interests were either perfected or were the subjects of appropriate filings.

E-36. Perhaps the most debated subject under Article 9 has been the question whether between conflicting security interests a priority as to original collateral confers a priority as to proceeds. On this topic the discussions as to proceeds (paragraphs E-19–21, E-24, of this Statement) and as to rules of Sections 9-312(5) and (6) (paragraphs E-33–34) are relevant. See also the following paragraphs E-37–38.

E-37. In the case of collateral other than inventory, e.g., equipment, assume that A has a prior purchase money security interest and B, although he was the first to file, has a junior security interest. If the equipment was sold and proceeds resulted, it seems clear that the policy favoring the purchase money secured party in Section 9-312(4) should give A the first claim to the proceeds. This is so even though the security interests will have been perfected simultaneously when the proceeds arose and the debtor acquired rights therein. The present Code does not provide for this result clearly, if at all, and the Committee proposes an amendment to Section 9-312(4) to accomplish it.

E-38. Proper policy is much less clear when the collateral involved is inventory and proceeds consisting of accounts. (Policy as to other types of receivables as proceeds is expressed in Sections 9-308 and 9-309. See paragraph E-7 of this Statement.) Accounts may be financed by some financers without prior involvement in the inventory, and some have argued that one who provides financing at the early inventory stage of the cycle of a business, which involves greater risk, is certainly to be preferred to one who provides financing only at the later stage of the cycle, and that a prior or only claim to inventory must therefore carry through to accounts as proceeds. But others feel that accounts financing is overall more important than inventory financing, and the desirable rule is one which makes accounts financing certain as to its legal position. Even if both competing financers are involved in the inventory, a purchase money priority in inventory may not represent the order of priority in time on accounts, which may be far more important than inventory financing in the particular case. A suggestion that the purchase money priority carry through to accounts if the notice provided by Section 9-312(3) has been given to accounts financers has seeming merit, but in the Committee's view it has two major difficulties: (a) The purchase-money priority as to inventory would be difficult to trace into accounts if the affected inventory was only part of the goods sold. (b) Accounts financing is intricate, and not easily or safely terminated on receipt of an inventory purchase-money notice. Prevailing practice seems to be for accounts financers to require covenants against competitive inventory financing, and to declare a default unless any inventory financier giving a purchase-money notice agrees not to assert a claim to the accounts. The Committee believes that where a financing statement as to accounts financing is filed first (with or without related inventory financing), the security interest in accounts should not be defeated by any subsequent claim to accounts as proceeds of an inventory security interest which was filed later. This result is accomplished by the absence in Section 9-312(3) of any priority rule carrying forward the purchase-money priority to proceeds which are accounts in contrast to the proposed addition to Section 9-312(4) (paragraph E-37); by the revised priority rule in Section 9-312(5); and by proposed Section 9-312(6) to the effect that a date of filing as to original collateral also defines the date of filing as to proceeds. Correspondingly, a financing statement as to inventory (carrying with it a claim to proceeds) which is filed first will under the same provisions have priority over a later-filed security interest in accounts.

Priority of Future Advances

E-39. Certain recent cases in lower courts raised the question whether a single financing statement would be effective to perfect more than one advance on the collateral described, when the later advances were not under a future advance clause of a single security agreement but were under later security agreements and were not contemplated at the time of the original agreement. Some of the reasoning makes the matter depend on whether the original debt was fully paid off or was still in existence at the time of the later advances. Coin-O-Matic Service Co. v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co., 3 UCC Rep. 1112 (Super.Ct.R.I.1966); In re Merriman, 4 UCC Rep. 234 (Referee, S.D.Ohio 1967). In another case, in which the point was not directly involved, Safe Deposit Bank & Trust Co. v. Berman, 393 F.2d 401 (1st Cir.1968), the court cited In re Rivet, 4 CCH Instal. Credit Guide Par. 97,858, 4 UCC Rep. 1087 (Referee, E.D.Mich.1967), which was in harmony with the first two cases cited but was subsequently reversed (see paragraph E-40). The Committee disapproves this line of cases, and believes that an appropriate financing statement may perfect security interests securing advances made under agreements not contemplated at the time of the filing of the financing statement, even if the advances then contemplated have been fully paid in the interim. Under the notice-filing procedures of the Code, the filing of a financing statement is effective to perfect security interests as to which the other required elements for perfection exist, whether the security agreement involved is one existing at the date of the filing with an after-acquired property clause or a future advance clause, or whether the applicable security agreement is executed later. Indeed, Section 9-402(1) expressly contemplates that a financing statement may be filed when there is no security agreement. In the Committee's opinion, the references to after-acquired property clauses and future advance clauses in Section 9-204 are limited to security agreements. This section follows Section 9-203, the section requiring a written security agreement, and its purpose is to make clear that confirmatory agreements are not necessary where the basic agreement has the clauses mentioned. The section has no reference to the operation of financing statements under the Code's notice filing system.

E-40. The Committee considered drafting a provision emphasizing its disagreement with the Coin-O-Matic line of cases, but concluded that the existing Code is clear enough, and should not be disturbed just to overrule some lower court cases. The Rivet case, cited by the First Circuit, has since been reversed by In re Rivet, 6 UCC Rep. 460 (E.D.Mich.1969).

E-41. The priority of future advances against an intervening party has been the subject of much discussion and disagreement.

E-42. Where both interests are filed security interests, the first-to-file rule of present Section 9-312(5)(a) or the corresponding proposed revision is clearly applicable.

E-43. While, under the existing Code, the position of an intervening pledge in reference to a subsequent advance by an earlier-filed secured party is debatable, the proposed unified priority rule of Section 9-312(5)(a) (paragraph E-35 of this Statement) would indicate that the subsequent advances by the first-filed party have priority, and subsequent advances under a security interest perfected by possession likewise have priority over an intervening filed security interest. These priority rules are expressly stated in proposed Section 9-312(7). That proposal also deals with the rare case of the priority position of a subsequent advance made by a secured party whose security interest is temporarily perfected without either filing or possession, against an intervening secured party. Since there is no notice by the usual methods of filing or possession of the existence of the security interest, the subsequent advances rank only from the actual date of making unless made pursuant to commitment.

E-44. In the Committee's view different problems exist with reference to the status of subsequent advances when the intervening party is a judgment creditor. He is not directly part of the Code's system of priorities. There should be a limit on the power of a debtor and secured party to squeeze out a judgment creditor who has successfully levied on a valuable equity subject to a security interest, through later enlargement of the security interest by an additional advance, unless that advance was committed in advance. Accordingly, the Committee proposes to clarify the present uncertain state of the law by a new Section 9-301(4) providing that a lien creditor does not take subject to a future advance made more than 45 days after he becomes a lien creditor unless it is made "pursuant to commitment."[7] A definition of the quoted phrase is proposed in Section 9-105(1). The 45-day period corresponds to a similar protection of advances made after the filing of tax liens in the Federal Tax Lien Act of 1966.

[7]The Permanent Editorial Board amended Section 9-301(4) to continue the priority of the subsequent advances beyond the 45 days and until the secured party

E-45. A similar problem arises where the intervening party is a buyer of the collateral subject to the security interest. While buyers must necessarily take subject to rights of secured parties, the Committee feels that the buyer should take subject to future advances only to the extent that they are given pursuant to commitment or within the period of 45 days after the purchase but not later than the time that the secured party acquires knowledge of the purchase. The Committee has so proposed in Section 9-307(3).

Effect of Knowledge on Priorities of Lien Creditors and Buyers

E-46. Although knowledge of unperfected security interests does not in general affect the rights of other secured parties, knowledge of unperfected security interests does under Section 9-301 preclude the attainment of priority by lien creditors and buyers (other than buyers in ordinary course of trade protected by Section 9-307(1)).

E-47. This result as to judgment creditors was severely criticized in California, which totally eliminated the element of knowledge, and gave priority to a person who became a lien creditor before the security interest was perfected, subject to a 10-day grace period. The Committee recommends the California change in Section 9-301(1)(b) but without the grace period, and a conforming change in Section 9-301(3). The Committee considered an intermediate position, making the decisive time for the existence of knowledge the point at which the creditor gave credit, not the point at which he became a lien creditor. But that position was severely criticized as inappropriate for tort creditors and as encouraging a race of diligence.

E-48. Similar considerations might be argued to be applicable to buyers referred to in Section 9-301(1)(c) and (d). However, there seems to be no criticism of these provisions or demand for change, and the Committee has concluded not to recommend any change.

Circular Priority

E-49. The elimination of the element of knowledge from Section 9-301(1)(b) (paragraph E-47) removes one possibility of circular priority. Other such possibilities are resolved by the proposals as to lapse (paragraphs F-23 and I-7). But circular priority can still arise in other situations. The Committee considered a general provision on the subject, but decided that the situations were too infrequent and diverse and the proper solutions too unclear.

F. Conflict of Laws

F-1. Section 9-103 dealing with interstate problems of perfection has occasioned much discussion, and the relationship between subsections (3) and (4) has been criticized as unclear by several courts. The committee has been aided by discussion with Professor Willis L.M. Reese, the Reporter of the Restatement Second of Conflict of Laws, who recently completed his work on cognate material. The Committee proposes a complete revision of acquires knowledge of the judgment lien.

Section 9-103, and related changes in Sections 1-105 and 9-102.

F-2. Section 9-103 was drafted in the light of the uncertainty whether the Code would be widely adopted, and the emphasis was on conflicting rules of law and a desire to make the Code rules applicable where such a result was justified under general principles. Today, when 51 jurisdictions have adopted the Code, situations of actual conflict in rules of law within the ambit of the Code will be few, and the emphasis may shift to the question of certainty as to where to file in order to perfect security interests.

Scheme of the Section

F-3. Section 9-102(1), basically intended as a scope provision on the coverage of Article 9, seems to deal with conflict of laws matters by its phrase "so far as concerns any personal property and fixtures within the jurisdiction of this state." The Committee proposes to delete this phrase and a related cross-reference, thus making Section 9-102 silent on conflicts of laws problems.

F-4. The Committee proposes to delete references to "validity" of a security interest appearing sometimes but not consistently in existing Section 9-103.

F-5. The effect of the foregoing changes will be to have questions as to the creation and validity of security interests determined according to the conflict of laws rules in Section 1-105. The cross-reference in that section to Article 9 should be amended to exclude the reference to Section 9-102. Questions as to perfection and the effect of perfection or non-perfection of security interests—i.e., questions as to the rights of third parties—will be determined by Section 9-103.

F-6. The basic rule of proposed Section 9-103, expressed in paragraph (1)(b), is believed to be that intended but not articulated in the existing section, namely, that perfection and the effect of perfection or non-perfection of a security interest are governed by the law (including the conflict of law rules) of the jurisdiction where the collateral is when a conflicting claim comes into existence.[8] That state will ordinarily look for this purpose to the law of the state where the collateral was when the events claimed to constitute perfection occurred, but the section provides special rules in the cases discussed in the next ten paragraphs.

Special Rules as to Jurisdiction Controlling Perfection The 10-Day[9] Rule

F-7. The relationship of the 30-day removal period in existing Section 9-103(3) to the four month removal period in that subsection is imperfectly stated. Paragraph (1)(c) of the revision limits the provision to purchase money security interests in goods and changes the 30 days to 10 days after the debtor receives possession, conforming to Sections 9-301(2) and

[8]The text being submitted in the present printing changes this formulation to refer to the law of the jurisdiction where the collateral is when the last event occurs on which is based the assertion that the security interest is perfected.

[9]The Permanent Editorial Board changed the 10 days back to 30 days.

9-312(4).[9] The revision also makes clear that the function of the period is to have perfection controlled by the law of the state into which the parties intend to remove the collateral within that period, rather than the law of the state where the collateral is when the security interest attaches. The four month period discussed below is irrelevant to this purpose, and is placed in paragraph (1)(d). During the 10-day period,[9] perfection is fully governed by the law of the state to which the parties intend to remove the collateral, whether or not it is removed to that state within the 10 days.[9] If it is so taken, then perfection continues to be governed by the law of that state. If it is not so taken, the question of perfection reverts at the end of the 10 days[9] to the state where the collateral then is.

Paragraph (1)(c) described in this paragraph does not apply to the cases described in the next two paragraphs.

Motor Vehicles

F-8. Paragraph (2)(b), which to some extent covers the same ground as the existing subsection (4), excludes from the general rule of paragraph (1)(b) collateral covered by a certificate of title. Paragraph (2)(d) is a partial limitation on paragraph (2)(b). These paragraphs are discussed in the treatment of motor vehicles, Part G of this Statement.

Intangibles and Mobile Goods

F-9. Subsection (3) covers essentially the same ground as existing subsections (1) and (2). They are intended to determine the jurisdiction whose law governs perfection in the case of intangibles which have no location in fact, and mobile chattels which have no permanent location. Several substantial changes have been made therein as described in paragraphs F-10 to F-16 below.

F-10. The existing subsection (1) provides that a financing statement covering accounts shall be filed in the jurisdiction where the assignor keeps his records concerning them. Existing subsection (2) provides that a financing statement covering general intangibles shall be filed in the jurisdiction of the chief place of business of the debtor. The use of separate tests for accounts and general intangibles has been criticized, because many groups of receivables may include items falling into both categories. See paragraph E-15 of this Statement. Moreover, in the type of accounts financing known as factoring, the assignment is without recourse and the debtor may keep no records concerning the accounts after transfer. A debtor's place of business may be objectively more ascertainable than the place where he keeps accounts, and will not be confused by questions on the latter test arising from remote access computer operations. Accordingly, the Committee proposes to combine the two tests into the place of business test applicable to general intangibles. See also the next paragraph.

F-11. The Committee recommends that the place of business used where there is more than one be redesignated "chief executive office" instead of "chief place of business." This will emphasize that what is intended is the executive office rather than either a statutory office or the site of the largest plant. While occasional situations of uncertainty could still arise, it is doubtful that there could be more than two possibilities in any case, and it would be easy to play safe by filing in both. See proposed paragraph (3)(d).

F-12. Provision has also been added to paragraph (3)(d) covering cases where the debtor is an individual or otherwise has no place of business, in which case his location is deemed to be his residence.

F-13. The coverage of the proposed subsection (3) would be extended to cover containers used on vehicles. The coverage would extend to inventory held for lease as well as inventory out on lease, thus accepting a California amendment designed to achieve consistency with the definition of inventory in Section 9-109(4).

F-14. The coverage of subsection (3) would be extended by proposed subsection (4) to cover perfection of non-possessory security interests in chattel paper. The existing Code has no express provision as to the jurisdiction within which to file for chattel paper, thus presumably referring the matter to the phrase in existing Section 9-102: " . . . this Article applies so far as concerns any . . . property . . . within the jurisdiction of this state . . .." But location is an unsatisfactory test for a filing as to chattel paper, because the paper's location is not visible to a prospective searcher for filings, it is readily transportable, and there may be more than one executed copy of the chattel paper.

F-15. The Committee considered whether proposed subsection (3) should govern the state of perfection of security interests in chattel paper completely, as it does in the case of general intangibles and accounts, but concluded to draw a distinction between the conflict of laws rule for non-possessory perfection of a security interest in chattel paper (to which Section 9-103(3) is proposed to be made applicable) and the rule for pledge or possessory perfection thereof (which is left to the general principles of subsection (1), which prescribes the law of the state where the chattel paper is in fact). The basis for the distinction was the fact that in a non-possessory perfection the problem is essentially similar to that applicable to accounts and general intangibles, but with a possessory perfection there are frequently local transactions between a local unit of a debtor and a local financer, and in that event the governing considerations should not be referred to the law of a possibly remote jurisdiction where the chief executive office of the debtor might be.

F-16. The coverage of subsection (3) on its face applies even to foreign airplanes, in contradiction to the rules provided by the Geneva Convention, to which the United States and many important foreign countries are parties. This contradiction is recognized in existing Comment 6. The textual problem would be avoided by the Committee proposal to create an exemption from the Code's filing rules for matters controlled by treaty. See paragraph G-4 of this Statement.

F-17. Since the place of filing under subsection (3) is independent of the location of the collateral, it is not affected by the 10-day rule[9] (paragraph F-7, supra) or the four-month rule (paragraph F-19, infra). The only occasion for refiling in cases subject to subsection (3) would be in cases of removal of the debtor's location, for which the Committee proposes a new paragraph (3)(e) providing for refiling within four months after removal, in keeping with the comparable rule applicable to removal of collateral (paragraph F-19, infra). The Committee reaffirms the Permanent Editorial Board's rejection in Report No. 2 of the New York subsection (6) denying the need to refile on removal of the chief place of business.[10]

F-18. Proposed paragraph (3)(c) covers the ground of existing optional subsection (5) and the third sentence of existing subsection (2). It covers the case where the jurisdiction of the location of the debtor is not a domestic jurisdiction and does not provide for filing as to the collateral. In that case, perfection by filing "in this state" is authorized if this state bears an appropriate relation to the transaction.[11] Perfection by notification to the account debtor is also authorized, except in a case of chattel paper covered by subsection (4). The Committee reaffirms the Permanent Editorial Board's rejection in Report No. 2 of the New York amendment proposing perfection without filing or notification.

The Four Months Rule on Removals

F-19. To the rules which indicate the jurisdiction whose law governs perfection and the effect of perfection or non-perfection in the first instance (paragraphs F-3 to F-16, supra) the state whose law governs under paragraphs (1)(b) and (2)(b) (paragraph F-6, supra) adds its own local rule requiring refiling within a stated period. A provision of this kind appears in existing subsection (3) and the Committee proposes refinements thereof in proposed paragraphs (1)(a) and (2)(c). The 10-day rule (formerly 30 days)[12] has been removed from these provisions and placed in paragraph (1)(c), paragraph F-7, supra, to avoid any possible reading that the two provisions are somehow interconnected. The debated question under the existing section as to the relationship between the four months rule of existing subsection (3) and the certificate of title provisions of existing subsection (4) is answered by provisions that proposed subsection (1) does not apply to goods covered by subsection (2). On subsection (2) see paragraphs G-10 to G-15 of this statement.

F-20. The state whose law controls the conflict and adds its local rule of refiling is referred to in the draft as "this state." If the litigation were to arise in a forum in another jurisdiction which recognized that the law of the state where the conflict arose controlled, it would read the Code as if it were situated in "this state."

[9]The Permanent Editorial Board changed the 10 days back to 30 days.

[10]The provision of New York's subsection (6) dealing with removal of the place where the records of accounts are kept becomes unnecessary under the Committee's proposal to eliminate this rule as to the place of filing for accounts.

[11]The Permanent Editorial Board changed Section 9-103(3)(c) to provide for filing against a foreign debtor on this set of facts in the jurisdiction where its major executive office in the United States is located.

F-21. Proposed paragraph (1)(d) refines the rule requiring refiling within four months of removal into "this state" to cover the case where the existing filing in another jurisdiction would remain effective for less than four months. The period allowed within which to refile in "this state" is the shorter of the remaining period of effectiveness in the original jurisdiction or four months, whichever period first expires. If the secured party could not locate the removed collateral in time to refile in the new jurisdiction in a shortened period, he could file a continuation statement in the original jurisdiction, thus giving himself the full four months to locate the collateral and refile in the removal jurisdiction.

F-22. Existing subsection (3) has been construed by some to require some affirmative act of reperfection in the removal state, even though the original security interest was perfected without filing (e.g., a purchase money security interest in consumer goods under Section 9-302(1)). The proposed revision makes clear that no affirmative act of perfection is needed under such circumstances. On the other hand, existing subsection (3) fails to deal with filing which achieves a status beyond perfection under Section 9-307(2) for purchase money security interests in consumer goods, and the proposed paragraph (1)(d)(iii) treats this point expressly in a manner comparable to the rules described in the preceding paragraph.

F-23. The effect of lapse after four months of a security interest perfected without local filing on rights arising within the four months is not specifically covered in the present Code, but is referred to in existing Comment 7 to Section 9-103. Subparagraph (1)(d)(i) of the proposed revision makes clear that after lapse the security interest is deemed unperfected as against a person who became a purchaser after the removal. First National Bank of Bay Shore v. Stamper, 93 N.J.Super. 150, 225 A.2d 162 (1966) held in substance that a buyer during the four month period was a converter of the car, at the suit of a bank whose security interest was perfected in the state from which the car was removed. The case entirely fails to consider the effect of the subsequent lapse of the security interest of the bank for failure to reperfect after the four months. While technically the conversion was complete at the moment of purchase, it is to be hoped that the proposed clarification of the effect of lapse will cause similar cases to be analyzed in the future in terms of priority, not of conversion. (Other aspects of the Stamper case are discussed in paragraph G-15 of this Statement).

F-24. Terms like "removed" and "kept" in Section 9-103 imply an idea of permanence, not just passing through the jurisdiction. They thus embody the same concept as the phrase "kept in this state" in present Section 9-103(3).

F-25. New subsection (5) relating to oil, gas and mineral financing, is discussed in paragraph D-4 of this Statement.

G. Motor Vehicles and Related Problems of Perfection

The integration of the provisions of Section 9-302 as to motor vehicles and related types of collateral has been much criticized, and has led to numerous non-uniform amendments.

G-1. Paragraphs (c) and (d) of Section 9-302(1) provide that filing is required for motor vehicles required to be licensed, notwithstanding the absence of a filing requirement for purchase-money security interests in consumer goods. (The Committee proposes to omit paragraph (c) relating to farm equipment. See paragraph B-8 of this Statement.) The term "required to be licensed" is not as clear as it might be and the Committee proposes to change it to "required to be registered."

G-2. The Committee considered changing the word "motor vehicle" to "vehicle" or "collateral," but concluded to leave this to the developing policy of individual states. Over-the-road commercial trailers and semi-trailers are not involved, because the paragraph applies only to consumer goods; but public policy and administration by motor vehicle commissioners may vary as to such items as boat trailers and mobile homes. Public policy as to mobile homes ought not now to be frozen in a uniform Code. As they get larger, they cease to be mobile and are not regularly moved over the highways; thus it is not clear that registration like other trailers is the appropriate legal scheme.

G-3. The present formal inconsistency between the required filing for motor vehicles in subsection (1) and the declared inapplicability of the Code's filing requirements to certificated vehicles in subsection (3)(b) would be resolved in proposed revised subsection (3), which makes it clear that it overrides filing requirements of subsection (1).

G-4. The existing and the proposed revised subsection (3) recognize other state and federal schemes for filed public notice in lieu of Code filing. The Committee proposes an additional category of a filing scheme adopted under a treaty to which the United States is a party, which is intended to refer particularly to the Convention on the International Recognition of Rights in Aircraft (Geneva Convention). (See paragraph F-16 of this Statement.)

G-5. Existing subsection (3) provides two alternatives. Alternative A was intended to refer to "complete" certificate of title laws for motor vehicles or the like. Alternative B was intended to apply to certificate of title laws which were not mandatory but permissive at least in part, and to convert them into mandatory laws by force of the Code (except as to inventory security interests, see the next paragraphs). Neither form of drafting has proved to be satisfactory. Many states have chosen to make express references to their statutes intended to be described, instead of leaving the matter to the Code's effort at a universal description. Moreover, permissive certificate of title laws have been replaced in general by "complete" laws, and the device of Alternative B is no longer necessary. The Committee therefore submits a revision of subsection (3) which recognizes that each state will list its own statutes intended to be covered. There will be great diversity because of the existence of central filing statutes in some states for cattle and the like; and because there is considerable variation as to the applicability of the certificate of title device to boats and boat trailers, mobile homes, farm tractors, construction machinery and the like.

G-6. The Committee has revised subsection (4), partly for clarity, into new subsections (3) and (4).

G-7. The revision also covers a point which is dealt with in the existing section only in Alternative B for subsection (3), namely, that Code filing should be required for security interests in inventory, because there is no reason that the Code's carefully worked out provisions for inventory to protect buyers in Section 9-307(1) and as to rights to proceeds in Section 9-306 should be confused by perfection under a certificate of title or other non-Code system. While the Code's sponsoring organizations cannot amend certificate of title laws, it is to be hoped that certificate of title laws will be amended or construed so that the Code filing system for inventory will be exclusive and will not be duplicated by the certificate of title system. There are indications in recent case law that the courts are already so construing certificate of title laws.

G-8. The requirement in proposed paragraph (3)(b) for Code filing for security interests in inventory is limited to inventory situations controlled by state law. It is to be hoped that a state will avoid double filing by avoiding any requirement that inventory security interests created by dealers be shown on certificates of title. The Code cannot change the provisions of the Federal Aviation Act requiring all security interests in aircraft (including inventory security interests) to be filed under the federal system and making that system exclusive. Fortunately, it has been held that Section 9-307(1) of the Code should apply to the rights of buyers in ordinary course of airplane inventory, although the federal system lacks a provision comparable to that section. Northern Illinois Corp. v. Bishop Distributing Co., 284 F.Supp. 121 (W.D.Mich.1969).

G-9. The proposed revisions of subsections (3) and (4) of Section 9-302, like the existing subsections, apply only to "property subject to" the statutes referred to. Hence the substitute forms of public notice recognized in subsection (3) do not apply to the perfection of security interests in proceeds other than such property. Such security interests must be perfected under Code rules. Compare the proposed revision of Section 9-306(3), discussed in paragraphs E-5, 22, 23 of this Statement.

G-10. The above discussion of Section 9-302 does not deal with the conflict of law problems arising from the use of certificates of title. These problems are covered by existing Sections 9-103(3) and (4), the interrelationship of which has caused much confusion and criticism; and by revisions proposed in new Section 9-103(2).

G-11. Proposed paragraph (2)(b) deals with collateral covered by a certificate of title. In general, a security interest perfected by notation on a certificate of title continues perfected so long as the certificate is outstanding or until the collateral is registered in another jurisdiction, notwithstanding removing the collateral into another state and keeping it there for more than four months. The Committee thus affirms In re White, 266 F.Supp. 863 (N.D.N.Y.1967), and later cases in their interpretation of the relationship between the certificate of title provision of existing subsection (4) and the four months rule of existing subsection (3).

G-12. If, however, reregistration occurs in another jurisdiction to which the collateral is removed while a certificate of title is left outstanding the security interest perfected by notation on the certificate of title remains perfected for four months after removal under Section 9-103(2)(c). This provision adopts the four months of proposed Section 9-103(1)(c), discussed in paragraphs F-19–21 of this Statement, for there is no reason why rights on removal of collateral perfected on a certificate of title should receive less favorable treatment than rights in collateral otherwise perfected.

G-13. Under the Uniform Certificate of Title Act and the Uniform Vehicle Code the four month period of continued perfection after removal commences from the time the first certificate of title is issued in the state to which the collateral is removed, not from the time of removal. The Committee has chosen to commence the four months with removal, to keep the periods of Sections 9-103(1)(d) and 9-103(2) consistent. It is hoped that if the Committee's recommendations are approved, the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws will conform its Uniform Act, and that the National Committee on Uniform Traffic Laws and Ordinance will conform its Uniform Vehicle Code.

G-14. Possibilities exist that a certificate of title may be issued in a state to which collateral is removed, and that because of fraudulent affidavits or other fraudulent devices the certificate will fail to disclose a security interest perfected in another state, whether that state does or does not have a certificate of title law. Suppose under these circumstances that rights of a third party arise in reliance on the "clean" local certificate of title. What protection should the issuing state give to rights which arose in reliance on its own certificate of title as against rights which were perfected elsewhere but not shown thereon? The Committee treats this problem in proposed Section 9-103(2)(d).

G-15. The Committee believes that more protection should be given to the local "clean" certificate of title than was accorded in First National Bank of Bay Shore v. Stamper, 93 N.J.Super. 150, 225 A.2d 162 (1966). The court there felt that it was required to recognize a security interest perfected in New York for four months after removal of the car into New Jersey, even though a New Jersey buyer had innocently bought the car within the period in reliance on a New Jersey certificate of title not showing the security interest. The court gave weight to the four month provision of existing Section 9-103(3) rather than to the condition of the New Jersey title under existing Section 9-103(4). It reasoned that Section 9-103(4) provides that perfection is governed by the law of the jurisdiction which issued the certificate, and that New Jersey recognizes foreign security interests after removal within the limits set by Section 9-103(3). This reasoning gives no scope to the introduction to Section 9-103(4): "Notwithstanding subsections (2) and (3)." (The lapse aspect of the Stamper case is discussed in paragraph F-23 of this Statement.)

The Committee's structure in its proposed Section 9-103(2)(b) follows the structure of existing Section 9-103(4) and thus would not in itself preclude the Stamper reading. But the Committee believes that consumer buyers who give value and take delivery without knowledge of the security interest in situations like Stamper should be protected in their reliance on local clean certificates of title. Its proposed Section 9-103(2)(d) so provides.

G-16. The Committee's proposed treatment does not apply to rights acquired while a distinctive certificate of title is outstanding as described in this paragraph.

The Uniform Certificate of Title Act and Uniform Vehicle Code provide that where the vehicle comes from a state which did not require that security interests be noted on a certificate of title, the local certificate first issued shall be distinctive and shall contain the legend: "This vehicle may be subject to an undisclosed lien." If the Department receives no notice of a security interest within four months after issuance of such a certificate of title, such a certificate may be reissued without the legend. Other certificate of title laws contain comparable provisions.

H. Scope Questions

H-1. Several questions have been raised as to the status of security interests in beneficial interests in trusts and estates. These are typically not commercial collateral, and a requirement of filing with respect thereto seems inappropriate and might act as an entrapment of secured parties who would fail to analyze the collateral as a general intangible. It would be possible to exclude this kind of collateral from Article 9 by a provision in Section 9-104, but the Committee recommends leaving this collateral subject to the general rules of security law provided by Article 9 but with an exclusion from filing by a provision in Section 9-302(1).

H-2. Certain receipts issued by large grain dealers do not literally qualify as "documents" under Article 9, because the definition in Section 9-105(1) refers back to the definition of "document of title" in Section 1-201 (which requires issuance by a bailee) rather than to the provision in Section 7-201(2) which makes receipts issued by owners under specified conditions substantially the equivalent of warehouse receipts. The Committee proposes to clarify this by amendment of the definition in Section 9-105(1) to refer to both earlier sections.

H-3. When the Code was drafted, railway equipment trusts were excluded from Article 9 by Section 9-104(e) in response to the argument that they were extremely specialized securities and the market in them should not be disturbed by new rules of law. The exclusion has subsequently been criticized as unsound. Opinion among railway authorities whom the Committee consulted was divided, but few of those suggesting retention had any specific reason therefor. The Committee proposes to delete the exclusion. The effect will be that railway equipment trusts will become subject to the general rules of security law provided by Article 9. It should be noted, however, that these rules are almost always subject to agreement of the parties. Ordinarily filing under Article 9 will not be required by reason of Section 9-302(3), because filing is controlled by Section 20(c) of the Interstate Commerce Act.

I. Filing Problems

Substantial changes have been made in Part 4 of Article 9 dealing with filing. The purpose of some of these appears in the discussions of Fixtures, Timber and Oil, Gas and Minerals in Parts A, C and D of this Statement.

I-1. Far-flung railroad and other public utility corporations may have signalling systems or other chattels strung along their rights of way, and the chattels may be encumbered with a combined real estate and chattel indenture on the whole utility plant. Where the chattels are non-fixtures, the Code would require one or at most two chattel filings. But where the chattels may be fixtures, the Code would require filing in each county where the chattels exist, and with a fixture filing including real estate descriptions. This is clearly unduly onerous. Numerous states have attempted to relieve against the burden by a variety of non-uniform amendments to various sections. The Committee has accepted from some of these amendments the concept of "transmitting utility," for which it proposes a definition in Section 9-105. It proposes a Section 9-401(5) making all filings for transmitting utilities in the office of the Secretary of State. This filing constitutes a fixture filing (id.) but need not contain a description of the real estate (Proposed Section 9-402(5)).

I-2. There has been much criticism of the provision in Section 9-403(2) which terminates the effectiveness of a financing statement which states a maturity date 60 days after the stated maturity date. There seems to be no reason why a stated maturity date should terminate the effectiveness any sooner than a financing statement which does not state the date. Even though the transaction has a maturity date, the application of this provision can be avoided simply by not stating the maturity date in the financing statement. The requirement of a financing statement and the form in Section 9-401(1) and (3) do not require the maturity date to be stated even if there is one. The Committee therefore proposes to eliminate the special rule in Section 9-403(2) applicable when a maturity date is stated, and to leave all financing statements operative for five years.

I-3. There has been some objection to the five year period, on the theory that where the duration of a transaction is longer than five years, the financing statement should be good for the duration of the transaction. The Committee has accepted this view in the cases of real estate mortgages which constitute fixture security interests and transmitting utilities (Proposed Section 9-403(6)).

I-4. The Committee has chosen, however, not to recommend this change generally, or in accordance with suggestions that it be made for all combined real estate and chattel mortgages, or all combined mortgages of corporations, or of listed corporations. The burden of chattel filing, even fixture filing, is not too great in other than transmitting utility situations. The theory of the provisions for effectiveness of financing statements under the present Code is that (except for the two cases just mentioned which involve filing in offices other than the usual offices), they last for five years unless continuation statements are filed, and that the files are therefore self-clearing. A filing officer who arranges his filings by years can clear the filings of any year automatically after five years. This would not be possible if there were exceptional cases running more than five years. Moreover, searchers would have to go back to the effective date of the Code if there could be valid long-term filings.

I-5. This operating scheme raises operating questions when effectiveness of the financing statement has been extended by continuation statements, and the Committee has proposed in Section 9-403(3) that the filing officer should work out a physical annexation of the financing statement to the continuation statement to insure the preservation of those from an earlier year whose vitality has been continued.

I-6. Other detailed suggestions have been made in Section 9-403 designed to permit preservation of microfilm instead of the actual financing statements, and on the other hand to preserve the record of filings beyond the point where termination statements have been filed. Evidence of a perfection of a security interest in the past may be necessary for some time after the termination because of litigation involving bankruptcy preferences, fraudulent conveyances, or other related types of issues.

I-7. The Code's provisions as to the effect of lapse have occasioned debate. Existing Section 9-403(2) provides that upon lapse the security interest becomes unperfected, but this statement does not explicitly indicate the result when there was a right junior to the lapsed security interest. It has been argued that since the junior party was charged with notice of the lapsed security interest, he should remain junior. Comment 3 to Section 9-403 and a corresponding Comment to Section 9-103 take the position, however, that the holder of a junior security interest defeats the holder of a lapsed security interest (see also paragraph F-23 of this Statement), but neither Comment deals with the position of a buyer who bought before the lapse. The Committee proposes in Sections 9-103(1)(d)(i) and 9-403(2) to make clear that after the lapse purchasers—i.e., buyers and secured parties—have priority over the lapsed security interest. The negative inference is that judgment lienors remain subordinate.[13]

I-8. To avoid the question whether a financing statement may lapse during a bankruptcy or other insolvency proceeding, the Committee has proposed in Section 9-403(2) that the financing statement does not lapse during the proceeding and that the secured party has a minimum of 60 days after termination of the proceeding within which to refile under Article 9. Refiling, however, requires a new financing statement signed by the debtor; to avoid this, the secured party may file a continuation statement before the end of the five-year period.

I-9. A perpetual question has existed whether in filing against sole proprietorships or partnership debtors one may use a trade name, or whether the individual name of a proprietor is required, and whether the names of partners are required to be shown as debtors. There is substantial lack of uniformity in state instructions to filing officers with respect to these matters. The Committee hopes to clarify these issues by its proposed Section 9-402(7) that one files against a partnership by the name in which it is known and that one files against an individual by his individual name. Neither the names of partners nor a trade name for individuals or partnerships need be shown. The Committee has considered the California provision that a trade name should be shown, but it seems to create too great a risk of insufficient filing, because a secured party may not know of a trade name sometimes informally used by a debtor. Trade name statutes vary so widely in scope and in the effects of compliance or non-compliance that it has not seemed feasible to tie any requirements as to trade names to the existence of such statutes.

I-10. There is presently much difference in view as to whether a secured party is under a duty to refile where he knows of and particularly where he has consented to a debtor's transfer of the property to a new debtor.

[13] In the case of Section 9-403(2), the Permanent Editorial Board extended this rule to judgment lienors.

The Committee has sought to standardize practices in these respects by proposing in Section 9-402(7) that no refiling is necessary following a transfer of the collateral by the debtor. This provision is, of course, limited to the continued perfection of the security interest as to collateral transferred by the original debtor. If additional collateral is assigned after the transfer, even though the mechanism is an after-acquired property clause under a security agreement which the new debtor has assumed, it seems clear that a secured party could not be safe without a filing against the new debtor.

I-11. A similar question arises with respect to the debtor's change of name. The Committee has sought to settle the matter by proposing in Section 9-402(7) that the filing is not effective as to new collateral after four months after the change of name unless the financing statement is refiled. The provision is so drafted that it will also apply to certain corporate readjustments.

I-12. As to all of these problems of filing, the Committee is desirous of avoiding loss of security interests on mere technicalities. Accordingly, the Committee proposes to take existing Section 9-402(5) as to minor errors that are not seriously misleading, move it to the end of Section 9-402 as subsection (8), and to make it clearly applicable to all provisions of that section.

I-13. Title companies have complained with some justice that practices are too loose in the use of the term "fixture" in financing statements as a catchall phrase as in descriptions like "all machinery, equipment, tools and fixtures situated at 14 Digby Road, Chicago." This leads to a question whether a fixture filing is intended and whether a possible objection to the title to the real estate mentioned should be noted. This complaint, coupled with the fact that the Committee's proposals make clear that a fixture filing should be indexed in the real estate records, has induced the Committee to propose blanks in the sample form in Section 9-402(3) for designating unmistakably when a financing statement is intended to be filed as a fixture filing, and to require a statement to that effect in filings covered by Section 9-402(5).

I-14. After considering developing practice and the needs of filing officers for uniformity, the Committee proposes adoption of a non-uniform amendment made in some states which differentiates in the filing fees between financing statements in a form prescribed by the state filing officer and filing statements in other forms. Section 9-403(5). See also Section 9-404(3).

I-15. It is proposed to amend subsection (1) of Section 9-402 so that only the debtor need sign a financing statement. However, subsection (4) would be amended to require both parties to sign an amendment to a financing statement, thus precluding the possibility that either party could unilaterally prejudice the secured party's rights under a filed financing statement.

J. Default

J-1. Existing Section 9-501(3)(c) permits variation of the provisions of Section 9-505(1) with respect to compulsory disposition of collateral, but not the provisions of Section 9-505(2) or 9-504(3). This could be construed to mean that where the secured party proposes to retain the collateral in satisfaction of the obligation under Section 9-505(2), or fixes a time of sale under Section 9-504(3), a debtor who acquiesces cannot waive the thirty day waiting period of Section 9-505(2) or the reasonable notification of Section 9-504(3). Such a result could not be justified. Accordingly, the Committee proposes to amend Section 9-501(3)(c) to extend the authorization of waivers to all of section 9-505 and to Section 9-504(3).

J-2. In the Committee's opinion the secured party's thirty day wait under Section 9-505(2) before he can retain the collateral in satisfaction of the obligation is too long. Moreover, an extra time is involved because of the secured party's uncertainty as to when the debtor "receives notification." These circumstances, coupled with the fact that the waiting period may be wasted if objection is received from the debtor or other party entitled to receive notification, probably defeat the intended purpose of the scheme, which is (at least in part) to avoid the creation of a deficiency. It takes longer to clear title by taking the goods in satisfaction of the obligation than it does to sell. In the process of sale, a deficiency is frequently established. If the program of Section 9-505(2) were made expeditious, deficiencies might sometimes be avoided. Accordingly, the Committee proposes that the waiting period be cut down to twenty-one days after the mailing of the notice.

J-3. A related difficulty in Section 9-505(2) on accepting collateral in satisfaction of the obligation in lieu of sale and in Section 9-504(3) on sale, is the persons entitled to receive notice. Both sections now require notice (except in the case of consumer goods) not only to every other secured party who has filed a financing statement "in this state" but also to every other secured party known to the secured party giving the notice. These requirements put on the secured party the necessity of searching the record in every case and of keeping a record of every telephone call by a person claiming an interest, and determining whether such person is entitled to notice. In the Committee's opinion, this burden simply is not justified in the light of the few cases in which there will be junior security interests on file and even fewer cases in which there will be an equity for the junior party to be protected. The Committee proposes instead that the only persons (other than the debtor) who need be given notice under each section are those who have given the secured party written notice of their claims of interests in the collateral.

§ 1-105. Territorial Application of the Act; Parties' Power to Choose Applicable Law.

(1) Except as provided hereafter in this section, when a transaction bears a reasonable relation to this state and also to another state or nation the parties may agree that the law either of this state or of such other state or nation shall govern their rights and duties. Failing such agreement this Act applies to transactions bearing an appropriate relation to this state.

(2) Where one of the following provisions of this Act specifies the applicable law, that provision governs and a contrary agreement is effective only to the extent permitted by the law (including the conflict of laws rules) so specified:

Rights of creditors against sold goods. Section 2-402.

Applicability of the Article on Bank Deposits and Collections. Section 4-102.

Bulk transfers subject to the Article on Bulk Transfers. Section 6-102.

Applicability of the Article on Investment Securities. Section 8-106.

[Policy and scope of the Article on Secured Transactions. Sections 9-102 and 9-103.]

Perfection provisions of the Article on Secured Transactions, Section 9-103.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The reference to Section 9-102 has been deleted and a change made in Section 9-102 deleting any reference therein to conflict of law problems, because there is no reason why the general principles of the present section should not be applicable to the choice of law problems within its scope. Section 9-103 continues to govern choice of law questions as to perfection of security interests and the effect of perfection and non-perfection thereof. The usual rule is that perfection is governed by the law of the jurisdiction in which the collateral is when the last event occurs on which is based the assertion that the security interest is perfected or unperfected. Section 9-103 contains special rules for the cases of intangibles which have no situs, certain types of movable goods, goods which the parties intended at the inception of the transaction to be kept in another jurisdiction, goods subject to certificate of title laws, and certain other cases. Section 9-103 also contains local law rules as to reperfection of security interests when collateral is moved from one jurisdiction to another.

§ 1-201. General Definitions [Unchanged except for definitions (9) and (37)].

(9) "Buyer in ordinary course of business" means a person who in good faith and without knowledge that the sale to him is in violation of the ownership rights or security interest of a third party in the goods buys in ordinary course from a person in the business of selling goods of that kind but does not include a pawnbroker. All persons who sell minerals or the like (including oil and gas) at wellhead or minehead shall be deemed to be persons in the business of selling goods of that kind. "Buying" may be for cash or by exchange of other property or on secured or unsecured credit and includes receiving goods or documents of title under a pre-existing contract for sale but does not include a transfer in bulk or as security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a money debt.

(37) "Security interest" means an interest in personal property or fixtures which secures payment or performance of an obligation. The retention or reservation of title by a seller of goods notwithstanding shipment or delivery to the buyer (Section 2-401) is limited in effect to a reservation of a "security interest". The term also includes any interest of a buyer of accounts[,] or chattel paper[, or contract rights] which is subject to Article 9. The special property interest of a buyer of goods on identification of such goods to a contract for sale under Section 2-401 is not a "security interest", but a buyer may also acquire a "security interest" by complying with Article 9. Unless a lease or consignment is intended as security, reservation of title thereunder is not a "security interest" but a consignment is in any event subject to the provisions on consignment sales (Section 2-326). Whether a lease is intended as security is to be determined by the facts of each case; however, (a) the inclusion of an option to purchase does not of itself make the lease one intended for security, and (b) an agreement that upon compliance with the terms of the lease the lessee shall become or has the option to become the owner of the property for no additional consideration or for a nominal consideration does make the lease one intended for security.

Reasons for 1972 Change of Definitions (9) and (37)

(9) The new language fits in with changes as to minerals in Section 9-103 which are explained in the references to minerals in the Reasons for Change and Comments to that section.

(37) The omission of the term "contract rights" conforms to the elimination of that term from Article 9. See Reasons for Change under Section 9-106.

Amendment to Article 2

§ 2-107. Goods to Be Severed From Realty: Recording.

(1) A contract for the sale of [timber,] minerals or the like (including oil and gas) or a structure or its materials to be removed from realty is a contract for the sale of goods within this Article if they are to be severed by the seller but until severance a purported present sale thereof which is not effective as a transfer of an interest in land is effective only as a contract to sell.

(2) A contract for the sale apart from the land of growing crops or other things attached to realty and capable of severance without material harm thereto but not described in subsection (1) or of timber to be cut is a contract for the sale of goods within this Article whether the subject matter is to be severed by the buyer or by the seller even though it forms part of the realty at the time of contracting, and the parties can by identification effect a present sale before severance.

(3) The provisions of this section are subject to any third party rights provided by the law relating to realty records, and the contract for sale may be executed and recorded as a document transferring an interest in land and shall then constitute notice to third parties of the buyer's rights under the contract for sale.

Reasons for 1972 Change

Several timber-growing states have changed the 1962 Code to make timber to be cut under a contract of severance goods, regardless of the question who is to sever them. The section is revised to adopt this change. Financing of the transaction is facilitated if the timber is treated as goods instead of real estate. A similar change is made in the definition of "goods" in Section 9-105. To protect persons dealing with timberlands, filing on timber to be cut is required in Part 4 of Article 9 to be made in real estate records in a manner comparable to fixture filing.

Amendment to Article 5

§ 5-116. Transfer and Assignment.

(1) The right to draw under a credit can be transferred or assigned only when the credit is expressly designated as transferable or assignable.

(2) Even though the credit specifically states that it is nontransferable or nonassignable the beneficiary may before performance of the conditions of the credit assign his right to proceeds. Such an assignment is an assignment of [a contract right] an account under Article 9 on Secured Transactions and is governed by that Article except that

(a) the assignment is ineffective until the letter of credit or advice of credit is delivered to the assignee which delivery constitutes perfection of the security interest under Article 9; and

(b) the issuer may honor drafts or demands for payment drawn under the credit until it receives a notification of the assignment signed by the beneficiary which reasonably identifies the credit involved in the assignment and contains a request to pay the assignee; and

(c) after what reasonably appears to be such a notification has been received the issuer may without dishonor refuse to accept or pay even to a person otherwise entitled to honor until the letter of credit or advice of credit is exhibited to the issuer.

(3) Except where the beneficiary has effectively assigned his right to draw or his right to proceeds, nothing in this section limits his right to transfer or negotiate drafts or demands drawn under the credit.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The change conforms to the deletion of the defined term "contract right" from Article 9.

ARTICLE 9
SECURED TRANSACTIONS; SALES OF ACCOUNTS [, CONTRACT RIGHTS] AND CHATTEL PAPER

PART 1
SHORT TITLE, APPLICABILITY AND DEFINITIONS

§ 9-102. Policy and [Scope] Subject Matter of Article.

(1) Except as otherwise provided [in Section 9-103 on multiple state transactions and] in Section 9-104 on excluded transactions, this Article applies [so far as concerns any personal property and fixtures within the jurisdiction of this state]

(a) to any transaction (regardless of its form) which is intended to create a security interest in personal property or fixtures including goods, documents, instruments, general intangibles, chattel paper or accounts [or contract rights]; and also

(b) to any sale of accounts [contract rights] or chattel paper.

(2) This Article applies to security interests created by contract including pledge, assignment, chattel mortgage, chattel trust, trust deed, factor's lien, equipment trust, conditional sale, trust receipt, other lien or title retention contract and lease or consignment intended as security. This Article does not apply to statutory liens except as provided in Section 9-310.

(3) The application of this Article to a security interest in a secured obligation is not affected by the fact that the obligation is itself secured by a transaction or interest to which this Article does not apply.

Note: The adoption of this Article should be accompanied by the repeal of existing statutes dealing with conditional sales, trust receipts, factor's liens where the factor is given a non-possessory lien, chattel mortgages, crop mortgages, mortgages on railroad equipment, assignment of accounts and generally statutes regulating security interests in personal property.

Where the state has a retail installment selling act or small loan act, that legislation should be carefully examined to determine what changes in those acts are needed to conform them to this Article. This Article primarily sets out rules defining rights of a secured party against persons dealing with the debtor; it does not prescribe regulations and controls which may be necessary to curb abuses arising in the small loan business or in the financing of consumer purchases on credit. Accordingly there is no intention to repeal existing regulatory acts in those fields [.] by enactment or re-enactment of Article 9. See Section 9-203(4) and the Note thereto.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The omissions in the first paragraph of subsection (1) make applicable the general choice of law principles of Section 1-105 (except for special rules stated in Section 9-103), instead of an incomplete statement in this section.

The omission in clause (1)(b) conforms to the elimination of the term "contract rights" from the Article. See Reasons for Change under Section 9-106.

[§ 9-103. Accounts, Contract Rights, General Intangibles and Equipment Relating to Another Jurisdiction; and Incoming Goods Already Subject to a Security Interest].

[(1) If the office where the assignor of accounts or contract rights keeps his record concerning them is in this state, the validity and perfection of a security interest therein and the possibility and effect of proper filing is governed by this Article; otherwise by the law (including the conflict of laws rules) of the jurisdiction where such office is located.]

[(2) If the chief place of business of a debtor is in this state, this Article governs the validity and perfection of a security interest and the possibility and effect of proper filing with regard to general intangibles or with regard to goods of a type which are normally used in more than one jurisdiction (such as automotive equipment, rolling stock, airplanes, road building equipment, commercial harvesting equipment, construction machinery and the like) if such goods are classified as inventory by reason of their being leased by the debtor to others. Otherwise, the law (including the conflict of laws rules) of the jurisdiction where such chief place of business is located shall govern. If the chief place of business is located in a jurisdiction which does not provide for perfection of the security interest by filing or recording in that jurisdiction, then the security interest may be perfected by filing in this state. [For the purpose of determining the validity and perfection of a security interest in an airplane, the chief place of business of a debtor who is a foreign air carrier under the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended, is the designated office of the agent upon whom service of process may be made on behalf of the debtor.]]

[(3) If personal property other than that governed by subsections (1) and (2) is already subject to a security interest when it is brought into this state, the validity of the security interest in this state is to be determined by the law (including the conflict of laws rules) of the jurisdiction where the property was when the security interest attached. However, if the parties to the transaction understood at the time that the security interest attached that the property would be kept in this state and it was brought into this state within 30 days after the security interest attached for purposes other than transportation through this state, then the validity of the security interest in this state is to be determined by the law of this state. If the security interest was already perfected under the law of the jurisdiction where the property was when the security interest attached and before being brought into this state, the security interest continues perfected in this state for four months and also thereafter if within the four month period it is perfected in this state. The security interest may also be perfected in this state after the expiration of the four month period; in such case perfection dates from the time of perfection in this state. If the security interest was not perfected under the law of the jurisdiction where the property was when the security interest attached and before being brought into this state, it may be perfected in this state; in such case perfection dates from the time of perfection in this state.]

[(4) Notwithstanding subsections (2) and (3), if personal property is covered by a certificate of title issued under a statute of this state or any other jurisdiction which requires indication on a certificate of title of any security interest in the property as a condition of perfection, then the perfection is governed by the law of the jurisdiction which issued the certificate.]

[[(5) Notwithstanding subsection (1) and Section 9-302, if the office where the assignor of accounts or contract rights keeps his records concerning them is not located in a jurisdiction which is a part of the United States, its territories or possessions, and the accounts or contract rights are within the jurisdiction of this state or the transaction which creates the security interest otherwise bears an appropriate relation to this state, this Article governs the validity and perfection of the security interest and the security interest may only be perfected by notification to the account debtor.]]

(1) Documents, instruments and ordinary goods.

(a) This subsection applies to documents and instruments and to goods other than those covered by a certificate of title described in subsection (2), mobile goods described in subsection (3), and minerals described in subsection (5).

(b) Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, perfection and the effect of perfection or non-perfection of a security interest in collateral are governed by the law of the jurisdiction where the collateral is when the last event occurs on which is based the assertion that the security interest is perfected or unperfected.

(c) If the parties to a transaction creating a purchase money security interest in goods in one jurisdiction understand at the time that the security interest attaches that the goods will be kept in another jurisdiction, then the law of the other jurisdiction governs the perfection and the effect of perfection or non-perfection of the security interest from the time it attaches until thirty days after the debtor receives possession of the goods and thereafter if the goods are taken to the other jurisdiction before the end of the thirty-day period.

(d) When collateral is brought into and kept in this state while subject to a security interest perfected under the law of the jurisdiction from which the collateral was removed, the security interest remains perfected, but if action is required by Part 3 of this Article to perfect the security interest,

(i) if the action is not taken before the expiration of the period of perfection in the other jurisdiction or the end of four months after the collateral is brought into this state, whichever period first expires, the security interest becomes unperfected at the end of that period and is thereafter deemed to have been unperfected as against a person who became a purchaser after removal;

(ii) if the action is taken before the expiration of the period specified in subparagraph (i), the security interest continues perfected thereafter;

(iii) for the purpose of priority over a buyer of consumer goods (subsection (2) of Section 9-307), the period of the effectiveness of a filing in the jurisdiction from which the collateral is removed is governed by the rules with respect to perfection in subparagraphs (i) and (ii).

(2) Certificate of title.

(a) This subsection applies to goods covered by a certificate of title issued under a statute of this state or of another jurisdiction under the law of which indication of a security interest on the certificate is required as a condition of perfection.

(b) Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, perfection and the effect of perfection or non-perfection of the security interest are governed by the law (including the conflict of laws rules) of the jurisdiction issuing the certificate until four months after the goods are removed from that jurisdiction and thereafter until the goods are registered in another jurisdiction, but in any event not beyond surrender of the certificate. After the expiration of that period, the goods are not covered by the certificate of title within the meaning of this section.

(c) Except with respect to the rights of a buyer described in the next paragraph, a security interest, perfected in another jurisdiction otherwise than by notation on a certificate of title, in goods brought into this state and thereafter covered by a certificate of title issued by this state is subject to the rules stated in paragraph (d) of subsection (1).

(d) If goods are brought into this state while a security interest therein is perfected in any manner under the law of the jurisdiction from which the goods are removed and a certificate of title is issued by this state and the certificate does not show that the goods are subject to the security interest or that they may be subject to security interests not shown on the certificate, the security interest is subordinate to the rights of a buyer of the goods who is not in the business of selling goods of that kind to the extent that he gives value and receives delivery of the goods after issuance of the certificate and without knowledge of the security interest.

(3) Accounts, general intangibles and mobile goods.

(a) This subsection applies to accounts (other than an account described in subsection (5) on minerals) and general intangibles and to goods which are mobile and which are of a type normally used in more than one jurisdiction, such as motor vehicles, trailers, rolling stock, airplanes, shipping containers, road building and construction machinery and commercial harvesting machinery and the like, if the goods are equipment or are inventory leased or held for lease by the debtor to others, and are not covered by a certificate of title described in subsection (2).

(b) The law (including the conflict of laws rules) of the jurisdiction in which the debtor is located governs the perfection and the effect of perfection or non-perfection of the security interest.

(c) If, however, the debtor is located in a jurisdiction which is not a part of the United States, and which does not provide for perfection of the security interest by filing or recording in that jurisdiction, the law of the jurisdiction in the United States in which the debtor has its major executive office in the United States governs the perfection and the effect of perfection or non-perfection of the security interest through filing. In the alternative, if the debtor is located in a jurisdiction which is not a part of the United States or Canada and the collateral is accounts or general intangibles for money due or to become due, the security interest may be perfected by notification to the account debtor. As used in this paragraph,

"United States" includes its territories and possessions and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

(d) A debtor shall be deemed located at his place of business if he has one, at his chief executive office if he has more than one place of business, otherwise at his residence. If, however, the debtor is a foreign air carrier under the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended, it shall be deemed located at the designated office of the agent upon whom service of process may be made on behalf of the foreign air carrier.

(e) A security interest perfected under the law of the jurisdiction of the location of the debtor is perfected until the expiration of four months after a change of the debtor's location to another jurisdiction, or until perfection would have ceased by the law of the first jurisdiction, whichever period first expires. Unless perfected in the new jurisdiction before the end of that period, it becomes unperfected thereafter and is deemed to have been unperfected as against a person who became a purchaser after the change.

(4) Chattel paper.

The rules stated for goods in subsection (1) apply to a possessory security interest in chattel paper. The rules stated for accounts in subsection (3) apply to a non-possessory security interest in chattel paper, but the security interest may not be perfected by notification to the account debtor.

(5) Minerals.

Perfection and the effect of perfection or non-perfection of a security interest which is created by a debtor who has an interest in minerals or the like (including oil and gas) before extraction and which attaches thereto as extracted, or which attaches to an account resulting from the sale thereof at the wellhead or minehead are governed by the law (including the conflict of laws rules) of the jurisdiction wherein the wellhead or minehead is located.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The section has been completely rewritten to clarify the relationship of its several provisions to each other and to other sections defining the applicable law. Now that the Code has been adopted in all states but Louisiana and also adopted in the District of Columbia and the Virgin Islands, the emphasis in the revision has been to make clear where perfection of a security interest must take place, rather than on problems of actual conflicts of rules of law.

1. The section now concerns itself exclusively with perfection of security interests and the effect of perfection or non-perfection thereof. The 1962 Code has several references to the "validity" of a security agreement, and these have been deleted. Likewise, a deletion has been made from Section 9-102 of the language which went beyond that section's basic function of defining the scope of Article 9 and purported to state a choice of law rule. These two changes make it clear that Article 9 does not govern problems of choice of law between the original parties, and that this question is governed by the general choice of law provision in Section 1-105.

2. While most of the substantive materials of the section are in the 1962 Text, the statement thereof and their relationship to each other were not clear. In the revision they are clarified according to the following structure:

The basic rule of this section is that the controlling law, as to perfection of the security interests and the effect of perfection or non-perfection, is the law of the jurisdiction where the collateral is when the last event occurs on which is based the assertion that the security interest is perfected or unperfected (paragraph (1)(b)). There are certain exceptions: (i) In the case of a purchase money security interest in goods, where the parties intended to remove the collateral to another jurisdiction within 30 days after the debtor received possession of the goods, the law of the latter jurisdiction will govern the initial perfection until the expiration of the 30-day period, and thereafter if the goods are removed to the other jurisdiction before the end of the period (paragraph (1)(c)). (ii) Where the collateral is covered by a certificate of title, perfection will be governed by the law of the issuing jurisdiction (subsection (2)). (iii) If the collateral is certain mobile goods or certain intangibles, perfection will be governed by the law of the jurisdiction wherein is located the debtor (subsection (3)).

Where the collateral has been removed from the jurisdiction whose law first governed, the jurisdiction into which it is removed (i.e., "this state") adds a local requirement of reperfection to the requirements of the state from which the collateral was removed—i.e., refiling is required within 4 months after removal, or within any lesser period during which perfection would have continued in the other jurisdiction (paragraphs (1)(d) and (2)(c)).

3. The two former rules for determining place of perfection as to intangibles (namely, for accounts, the office where the records were kept concerning the accounts; and for general intangibles, the chief place of business of the debtor) have been consolidated into the rule that the filing is at the debtor's location. That location will ordinarily be the office designated in the 1962 Text as "chief place of business," now redesignated as "chief executive office." A new provision (paragraph (3)(e)) has been added to cover the case where that office moves from one jurisdiction to another.

A principal objection to the original rule that the place for filing as to accounts was the place where the debtor kept his records with respect to them was that persons seeking to search records might not know where this place might be, in the case of a far-flung debtor or of multicorporate enterprises with central accounting. Where the debtor assigned his accounts without recourse, as in factoring, he might keep few records with respect to them. Moreover, it was thought undesirable to have one rule for accounts and another rule for general intangibles, because in many financing situations both types of receivables may be involved. See discussion in Reasons for Change to Section 9-106. Therefore, it was decided to adopt for both types of intangibles the rule heretofore applicable to general intangibles.

This Article does not apply

(a) to a security interest subject to any statute of the United States [such as the Ship Mortgage Act, 1920,] to the extent that such statute governs the rights of parties to and third parties affected by transactions in particular types of property; or

(b) to a landlord's lien; or

(c) to a lien given by statute or other rule of law for services or materials except as provided in Section 9-310 on priority of such liens; or

(d) to a transfer of a claim for wages, salary or other compensation of an employee; or [(e) to an equipment trust covering railway rolling stock; or]

(e) to a transfer by a government or governmental subdivision or agency; or

(f) to a sale of accounts [, contract rights] or chattel paper as part of a sale of the business out of which they arose, or an assignment of accounts [, contract rights] or chattel paper which is for the purpose of collection only, or a transfer of a [contract] right to payment under a contract to an assignee who is also to do the performance under the contract or a transfer of a single account to an assignee in whole or partial satisfaction of a preexisting indebtedness; or

(g) to a transfer of an interest in or claim in or under any policy of insurance, except as provided with respect to proceeds (Section 9-306) and priorities in proceeds (Section 9-312); or

(h) to a right represented by a judgment (other than a judgment taken on a right to payment which was collateral); or

(i) to any right of set-off; or

(j) except to the extent that provision is made for fixtures in Section 9-313, to the creation or transfer of an interest in or lien on real estate, including a lease or rents thereunder; or

(k) to a transfer in whole or in part of [any of the following:] any claim arising out of tort; [any deposit, savings, passbook or like account maintained with a bank, savings and loan association, credit union or like organization.]; or

(l) to a transfer of an interest in any deposit account (subsection (1) of Section 9-105), except as provided with respect to proceeds (Section 9-306) and priorities in proceeds (Section 9-312).

Reasons for 1972 Change

Former paragraph (e), excluding railway equipment trusts from the coverage of Article 9, has been deleted. The whole thrust of Article 9 is to eliminate differences based on the form of a transaction, and the equipment trust serves the same function as other purchase money forms of financing. In fact, a form known as the "New York equipment trust" comes closer to a conditional sale contract then it does to a Pennsylvania equipment trust, and thus the former exclusion left substantial uncertainty. Railway financing on rolling stock will continue to be exempt from the filing provisions of Article 9 by virtue of Section 9-302(3) and (4). Thus, the principal purpose of the former exclusion will be retained. There is, however, no reason why the other provisions of Article 9 as to the rights of parties, manner of foreclosure, etc., should not be available to the parties to railway financing, since these problems are not adequately covered in any other statutes.

A new paragraph (e) has been added to make clear that this Article does not apply to security interests created by governmental debtors.

Other changes reflect the elimination of the term "contract rights" and the fact that, while transfers of claims under insurance policies and deposit accounts are in general excluded from the Article by this section, proceeds claims thereto are subject to Section 9-306.

§ 9-105. Definitions and Index of Definitions.

(1) In this Article unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) "Account debtor" means the person who is obligated on an account, chattel paper[, contract right] or general intangible;

(b) "Chattel paper" means a writing or writings which evidence both a monetary obligation and a security interest in or a lease of specific goods, but a charter or other contract involving the use or hire of a vessel is not chattel paper. When a transaction is evidenced both by such a security agreement or a lease and by an instrument or a series of instruments, the group of writings taken together constitutes chattel paper;

(c) "Collateral" means the property subject to a security interest, and includes accounts[, contract rights] and chattel paper which have been sold;

(d) "Debtor" means the person who owes payment or other performance of the obligation secured, whether or not he owns or has rights in the collateral, and includes the seller of accounts[, contract rights] or chattel paper. Where the debtor and the owner of the collateral are not the same person, the term "debtor" means the owner of the collateral in any provision of the Article dealing with the collateral, the obligor in any provision dealing with the obligation, and may include both where the context so requires;

(e) "Deposit account" means a demand, time, savings, passbook or like account maintained with a bank, savings and loan association, credit union or like organization, other than an account evidenced by a certificate of deposit;

(f) [(e)] "Document" means document of title as defined in the general definitions of Article 1 (Section 1-201) [;], and a receipt of the kind described in subsection (2) of Section 7-201;

(g) "Encumbrance" includes real estate mortgages and other liens on real estate and all other rights in real estate that are not ownership interests;

(h) [(f)] "Goods" includes all things which are movable at the time the security interest attaches or which are fixtures (Section 9-313), but does not include money, documents, instruments, accounts, chattel paper, general intangibles, [contract rights and other things in action,] or minerals or the like (including oil and gas) before extraction. "Goods" also includes standing timber which is to be cut and removed under a conveyance or contract for sale, the unborn young of animals, and growing crops;

(i) [(g)] "Instrument" means a negotiable instrument (defined in Section 3-104), or a security (defined in Section 8-102) or any other writing which evidences a right to the payment of money and is not itself a security agreement or lease and is of a type which is in ordinary course of business transferred by delivery with any necessary indorsement or assignment;

(j) "Mortgage" means a consensual interest created by a real estate mortgage, a trust deed on real estate, or the like;

(k) An advance is made "pursuant to commitment" if the secured party has bound himself to make it, whether or not a subsequent event of default or other event not within his control has relieved or may relieve him from his obligation;

(l) [(h)] "Security agreement" means an agreement which creates or provides for a security interest;

(m) [(i)] "Secured party" means a lender, seller or other person in whose favor there is a security interest, including a person to whom accounts[, contract rights] or chattel paper have been sold. When the holders of obligations issued under an indenture of trust, equipment trust agreement or the like are represented by a trustee or other person, the representative is the secured party;

(n) "Transmitting utility" means any person primarily engaged in the railroad, street railway or trolley bus business, the electric or electronics communications transmission business, the transmission of goods by pipeline, or the transmission or the production and transmission of electricity, steam, gas or water, or the provision of sewer service.

"Sale". Section 2-106.

(4) In addition Article 1 contains general definitions and principles of construction and interpretation applicable throughout this Article.

Reasons for 1972 Change

A definition of "transmitting utility" has been added to identify a class of debtor with special filing problems on farflung properties, for which special filing rules are stated in Part 4.

A definition of "deposit account" has been added to facilitate references to such accounts in the section on proceeds (Section 9-306).

A definition of "pursuant to commitment" has been added as the basis for use of this concept in Sections 9-301, 9-307, and 9-312.

Definitions of "encumbrance" and "mortgage" have been added as the basis for the use thereof in Section 9-313.

The definition of "document" has been amended to include therein the kind of receipt issued by a person who is not technically a warehouseman, as described in Section 7-201(2).

The exclusion of "other things in action" from the definition of "goods" has been deleted as unnecessary. "General intangibles", which under Section 9-106 includes "things in action", are themselves excluded from the definition of goods.

Other minor changes reflect the elimination of the classification "contract right" in Section 9-106.

§ 9-106. Definitions: "Account"; ["Contract Right";] "General Intangibles".

"Account" means any right to payment for goods sold or leased or for services rendered which is not evidenced by an instrument or chattel paper[.], whether or not it has been earned by performance. ["Contract right" means any right to payment under a contract not yet earned by performance and not evidenced by an instrument or chattel paper.] "General intangibles" means any personal property (including things in action) other than goods, accounts, [contract rights,] chattel paper, documents, [and] instruments, and money. All rights to payment earned or unearned under a charter or other contract involving the use or hire of a vessel and all rights incident to the charter or contract are [contract rights and neither] accounts [nor general intangibles].

Reasons for 1972 Change

The term "contract right" has been eliminated as unnecessary. As indicated by a sentence now being eliminated from Section 9-306(1), "contract right" was thought of as an "account" before the right to payment became unconditional by performance by the creditor. But the distinction between "account" and "contract right" was not used in the Article except in subsection (2) to Section 9-318 on the right of original parties to modify an assigned contract, and that subsection has been redrafted to preserve the distinction without needing the term "contract right". The term has been troublesome in creating a "proceeds" problem where a contract right becomes an "account" by performance; in the Code's former denial that there could be any right in an account until it came into existence (former Section 9-204(2)(d)), notwithstanding a security interest in the preexisting contract right; and in the danger of inadequate description in financing statements by claiming "accounts" or "general intangibles" when before performance they should have been described as "contract rights"; and in other respects.

"Money" is expressly excluded from the catch-all definition, "general intangible", to preclude any possible reading that a security interest in money may be perfected by filing.

The other changes are conforming changes.

§ 9-114. Consignment.

(1) A person who delivers goods under a consignment which is not a security interest and who would be required to file under this Article by paragraph (3)(c) of Section 2-326 has priority over a secured party who is or becomes a creditor of the consignee and who would have a perfected security interest in the goods if they were the property of the consignee, and also has priority with respect to identifiable cash proceeds received on or before delivery of the goods to a buyer, if

(a) the consignor complies with the filing provision of the Article on Sales with respect to consignments (paragraph (3)(c) of Section 2-326) before the consignee receives possession of the goods; and

(b) the consignor gives notification in writing to the holder of the security interest if the holder has filed a financing statement covering the same types of goods before the date of the filing made by the consignor; and

(c) the holder of the security interest receives the notification within five years before the consignee receives possession of the goods; and

(d) the notification states that the consignor expects to deliver goods on consignment to the consignee, describing the goods by item or type.

(2) In the case of a consignment which is not a security interest and in which the requirements of the preceding subsection have not been met, a person who delivers goods to another is subordinate to a person who would have a perfected security interest in the goods if they were the property of the debtor.

Reasons for 1972 Adoption of New Section

An uncertainty has existed under the 1962 Code whether the filing rule in Section 2-326(3) applicable to true consignments requires only filing under Part 4 of Article 9 or also requires notice to prior inventory secured parties of the debtor under Section 9-312(3). The new Section 9-114 accepts the latter view, and provides in substance that, in order to protect his ownership of the consigned goods, the consignor must give the same notice to an inventory secured party of the debtor that he would have to give if his transaction with the consignee was in the form of a security transaction instead of in the form of a consignment. This new section follows closely the language of Section 9-312(3).

PART 2

VALIDITY OF SECURITY AGREEMENT AND RIGHTS OF PARTIES THERETO

§ 9-203. Attachment and Enforceability of Security Interest; Proceeds; Formal Requisites.

[(1) Subject to the provisions of Section 4-208 on the security interest of a collecting bank and Section 9-113 on a security interest arising under the Article on Sales, a security interest is not enforceable against the debtor or third parties unless

(a) the collateral is in the possession of the secured party; or

(b) the debtor has signed a security agreement which contains a description of the collateral and in addition, when the security interest covers crops or oil, gas or minerals to be extracted or timber to be cut, a description of the land concerned. In describing collateral, the word "proceeds" is sufficient without further description to cover proceeds of any character.]

(1) Subject to the provisions of Section 4-208 on the security interest of a collecting bank and Section 9-113 on a security interest arising under the Article on Sales, a security interest is not enforceable against the debtor or third parties with respect to the collateral and does not attach unless

(a) the collateral is in the possession of the secured party pursuant to agreement, or the debtor has signed a security agreement which contains a description of the collateral and in addition, when the security interest covers crops growing or to be grown or timber to be cut, a description of the land concerned; and

(b) value has been given; and

(c) the debtor has rights in the collateral.

(2) A security interest attaches when it becomes enforceable against the debtor with respect to the collateral. Attachment occurs as soon as all of the events specified in subsection (1) have taken place unless explicit agreement postpones the time of attaching.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed a security agreement gives the secured party the rights to proceeds provided by Section 9-306.

(4) [(2)] A transaction, although subject to this Article, is also subject to _____ *, and in the case of conflict between the provisions of this Article and any such statute, the provisions of such statute control. Failure to comply with any applicable statute has only the effect which is specified therein.

Note: *At * in subsection (4) insert reference to any local statute regulating small loans, retail installment sales and the like.*

The foregoing subsection (4) is designed to make it clear that certain transactions, although subject to this Article, must also comply with other applicable legislation.

This Article is designed to regulate all the "security" aspects of transactions within its scope. There is, however, much regulatory legislation, particularly in the consumer field, which supplements this Article and should not be repealed by its enactment. Examples are small loan acts, retail installment selling acts and the like. Such acts may provide for licensing and rate regulation and may prescribe particular forms of contract. Such provisions should remain in force despite the enactment of this Article. On the other hand if a retail installment selling act contains provisions on filing, rights on default, etc., such provisions should be repealed as inconsistent with this Article[.] except that inconsistent provisions as to deficiencies, penalties, etc., in the Uniform Consumer Credit Code and other recent related legislation should remain because those statutes were drafted after the substantial enactment of the Article and with the intention of modifying certain provisions of this Article as to consumer credit.

Reasons for 1972 Change

Subsection (1) has been revised to incorporate into the concept of enforceability of a security interest the elements of agreement, value, and rights in the collateral, which formerly were stated in Section 9-204. These are combined with the requirement of written agreement (unless the security interest is evidenced by possession of the collateral by the secured party), and the security interest is said to "attach" when all of the events specified have occurred. This drafting cures the former anomaly that a security interest could attach and be perfected, and yet be unenforceable against anyone for lack of a written security agreement.

The requirement that a security agreement covering oil, gas or minerals to be extracted contain a description of the land concerned has been eliminated since the Article does not recognize a security interest in such collateral until it has been extracted from the land.

The former reference to proceeds in subsection (1) has been eliminated and new subsection (3) added to make clear that claims to proceeds under Section 9-306 do not require a statement in the security agreement, for it is assumed that the parties so intend unless otherwise agreed.

§ 9-204. [When Security Interest Attaches;] After-Acquired Property; Future Advances.

[(1) A security interest cannot attach until there is agreement (subsection (3) of Section 1-201) that it attach and value is given and the debtor has rights in the collateral. It attaches as soon as all of the events in the preceding sentence have taken place unless explicit agreement postpones the time of attaching.]

[(2) For the purposes of this section the debtor has no rights

(a) in crops until they are planted or otherwise become growing crops, in the young of livestock until they are conceived;

(b) in fish until caught, in oil, gas or minerals until they are extracted, in timber until it is cut;

(c) in a contract right until the contract has been made;

(d) in an account until it comes into existence.]

[(3) Except as provided in subsection (4) a security agreement may provide that collateral, whenever acquired, shall secure all obligations covered by the security agreement.]

[(4) No security interest attaches under an after-acquired property clause

(a) to crops which become such more than one year after the security agreement is executed except that a security interest in crops which is given in conjunction with a lease or a land purchase or improvement transaction evidenced by a contract, mortgage or deed of trust may if so agreed attach to crops to be grown on the land concerned during the period of such real estate transaction;

(b) to consumer goods other than accessions (Section 9-314) when given as additional security unless the debtor acquires rights in them within ten days after the secured party gives value.]

(1) Except as provided in subsection (2), a security agreement may provide that any or all obligations covered by the security agreement are to be secured by after-acquired collateral.

(2) No security interest attaches under an after-acquired property clause to consumer goods other than accessions (Section 9-314) when given as additional security unless the debtor acquires rights in them within ten days after the secured party gives value.

(3) [(5)] Obligations covered by a security agreement may include future advances or other value whether or not the advances or value are given pursuant to commitment (subsection (1) of Section 9-105).

Reasons for 1972 Change

Former subsection (1) has been eliminated. The term "attach" has been moved to Section 9-203 and related to the concept of enforceability of the security interest between the parties to the security agreement contained in that section.

Former subsection (2) has been eliminated as unnecessary and in some cases confusing. Its operation appeared to be arbitrary, and it is believed that the questions considered are best left to the courts.

Former subsections (3) and (5), now subsections (1) and (3), have been rewritten for clarity.

Former subsection (4) is redesignated (2), and clause (a) thereof relating to crops eliminated. That clause provided that no security interest in crops attaches under an after-acquired property clause to crops which become such more than one year after the security agreement, unless the agreement involved certain real estate transactions. The obvious purpose of this provision was to protect a necessitous farmer from encumbering his crops for many years in the future. The provision did not work because there was no corresponding limit on the scope of a financing statement covering crops, and under the Code's notice-filing rules the priority position of a security arrangement covering successive crops would be as effectively protected by the filing of a first financing statement whether the granting clause as to successive crops was in one security agreement with an after-acquired property clause or in a succession of security agreements. On the other hand the clause did require an annual security agreement for crops even when the encumbrance on crops was agreed to as part of a long-term financing covering farm machinery and other assets. The provision thus appeared to be meaningless in operation except to cause unnecessary paperwork, but it did introduce some element of uncertainty as to its purpose.

§ 9-205. Use or Disposition of Collateral Without Accounting Permissible.

A security interest is not invalid or fraudulent against creditors by reason of liberty in the debtor to use, commingle or dispose of all or part of the collateral (including returned or repossessed goods) or to collect or compromise accounts [contract rights] or chattel paper, or to accept the return of goods or make repossessions, or to use, commingle or dispose of proceeds, or by reason of the failure of the secured party to require the debtor to account for proceeds or replace collateral. This section does not relax the requirements of possession where perfection of a security interest depends upon possession of the collateral by the secured party or by a bailee.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The change reflects the deletion of the defined term "contract right" from the Article.

PART 3

RIGHTS OF THIRD PARTIES; PERFECTED AND UNPERFECTED SECURITY INTERESTS; RULES OF PRIORITY

§ 9-301. Persons Who Take Priority Over Unperfected Security Interests; Right of "Lien Creditor".

(1) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (2), an unperfected security interest is subordinate to the rights of

(a) persons entitled to priority under Section 9-312;

(b) a person who becomes a lien creditor [without knowledge of the security interest and] before [it] the security interest is perfected;

(c) in the case of goods, instruments, documents, and chattel paper, a person who is not a secured party and who is a transferee in bulk or other buyer not in ordinary course of business, or is a buyer of farm products in ordinary course of business, to the extent that he gives value and receives delivery of the collateral without knowledge of the security interest and before it is perfected;

(d) in the case of accounts [, contract rights,] and general intangibles, a person who is not a secured party and who is a transferee to the extent that he gives value without knowledge of the security interest and before it is perfected.

(2) If the secured party files with respect to a purchase money security interest before or within ten days after the debtor receives possession of the collateral [comes into possession of the debtor], he takes priority over the rights of a transferee in bulk or of a lien creditor which arise between the time the security interest attaches and the time of filing.

(3) A "lien creditor" means a creditor who has acquired a lien on the property involved by attachment, levy or the like and includes an assignee for benefit of creditors from the time of assignment, and a trustee in bankruptcy from the date of the filing of the petition or a receiver in equity from the time of appointment. [Unless all the creditors represented had knowledge of the security interest such a representative of creditors is a lien creditor without knowledge even though he personally has knowledge of the security interest.]

(4) A person who becomes a lien creditor while a security interest is perfected takes subject to the security interest only to the extent that it secures advances made before he becomes a lien creditor or within 45 days thereafter or made without knowledge of the lien or pursuant to a commitment entered into without knowledge of the lien.

Reasons for 1972 Change

Paragraph (1)(b) has been amended to eliminate the element of knowledge in the conditions under which a lien creditor may defeat an unperfected security interest. Knowledge of the security interest will no longer subordinate the lien creditor to the unfiled security interest. The former section denied the lien creditor priority even though he had no knowledge when he got involved by extending credit, if he acquired knowledge while attempting to extricate himself. It was completely inconsistent in spirit with the rules of priority between security interests, where knowledge plays a very minor role.

The change in subsection (2) is made to conform the language to that of the related provision in Section 9-312(4).

The second sentence of subsection (3) is deleted because the question of knowledge has been eliminated from paragraph (1)(b).

New subsection (4) deals with the question of the extent to which advances made under a perfected security interest after the rights of a lien creditor have attached to the collateral will come ahead of the position of the lien creditor. This subsection should be read with Section 9-307(3) (which deals with the same problem in the case of an intervening buyer) and Section 9-312(7) (which deals with the same problem in the case of a secured party), and paragraph (5) of Reasons for Change under Section 9-312.

In the case of the lien creditors dealt with by this subsection, the rule chosen is crucial to the priority of the security interest for advances over a federal tax lien for 45 days after the tax lien has been filed, as contemplated under section 6323(c)(2) and (d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 as amended by the Federal Tax Lien Act of 1966. The actual importance of the priority rule chosen between a secured party and possible lien creditors during the 45 days is believed to be slight; but the rule chosen is essential to give the secured party the protection against Federal tax liens believed to have been intended by the Federal Tax Lien Act of 1966, the operation of which is made to depend on state law. The rule of state law was not certain before this revision. Accordingly, the priority of the security interest for future advances over the judgment lien has to be absolute for the 45 days, without regard to any knowledge of the secured party that the judgment lien exists. After the 45 days the priority of the security interest depends on the secured party's lack of knowledge of the lien at the time he makes the subsequent advance or commits to do so.

§ 9-302. When Filing Is Required to Perfect Security Interest; Security Interests to Which Filing Provisions of This Article Do Not Apply.

(1) A financing statement must be filed to perfect all security interests except the following:

(a) a security interest in collateral in possession of the secured party under Section 9-305;

(b) a security interest temporarily perfected in instruments or documents without delivery under Section 9-304 or in proceeds for a 10 day period under Section 9-306;

[(c) a purchase money security interest in farm equipment having a purchase price not in excess of $2500; but filing is required for a fixture under Section 9-313 or for a motor vehicle required to be licensed;]

(c) a security interest created by an assignment of a beneficial interest in a trust or a decedent's estate;

(d) a purchase money security interest in consumer goods; but filing is required [for a fixture under Section 9-313 or for a motor vehicle required to be licensed;] for a motor vehicle required to be registered; and fixture filing is required for priority over conflicting interests in fixtures to the extent provided in Section 9-313;

(e) an assignment of accounts [or contract rights] which does not alone or in conjunction with other assignments to the same assignee transfer a significant part of the outstanding accounts [or contract rights] of the assignor;

(f) a security interest of a collecting bank (Section 4-208) or arising under the Article on Sales (see Section 9-113) or covered in subsection (3) of this section;

(g) an assignment for the benefit of all the creditors of the transferor, and subsequent transfers by the assignee thereunder.

(2) If a secured party assigns a perfected security interest, no filing under this Article is required in order to continue the perfected status of the security interest against creditors of and transferees from the original debtor.

[(3) The filing provisions of this Article do not apply to a security interest in property subject to a statute

(a) of the United States which provides for a national registration or filing of all security interests in such property; or

Note: States to select either Alternative A or Alternative B.

Alternative A—

(b) of this state which provides for central filing of, or which requires indication on a certificate of title of, such security interests in such property.

Alternative B—

(b) of this state which provides for central filing of security interests in such property, or in a motor vehicle which is not inventory held for sale for which a certificate of title is required under the statutes of this state if a notation of such a security interest can be indicated by a public official on a certificate or a duplicate thereof.]

[(4) A security interest in property covered by a statute described in subsection (3) can be perfected only by registration or filing under that statute or by indication of the security interest on a certificate of title or duplicate thereof by a public official.]

(3) The filing of a financing statement otherwise required by this Article is not necessary or effective to perfect a security interest in property subject to

(a) a statute or treaty of the United States which provides for a national or international registration or a national or international certificate of title or which specifies a place of filing different from that specified in this Article for filing of the security interest; or

*(b) the following statutes of this state; [[list any certificate of title statute covering automobiles, trailers, mobile homes, boats, farm tractors, or the like, and any central filing statute .]]; but during any period in which collateral is inventory held for sale by a person who is in the business of selling goods of that kind, the filing provisions of this Article (Part 4) apply to a security interest in that collateral created by him as debtor; or

(c) a certificate of title statute of another jurisdiction under the law of which indication of a security interest on the certificate is required as a condition of perfection (subsection (2) of Section 9-103).

(4) Compliance with a statute or treaty described in subsection (3) is equivalent to the filing of a financing statement under this Article, and a security interest in property subject to the statute or treaty can be perfected only by compliance therewith except as provided in Section 9-103 on multiple state transactions. Duration and renewal of perfection of a security interest perfected by compliance with the statute or treaty are governed by the provisions of the statute or treaty; in other respects the security interest is subject to this Article.

* Note: It is recommended that the provisions of certificate of title acts for perfection of security interests by notation on the certificates should be amended to exclude coverage of inventory held for sale.

Reasons for 1972 Change

Former paragraph (1)(c), which created a nonfiling rule for purchase money security interests in certain farm equipment, has been eliminated. The analogy drawn in the 1962 Code of farm equipment to consumer goods (for which a similar nonfiling rule is provided in paragraph (1)(d)) is believed to be inappropriate. The effect of the rule was to make farmers' equipment unavailable to them as collateral for loans from some lenders.

A new paragraph (1)(c) exempts from filing rules security interests created by assignments of beneficial interests in trusts and estates, because these assignments are not ordinarily thought of as subject to this Article, and a filing rule might operate to defeat many assignments.

The requirement of filing for purchase-money security interests in consumer goods which are fixtures has been made applicable only for priority against real estate interests (Section 9-313).

A new paragraph (1)(g) has been added exempting from filing assignments for the benefit of creditors because they are not financing transactions.

Former subsections (3) and (4) have been rewritten into new subsections (3) and (4). The alternatives of former subsection (3) had proved unacceptable formulations in many states. The states adopted non-uniform amendments to use language more closely geared to their certificate of title laws than the uniform alternatives. It is believed that the simplest thing is to have each state specify its statutes intended to be applicable as it adopts the revised Article 9.

Former Alternative B to subsection (3) has been abandoned as no longer serving any purpose: it had been an attempt to convert obsolete non-mandatory certificate of title laws into laws under which notation on the certificate of title was the necessary method of perfection of a security interest.

Subsection (3) continues to carry the thought that was formerly only in Alternative B—namely, that the certificate of title procedure does not control the perfection of inventory or "floor plan" security interests, but instead normal Code filing rules are applicable. Non-uniform variations to the contrary under some state laws are believed to increase operating burdens and it is hoped that the states will abandon them.

References to federal statutes have been broadened to include treaties.

§ 9-304. Perfection of Security Interest in Instruments, Documents, and Goods Covered by Documents; Perfection by Permissive Filing; Temporary Perfection Without Filing or Transfer of Possession.

(1) A security interest in chattel paper or negotiable documents may be perfected by filing. A security interest in money or instruments (other than instruments which constitute part of chattel paper) can be perfected only by the secured party's taking possession, except as provided in subsections (4) and (5) of this section and subsections (2) and (3) of Section 9-306 on proceeds.

(2) During the period that goods are in the possession of the issuer of a negotiable document therefor, a security interest in the goods is perfected by perfecting a security interest in the document, and any security interest in the goods otherwise perfected during such period is subject thereto.

(3) A security interest in goods in the possession of a bailee other than one who has issued a negotiable document therefor is perfected by issuance of a document in the name of the secured party or by the bailee's receipt of notification of the secured party's interest or by filing as to the goods.

(4) A security interest in instruments or negotiable documents is perfected without filing or the taking of possession for a period of 21 days from the time it attaches to the extent that it arises for new value given under a written security agreement.

(5) A security interest remains perfected for a period of 21 days without filing where a secured party having a perfected security interest in an instrument, a negotiable document or goods in possession of a bailee other than one who has issued a negotiable document therefor

(a) makes available to the debtor the goods or documents representing the goods for the purpose of ultimate sale or exchange or for the purpose of loading, unloading, storing, shipping, transshipping, manufacturing, processing or otherwise dealing with them in a manner preliminary to their sale or exchange, [; or] but priority between conflicting security interests in the goods is subject to subsection (3) of Section 9-312; or

(b) delivers the instrument to the debtor for the purpose of ultimate sale or exchange or of presentation, collection, renewal or registration of transfer.

(6) After the 21 day period in subsections (4) and (5) perfection depends upon compliance with applicable provisions of this Article.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The change in subsection (1) corrects an inadvertent omission in the 1962 Text, and makes clear that a security interest in money cannot be perfected by filing.

A provision has been added to subsection (5) making it clear that the 21-day period referred to therein deals only with perfection, but that there must be compliance with the notice provisions of Section 9-312(3) in order to achieve priority over earlier inventory financers. Corresponding clarifying changes have been made in Section 9-312(3).

§ 9-305. When Possession by Secured Party Perfects Security Interest Without Filing.

A security interest in letters of credit and advices of credit (subsection (2)(a) of Section 5-116), goods, instruments, money, negotiable documents or chattel paper may be perfected by the secured party's taking possession of the collateral. If such collateral other than goods covered by a negotiable document is held by a bailee, the secured party is deemed to have possession from the time the bailee receives notification of the secured party's interest. A security interest is perfected by possession from the time possession is taken without relation back and continues only so long as possession is retained, unless otherwise specified in this Article. The security interest may be otherwise perfected as provided in this Article before or after the period of possession by the secured party.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The change corresponds to the change in Section 9-304 to clarify the special position of money.

§ 9-306. "Proceeds"; Secured Party's Rights on Disposition of Collateral.

(1) ["Proceeds" includes whatever is received when collateral or proceeds is sold, exchanged, collected or otherwise disposed of. The term also includes the account arising when the right to payment is earned under a contract right.]

"Proceeds" includes whatever is received upon the sale, exchange, collection or other disposition of collateral or proceeds. Insurance payable by reason of loss or damage to the collateral is proceeds, except to the extent that it is payable to a person other than a party to the security agreement. Money, checks, deposit accounts, and the like are "cash proceeds". All other proceeds are "non-cash proceeds".

(2) Except where this Article otherwise provides, a security interest continues in collateral notwithstanding sale, exchange or other disposition thereof [by the debtor] unless [his action was] the disposition was authorized by the secured party in the security agreement or otherwise, and also continues in any identifiable proceeds including collections received by the debtor.

(3) The security interest in proceeds is a continuously perfected security interest if the interest in the original collateral was perfected but it ceases to be a perfected security interest and becomes unperfected ten days after receipt of the proceeds by the debtor unless

[(a) a filed financing statement covering the original collateral also covers proceeds; or]

(a) a filed financing statement covers the original collateral and the proceeds are collateral in which a security interest may be perfected by filing in the office or offices where the financing statement has been filed and, if the proceeds are acquired with cash proceeds, the description of collateral in the financing statement indicates the types of property constituting the proceeds; or

(b) a filed financing statement covers the original collateral and the proceeds are identifiable cash proceeds; or

(c) [(b)] the security interest in the proceeds is perfected before the expiration of the ten day period.

Except as provided in this section, a security interest in proceeds can be perfected only by the methods or under the circumstances permitted in this Article for original collateral of the same type.

(4) In the event of insolvency proceedings instituted by or against a debtor, a secured party with a perfected security interest in proceeds has a perfected security interest only in the following proceeds:

(a) in identifiable non-cash proceeds[;] and in separate deposit accounts containing only proceeds;

(b) in identifiable cash proceeds in the form of money which is [not] neither commingled with other money [or] nor deposited in a [bank] deposit account prior to the insolvency proceedings;

(c) in identifiable cash proceeds in the form of checks and the like which are not deposited in a [bank] deposit account prior to the insolvency proceedings; and

(d) in all cash and [bank] deposit accounts of the debtor [if other cash] in which proceeds have been commingled with other funds, [or deposited in a bank account,] but the perfected security interest under this paragraph (d) is

(i) subject to any right of set-off; and

(ii) limited to an amount not greater than the amount of any cash

proceeds received by the debtor within ten days before the institution of the insolvency proceedings [and commingled or deposited in a bank account prior to the insolvency proceedings less the amount of cash proceeds received by the debtor and paid over to the secured party during the ten day period,] less the sum of (I) the payments to the secured party on account of cash proceeds received by the debtor during such period and (II) the cash proceeds received by the debtor during such period to which the secured party is entitled under paragraphs (a) through (c) of this subsection (4).

(5) If a sale of goods results in an account or chattel paper which is transferred by the seller to a secured party, and if the goods are returned to or are repossessed by the seller or the secured party, the following rules determine priorities:

(a) If the goods were collateral at the time of sale, for an indebtedness of the seller which is still unpaid, the original security interest attaches again to the goods and continues as a perfected security interest if it was perfected at the time when the goods were sold. If the security interest was originally perfected by a filing which is still effective, nothing further is required to continue the perfected status; in any other case, the secured party must take possession of the returned or repossessed goods or must file.

(b) An unpaid transferee of the chattel paper has a security interest in the goods against the transferor. Such security interest is prior to a security interest asserted under paragraph (a) to the extent that the transferee of the chattel paper was entitled to priority under Section 9-308.

(c) An unpaid transferee of the account has a security interest in the goods against the transferor. Such security interest is subordinate to a security interest asserted under paragraph (a).

(d) A security interest of an unpaid transferee asserted under paragraph (b) or (c) must be perfected for protection against creditors of the transferor and purchasers of the returned or repossessed goods.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The first sentence of subsection (1) is rewritten for clarity.

The former second sentence of subsection (1) is omitted consistently with the abandonment of the term "contract right" in Section 9-106.

The new second sentence of subsection (1) is intended to overrule various cases to the effect that proceeds of insurance on collateral are not proceeds of the collateral. The "except" clause is intended to say that if the insurance contract specifies the person to whom the insurance is payable, the concept of "proceeds" will not interfere with performance of the contract.

Heretofore an apparent inconsistency and ambiguity has existed between the last sentence of Section 9-203(1)(b) of the 1962 Code, which indicated that a claim to proceeds had to be an express term of a security agreement, and Section 9-306(2), which indicated that a right to proceeds was automatic without reference to a term of a security agreement. This ambiguity has been clarified in favor of an automatic right to proceeds, on the theory that this is the intent of the parties, unless otherwise agreed. Further, there has been eliminated the requirement of claiming proceeds in a financing statement, which had resulted in a checking of a box on each financing statement in order to claim proceeds. Instead, the filed claim to the original collateral is treated as constituting automatically a filing as to proceeds. To this principle, a limitation has been stated: Where the filing as to the original collateral is an inappropriate means of perfection as to proceeds of certain types, or is made at a place that is inappropriate as to such proceeds, the filed claim to the original collateral perfects the claim to proceeds for only 10 days. One example of this is negotiable instruments as proceeds, as to which filing is inappropriate under Section 9-304(1). Another example is the case of accounts as proceeds of inventory, as to which under the rules of Section 9-103 the state of filing for the accounts might be different from the state of filing for the inventory.

The revised subsection (4) is a clarification based on the California revision. It makes clear that the claim to cash allowed in insolvency is exclusive of any other claim based on tracing.

§ 9-307. Protection of Buyers of Goods.

(1) A buyer in ordinary course of business (subsection (9) of Section 1-201) other than a person buying farm products from a person engaged in farming operations takes free of a security interest created by his seller even though the security interest is perfected and even though the buyer knows of its existence.

(2) In the case of consumer goods [and in the case of farm equipment having an original purchase price not in excess of $2500 (other than fixtures, see Section 9-313)], a buyer takes free of a security interest even though perfected if he buys without knowledge of the security interest, for value and for his own personal, family or household purposes [or his own farming operations] unless prior to the purchase the secured party has filed a financing statement covering such goods.

(3) A buyer other than a buyer in ordinary course of business (subsection (1) of this section) takes free of a security interest to the extent that it secures future advances made after the secured party acquires knowledge of the purchase, or more than 45 days after the purchase, whichever first occurs, unless made pursuant to a commitment entered into without knowledge of the purchase and before the expiration of the 45 day period.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The change in subsection (2) is a conforming change made necessary by the deletion of Section 9-302(1)(c) of the 1962 Code, which provided in substance that a purchase money security interest in farm equipment having an original purchase price not in excess of $2500 need not be filed. The omission of that provision in Subsection 9-302(1) makes any corresponding reference unnecessary in the present section.

Subsection (3) is one of three new provisions clarifying the extent to which future advances under a security interest may outrank an intervening right. See Sections 9-301(4) and 9-312(7) and paragraph (5) of Reasons for Change under Section 9-312.

§ 9-308. Purchase of Chattel Paper and [Non-Negotiable] Instruments.

[A purchaser of chattel paper or a non-negotiable instrument who gives new value and takes possession of it in the ordinary course of his business and without knowledge that the specific paper or instrument is subject to a security interest has priority over a security interest which is perfected under Section 9-304 (permissive filing and temporary perfection). A purchaser of chattel paper who gives new value and takes possession of it in the ordinary course of his business has priority over a security interest in chattel paper which is claimed merely as proceeds of inventory subject to a security interest (Section 9-306), even though he knows that the specific paper is subject to the security interest.]

A purchaser of chattel paper or an instrument who gives new value and takes possession of it in the ordinary course of his business has priority over a security interest in the chattel paper or instrument

(a) which is perfected under Section 9-304 (permissive filing and temporary perfection) or under Section 9-306 (perfection as to proceeds) if he acts without knowledge that the specific paper or instrument is subject to a security interest; or

(b) which is claimed merely as proceeds of inventory subject to a security interest (Section 9-306) even though he knows that the specific paper or instrument is subject to the security interest.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The section has been rewritten for clarity.

Another purpose of the changes is to make the rules of this section applicable to negotiable instruments. Heretofore, the holder of a negotiable instrument was under some circumstances in a less protected position against competing claims than the holder of chattel paper. The holder of a negotiable instrument had protection only if he achieved the holder in due course status referred to in Section 9-309, which status would not be achieved if the holder had knowledge of a conflicting proceeds claim. In contrast, the holder of chattel paper who met the stated conditions was protected under the second sentence of Section 9-308 of the 1962 Code even if he had knowledge of the conflicting proceeds claim. Under the changes, the holder of a negotiable instrument who may not qualify as holder in due course may nevertheless qualify for the protections of this section.

§ 9-312. Priorities Among Conflicting Security Interests in the Same Collateral.

[(1) The rules of priority stated in the following sections shall govern where applicable: Section 4-208 with respect to the security interest of collecting banks in items being collected, accompanying documents and proceeds; Section 9-301 on certain priorities; Section 9-304 on goods covered by documents; Section 9-306 on proceeds and repossessions; Section 9-307 on buyers of goods; Section 9-308 on possessory against non-possessory interests in chattel paper or non-negotiable instruments; Section 9-309 on security interests in negotiable instruments, documents or securities; Section 9-310 on priorities between perfected security interests and liens by operation of law; Section 9-313 on security interests in fixtures as against interests in real estate; Section 9-314 on security interests in accessions as against interest in goods; Section 9-315 on conflicting security interests where goods lose their identity or become part of a product; and Section 9-316 on contractual subordination.]

(1) The rules of priority stated in other sections of this Part and in the following sections shall govern when applicable: Section 4-208 with respect to the security interests of collecting banks in items being collected, accompanying documents and proceeds; Section 9-103 on security interests related to other jurisdictions; Section 9-114 on consignments.

(2) A perfected security interest in crops for new value given to enable the debtor to produce the crops during the production season and given not more than three months before the crops become growing crops by planting or otherwise takes priority over an earlier perfected security interest to the extent that such earlier interest secures obligations due more than six months before the crops become growing crops by planting or otherwise, even though the person giving new value had knowledge of the earlier security interest.

[(3) A purchase money security interest in inventory collateral has priority over a conflicting security interest in the same collateral if

(a) the purchase money security interest is perfected at the time the debtor receives possession of the collateral; and

(b) any secured party whose security interest is known to the holder of the purchase money security interest or who, prior to the date of the filing made by the holder of the purchase money security interest, had filed a financing statement covering the same items or type of inventory, has received notification of the purchase money security interest before the debtor receives possession of the collateral covered by the purchase money security interest; and

(c) such notification states that the person giving the notice has or expects to acquire a purchase money security interest in inventory of the debtor, describing such inventory by item or type.]

(3) A perfected purchase money security interest in inventory has priority over a conflicting security interest in the same inventory and also has priority in identifiable cash proceeds received on or before the delivery of the inventory to a buyer if

(a) the purchase money security interest is perfected at the time the debtor receives possession of the inventory; and

(b) the purchase money secured party gives notification in writing to the holder of the conflicting security interest if the holder had filed a financing statement covering the same types of inventory (i) before the date of the filing made by the purchase money secured party, or (ii) before the beginning of the 21 day period where the purchase money security interest is temporarily perfected without filing or possession (subsection (5) of Section 9-304); and

(c) the holder of the conflicting security interest receives the notification within five years before the debtor receives possession of the inventory; and

(d) the notification states that the person giving the notice has or expects to acquire a purchase money security interest in inventory of the debtor, describing such inventory by item or type.

(4) A purchase money security interest in collateral other than inventory has priority over a conflicting security interest in the same collateral or its proceeds if the purchase money security interest is perfected at the time the debtor receives possession of the collateral or within ten days thereafter.

(5) In all cases not governed by other rules stated in this section (including cases of purchase money security interests which do not qualify for the special priorities set forth in subsections (3) and (4) of this section), priority between conflicting security interests in the same collateral shall be determined [as follows:

(a) in the order of filing if both are perfected by filing, regardless of which security interest attached first under Section 9-204(1) and whether it attached before or after filing;

(b) in the order of perfection unless both are perfected by filing, regardless of which security interest attached first under Section 9-204(1) and, in the case of a filed security interest, whether it attached before or after filing; and

(c) in the order of attachment under Section 9-204(1) so long as neither is perfected.]

according to the following rules:

(a) Conflicting security interests rank according to priority in time of filing or perfection. Priority dates from the time a filing is first made covering the collateral or the time the security interest is first perfected, whichever is earlier, provided that there is no period thereafter when there is neither filing nor perfection.

(b) So long as conflicting security interests are unperfected, the first to attach has priority.

[(6) For the purpose of the priority rules of the immediately preceding subsection, a continuously perfected security interest shall be treated at all times as if perfected by filing if it was originally so perfected and it shall be treated at all times as if perfected otherwise than by filing if it was originally perfected otherwise than by filing.]

(6) For the purposes of subsection (5) a date of filing or perfection as to collateral is also a date of filing or perfection as to proceeds.

(7) If future advances are made while a security interest is perfected by filing or the taking of possession, the security interest has the same priority for the purposes of subsection (5) with respect to the future advances as it does with respect to the first advance. If a commitment is made before or while the security interest is so perfected, the security interest has the same priority with respect to advances made pursuant thereto. In other cases a perfected security interest has priority from the date the advance is made.

Reasons for 1972 Change

(1) The change in subsection (1) is primarily a simplification of statement.

(2) Changes have been made in subsection (3) to answer unresolved questions under the 1962 Code.

(a) One change answers the question how often a notice must be given under that subsection. The period of five years has been chosen by analogy to the duration of a financing statement.

(b) Another change answers the question of the priority status of the security interest in inventory temporarily perfected for 21 days without filing or perfection in a situation which begins with release of a pledged document under Section 9-304(5). The answer provided is the usual rule that the purchase-money claimant to preserve his priority resulting from the document must give the required notice before the debtor receives possession of the inventory. If the secured party fails to give timely notice, he loses his priority under this subsection.

(c) One of the most widely discussed questions under the 1962 Code was the question of the priority between a person claiming accounts as proceeds of inventory and a person claiming the accounts by direct filing with respect thereto. One issue was whether the special position of an inventory financer as a purchase money financer or as the first financer in the business cycle of the debtor gave him any special position as to accounts resulting from the inventory. In general, as revised, a negative answer has been given, and a prior right to inventory does not confer a prior right to any proceeds except identifiable cash proceeds received on or before the delivery of the inventory (i.e., without the intervention of an account). Other aspects of this issue are discussed under subsection (5) of this section.

(3) A different answer has been given in subsection (4) relating to purchase money security interests in collateral other than inventory. Here, where it is not ordinarily expected that the collateral will be sold and that proceeds will result, it seems appropriate to give the party having a purchase money security interest in the original collateral an equivalent priority in its proceeds. The 1962 Code was unclear on this point.

(4) Existing subsection (5) contains two principal rules. Paragraph (a) is a first-to-file rule where both competing security interests are perfected by filing. Paragraph (b) is a first-to-perfect rule when either of the security interests is or both of them are perfected otherwise than by filing. A traffic rule is provided by existing subsection (6) to the effect that a continuously perfected security interest shall be treated for the purpose of the foregoing rules as if at all times perfected in the manner it was first perfected. The problems raised have been the subject of an enormous legal literature. They are complicated by the unforeseeable effect of the temporary perfection of security interest in proceeds without filing under Section 9-306, and by speculation as to whether a secured party could claim that his security interest was originally perfected without filing under this rule even though the security interest in proceeds was claimed in his filing as to the original collateral. They are further complicated by the question whether different rules would apply when a financing statement was drawn to cover, e.g., inventory and its proceeds (which would include accounts) and when it was drawn to cover inventory and accounts.

To settle these questions it is proposed to replace the present paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection (5) by a single rule, subsection (5), and to eliminate existing subsection (6). Together with this treatment should be noted the fact that a filing as to proceeds automatically arises from a filed security interest in original collateral under the proposed revision of Section 9-306(3), subject to limitations therein discussed. New proposed subsection (6) makes it clear that subject to these limitations the time of filing or perfection as to original collateral is the time of filing or perfection as to proceeds.

The rule of proposed subsection (5) ranks conflicting perfected security interests by their priority in time, dating back to the respective times when without interruption the security interests were either perfected or were the subjects of appropriate filings.

Perhaps the most debated subject under Article 9 has been the question whether between conflicting security interests a priority as to original collateral confers a priority as to proceeds. As indicated above, in the case of collateral other than inventory, e.g., equipment, it seems clear that the policy favoring the purchase money secured party in Section 9-312(4) should give him the first claim to the proceeds. This is so even though the security interests will have been perfected simultaneously when the proceeds arise and the debtor acquires rights therein.

Proper policy is much less clear when the collateral involved is inventory and proceeds consisting of accounts. (Policy as to other types of receivables as proceeds is expressed in Sections 9-308 and 9-309). Accounts financing is more important in the economy than the financing of the kinds of inventory that produce accounts, and the desirable rule is one which makes accounts financing certain as to its legal position. Therefore, the rule proposed is that where a financing statement as to accounts is filed first (with or without related inventory financing), the security interest in accounts should not be defeated by any subsequent claim to accounts as proceeds of a security interest in inventory filed later. There is therefore no provision in Section 9-312(3) carrying forward to accounts any priority right in inventory, and proposed subsections (5) and (6) adhere firmly to the principle that a date of filing as to original collateral also defines the date of filing as to proceeds. Correspondingly, a financing statement as to inventory (carrying with it a claim to proceeds) which is filed first will under the same provisions have priority over a later-filed security interest in accounts.

(5) The priority of future advances against an intervening party has been the subject of much discussion and disagreement. Where both interests are filed security interests, the first-to-file rule of present Section 9-312(5)(a) or the corresponding proposed revision is clearly applicable. Under the 1962 Code, the position of an intervening pledgee in reference to a subsequent advance by an earlier-filed secured party is debatable. The proposed unified priority rule of subsection 9-312(5) would indicate that subsequent advances by the first-filed party have priority, and subsequent advances under a security interest perfected by possession likewise have priority over an intervening filed security interest. These priority rules are expressly stated in proposed subsection (7). That proposal also deals with the rare case of the priority position of a subsequent advance made by a secured party whose security interest is temporarily perfected without either filing or possession, against an intervening secured party. Since there is no notice by the usual methods of filing or possession of the existence of the security interest, the subsequent advances rank only from the actual date of making unless made pursuant to commitment.

Different but related problems exist with reference to the status of subsequent advances when the intervening party is a judgment creditor. He is not directly part of the Code's system of priorities. It seems unfair to make it possible for a debtor and secured party with knowledge of the judgment lien to squeeze out a judgment creditor who has successfully levied on a valuable equity subject to a security interest, by permitting later enlargement of the security interest by an additional advance, unless that advance was committed in advance without such knowledge. Proposed Section 9-301(4) provides that a lien creditor does not take subject to a subsequent advance unless it is given or committed without knowledge, but there is an exception protecting future advances within 45 days after the levy regardless of knowledge. The 45-day period corresponds to a provision on protection of advances made after the filing of tax liens in the Federal Tax Lien Act of 1966.

A similar problem arises where the intervening party is a buyer of the collateral subject to the security interest. While buyers must necessarily take subject to rights of secured parties, the buyer should take subject to subsequent advances only to the extent that they are given "pursuant to commitment" or within the period of 45 days after the purchase but not later than the time that the secured party acquires knowledge of the purchase. It is so proposed in Section 9-307(3). A definition of the quoted phrase appears in Section 9-105.

§ 9-313. Priority of Security Interests in Fixtures.

[(1) The rules of this section do not apply to goods incorporated into a structure in the manner of lumber, bricks, tile, cement, glass, metal work and the like and no security interest in them exists under this Article unless the structure remains personal property under applicable law. The law of this state other than this Act determines whether and when other goods become fixtures. This Act does not prevent creation of an encumbrance upon fixtures or real estate pursuant to the law applicable to real estate.]

[(2) A security interest which attaches to goods before they become fixtures takes priority as to the goods over the claims of all persons who have an interest in the real estate except as stated in subsection (4).]

[(3) A security interest which attaches to goods after they become fixtures is valid against all persons subsequently acquiring interests in the real estate except as stated in subsection (4) but is invalid against any person with an interest in the real estate at the time the security interest attaches to the goods who has not in writing consented to the security interest or disclaimed an interest in the goods as fixtures.]

[(4) The security interests described in subsections (2) and (3) do not take priority over

(a) a subsequent purchaser for value of any interest in the real estate; or

(b) a creditor with a lien on the real estate subsequently obtained by judicial proceedings; or

(c) a creditor with a prior encumbrance of record on the real estate to the extent that he makes subsequent advances

if the subsequent purchase is made, the lien by judicial proceedings is obtained, or the subsequent advance under the prior encumbrance is made or contracted for without knowledge of the security interest and before it is perfected. A purchaser of the real estate at a foreclosure sale other than an encumbrancer purchasing at his own foreclosure sale is a subsequent purchaser within this section.]

(1) In this section and in the provisions of Part 4 of this Article referring to fixture filing, unless the context otherwise requires

(a) goods are "fixtures" when they become so related to particular real estate that an interest in them arises under real estate law

(b) a "fixture filing" is the filing in the office where a mortgage on the real estate would be filed or recorded of a financing statement covering goods which are or are to become fixtures and conforming to the requirements of subsection (5) of Section 9-402

(c) a mortgage is a "construction mortgage" to the extent that it secures an obligation incurred for the construction of an improvement on land including the acquisition cost of the land, if the recorded writing so indicates.

(2) A security interest under this Article may be created in goods which are fixtures or may continue in goods which become fixtures, but no security interest exists under this Article in ordinary building materials incorporated into an improvement on land.

(3) This Article does not prevent creation of an encumbrance upon fixtures pursuant to real estate law.

(4) A perfected security interest in fixtures has priority over the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the real estate where

(a) the security interest is a purchase money security interest, the interest of the encumbrancer or owner arises before the goods become fixtures, the security interest is perfected by a fixture filing before the goods become fixtures or within ten days thereafter, and the debtor has an interest of record in the real estate or is in possession of the real estate; or

(b) the security interest is perfected by a fixture filing before the interest of the encumbrancer or owner is of record, the security interest has priority over any conflicting interest of a predecessor in title of the encumbrancer or owner, and the debtor has an interest of record in the real estate or is in possession of the real estate; or

(c) the fixtures are readily removable factory or office machines or readily removable replacements of domestic appliances which are consumer goods, and before the goods become fixtures the security interest is perfected by any method permitted by this Article; or

(d) the conflicting interest is a lien on the real estate obtained by legal or equitable proceedings after the security interest was perfected by any method permitted by this Article.

(5) A security interest in fixtures, whether or not perfected, has priority over the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the real estate where

(a) the encumbrancer or owner has consented in writing to the security interest or has disclaimed an interest in the goods as fixtures; or

(b) the debtor has a right to remove the goods as against the encumbrancer or owner. If the debtor's right terminates, the priority of the security interest continues for a reasonable time.

(6) Notwithstanding paragraph (a) of subsection (4) but otherwise subject to subsections (4) and (5), a security interest in fixtures is subordinate to a construction mortgage recorded before the goods become fixtures if the goods become fixtures before the completion of the construction. To the extent that it is given to refinance a construction mortgage, a mortgage has this priority to the same extent as the construction mortgage.

(7) In cases not within the preceding subsections, a security interest in fixtures is subordinate to the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the related real estate who is not the debtor.

(8) [(5)] When [under subsections (2) or (3) or (4) a] the secured party has priority over [the claims of all persons who have interests in] all owners and encumbrancers of the real estate, he may, on default, subject to the provisions of Part 5, remove his collateral from the real estate but he must reimburse any encumbrancer or owner of the real estate who is not the debtor and who has not otherwise agreed for the cost of repair of any physical injury, but not for any diminution in value of the real estate caused by the absence of the goods removed or by any necessity of replacing them. A person entitled to reimbursement may refuse permission to remove until the secured party gives adequate security for the performance of this obligation.

Reasons for 1972 Change

As the Code came to be widely enacted, the real estate bar came to realize the impact of the fixture provisions on real estate financing and real estate titles. They apparently had not fully appreciated the impact of these provisions of Article 9 on real estate matters during the enactment of the Code, because of the commonly-held assumption that Article 9 was concerned only with chattel security matters.

The treatment of fixtures in pre-Code law had varied widely from state to state. The treatment in Article 9 was based generally on prior treatment in the Uniform Conditional Sales Act, which, however, had been enacted in only a dozen states. In other states the word "fixture" had come to mean that a former chattel had become real estate for all purposes and that any chattel rights therein were lost. For lawyers trained in such states the Code provisions seemed to be extreme. Some sections of the real estate bar began attempting with some success to have Section 9-313 amended to bring it closer to the pre-Code law in their states. In some states, such as California and Iowa, Section 9-313 simply was not enacted.

Even supporters of Article 9 and of its fixture provisions came to recognize that there were some ambiguities in Section 9-313, particularly in its application to construction mortgages, and also in its failure to make it clear that filing of fixture security interests was to be in real estate records where they could be found by a standard real estate search.

Section 9-313 and related provisions of Part 4 have been redrafted to meet the legitimate criticisms and to make a substantial shift in the law in favor of construction mortgages. The specific changes are described in the 1972 Comments to Section 9-313, and the Comments to the several sections of Part 4.

§ 9-318. Defenses Against Assignee; Modification of Contract After Notification of Assignment; Term Prohibiting Assignment Ineffective; Identification and Proof of Assignment.

(1) Unless an account debtor has made an enforceable agreement not to assert defenses or claims arising out of a sale as provided in Section 9-206 the rights of an assignee are subject to

(a) all the terms of the contract between the account debtor and assignor and any defense or claim arising therefrom; and

(b) any other defense or claim of the account debtor against the assignor which accrues before the account debtor receives notification of the assignment.

(2) So far as the right to payment or a part thereof under an assigned contract has not been fully earned by performance, [right has not already become an account,] and notwithstanding notification of the assignment, any modification of or substitution for the contract made in good faith and in accordance with reasonable commercial standards is effective against an assignee unless the account debtor has otherwise agreed but the assignee acquires corresponding rights under the modified or substituted contract. The assignment may provide that such modification or substitution is a breach by the assignor.

(3) The account debtor is authorized to pay the assignor until the account debtor receives notification that the [account] amount due or to become due has been assigned and that payment is to be made to the assignee. A notification which does not reasonably identify the rights assigned is ineffective. If requested by the account debtor, the assignee must seasonably furnish reasonable proof that the assignment has been made and unless he does so the account debtor may pay the assignor.

(4) A term in any contract between an account debtor and an assignor [which] is ineffective if it prohibits assignment of an account [or contract right to which they are parties is ineffective] or prohibits creation of a security interest in a general intangible for money due or to become due or requires the account debtor's consent to such assignment or security interest.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The principal changes conform to the elimination of the term "contract right" in Section 9-106.

Minor changes in subsections (3) and (4) eliminate technical difficulties in the 1962 Code which arose out of the fact that the term "account debtor" used in these subsections is defined to include debtors under general intangibles and chattel paper, and is therefore broader than the term "account" heretofore used in these subsections. Subsection (4) is broadened to apply to general intangibles for money due as well as to accounts.

PART 4
FILING

§ 9-401. Place of Filing; Erroneous Filing; Removal of Collateral.

First Alternative Subsection (1)

(1) The proper place to file in order to perfect a security interest is as follows:

(a) when the collateral is timber to be cut or is minerals or the like (including oil and gas) or accounts subject to subsection (5) of Section 9-103, or when the financing statement is filed as a fixture filing (Section 9-313) and the collateral is goods which [at the time the security interest attaches] are or are to become fixtures, then in the office where a mortgage on the real estate [concerned] would be filed or recorded;

(b) in all other cases, in the office of the [[Secretary of State]].

Second Alternative Subsection (1)

(1) The proper place to file in order to perfect a security interest is as follows:

(a) when the collateral is equipment used in farming operations, or farm products, or accounts [, contract rights] or general intangibles arising from or relating to the sale of farm products by a farmer, or consumer goods, then in the office of the _____ in the county of the debtor's residence or if the debtor is not a resident of this state then in the office of the _____ in the county where the goods are kept, and in addition when the collateral is crops growing or to be grown in the office of the _____ in the county where the land [on which the crops are growing or to be grown] is located;

(b) when the collateral is [goods which at the time the security interest attaches are or are to become fixtures] timber to be cut or is minerals or the like (including oil and gas) or accounts subject to subsection (5) of Section 9-103, or when the financing statement is filed as a fixture filing (Section 9-313) and the collateral is goods which are or are to be become fixtures, then in the office where a mortgage on the real estate [concerned] would be filed or recorded;

(c) in all other cases, in the office of the [[Secretary of State]].

Third Alternative Subsection (1)

(1) The proper place to file in order to perfect a security interest is as follows:

(a) when the collateral is equipment used in farming operations, or farm products, or accounts [, contract rights] or general intangibles arising from or relating to the sale of farm products by a farmer, or consumer goods, then in the office of the _____ in the county of the debtor's residence or if the debtor is not a resident of this state then in the office of the _____ in the county where the goods are kept, and in addition when the collateral is crops growing or to be grown in the office of the _____ in the county where the land [on which the crops are growing or to be grown] is located;

(b) when the collateral is [goods which at the time the security interest attaches are or are to become fixtures] timber to be cut or is minerals or the like (including oil and gas) or accounts subject to subsection (5) of Section 9-103, or when the financing statement is filed as a fixture filing (Section 9-313) and the collateral is goods which are or are to become fixtures, then in the office where a mortgage on the real estate [concerned] would be filed or recorded;

(c) in all other cases, in the office of the [[Secretary of State]] and in addition, if the debtor has a place of business in only one county of this state, also in the office of _____ of such county, or, if the debtor has no place of business in this state, but resides in the state, also in the office of _____ of the county in which he resides.

Note: One of the three alternatives should be selected as subsection (1).

(2) A filing which is made in good faith in an improper place or not in all of the places required by this section is nevertheless effective with regard to any collateral as to which the filing complied with the requirements of this Article and is also effective with regard to collateral covered by the financing statement against any person who has knowledge of the contents of such financing statement.

(3) A filing which is made in the proper place in this state continues effective even though the debtor's residence or place of business or the location of the collateral or its use, whichever controlled the original filing, is thereafter changed.

Language in double brackets is Alternative Subsection (3)

[[(3) A filing which is made in the proper county continues effective for four months after a change to another county of the debtor's residence or place of business or the location of the collateral, whichever controlled the original filing. It becomes ineffective thereafter unless a copy of the financing statement signed by the secured party is filed in the new county within said period. The security interest may also be perfected in the new county after the expiration of the four-month period; in such case perfected dates from the time of perfection in the new county. A change in the use of the collateral does not impair the effectiveness of the original filing.]]

(4) [If collateral is brought into this state from another jurisdiction, the] The rules stated in Section 9-103 determine whether filing is necessary in this state.

(5) Notwithstanding the preceding subsections, and subject to subsection (3) of Section 9-302, the proper place to file in order to perfect a security interest in collateral, including fixtures, of a transmitting utility is the office of the [[Secretary of State]]. This filing constitutes a fixture filing (Section 9-313) as to the collateral described therein which is or is to become fixtures.

(6) For the purposes of this section, the residence of an organization is its place of business if it has one or its chief executive office if it has more than one place of business.

Note: Subsection (6) should be used only if the state chooses the Second or Third Alternative Subsection (1).

Reasons for 1972 Change

The several alternatives for subsection (1) have been rewritten to provide for filing in the real estate records of security interests intended to give a priority as a "fixture filing" under Section 9-313.

This requirement for filing in real estate records applies only if the priority advantages of Section 9-313 are desired. If the secured party is not concerned about priority against real estate parties, he can file for a fixture as for an ordinary chattel, in the chattel records, omitting the filing in the real estate records, and he will have a security interest perfected against everyone but real estate parties. In the case of a purchase money security interest in consumer goods, he need not file at all. See Section 9-313(1)(d). For the question of the effect of the regular chattel filing in lieu of fixture filing in the event of the debtor's bankruptcy, see Comment 4(c) to Section 9-313.

This requirement for filing in real estate records applies also to timber to be cut and to minerals or the like (including oil and gas) financed at the wellhead or minehead or accounts resulting from the sale thereof.

This filing is not merely in the office where a mortgage of real estate would be recorded, but it is intended that it be filed in the real estate records. This is made clear by the model form in Section 9-402(3) which recites that the financing statement is to be filed for record in the real estate records, the required recital in Section 9-402(5), and the provision of Section 9-403(7) requiring the indexing thereof in the real estate records. Thus, it is intended that these filings will be readily disclosed on any real estate search and they can be treated like any real estate encumbrance so disclosed.

A new subsection (5) makes clear that a financing statement filed against a "transmitting utility" (Section 9-105) need be filed only in the office of the [Secretary of State] and not locally. Special provision had to be made for filing where these far-flung utilities were debtors. If the problem were only on non-fixtures, not more than one local filing would have been necessary under any of the alternative versions of subsection (1), but the problem was more difficult in the case of fixtures, where the standard rule would require filing with real estate descriptions in every county where there were fixtures.

There has been some difficulty in the concept that one files against farmers at their residences, in view of the number of incorporated farms. A new subsection (6) is therefore added to define the residence of an organization. Subsection (6) is also needed if the provision of the Third Alternative Subsection (1) for double filing against local business debtors is adopted.

§ 9-402. Formal Requisites of Financing Statement; Amendments; Mortgage as Financing Statement.

(1) A financing statement is sufficient if it gives the names of the debtor and the secured party, is signed by the debtor [and the secured party], gives an address of the secured party from which information concerning the security interest may be obtained, gives a mailing address of the debtor and contains a statement indicating the types, or describing the items, of collateral. A financing statement may be filed before a security agreement is made or a security interest otherwise attaches. When the financing statement covers crops growing or to be grown [or goods which are or are to become fixtures], the statement must also contain a description of the real estate concerned. When the financing statement covers timber to be cut or covers minerals or the like (including oil and gas) or accounts subject to subsection (5) of Section 9-103, or when the financing statement is filed as a fixture filing (Section 9-313) and the collateral is goods which are or are to become fixtures, the statement must also comply with subsection (5). A copy of the security agreement is sufficient as a financing statement if it contains the above information and is signed by [both parties.] the debtor. A carbon, photographic or other reproduction of a security agreement or a financing statement is sufficient as a financing statement if the security agreement so provides or if the original has been filed in this state.

(2) A financing statement which otherwise complies with subsection (1) is sufficient [although] when it is signed [only] by the secured party instead of the debtor if it is filed to perfect a security interest in

(a) collateral already subject to a security interest in another jurisdiction when it is brought into this state, or when the debtor's location is changed to this state. Such a financing statement must state that the collateral was brought into this state or that the debtor's location was changed to this state under such circumstances; or

(b) proceeds under Section 9-306 if the security interest in the original collateral was perfected. Such a financing statement must describe the original collateral; or

(c) collateral as to which the filing has lapsed; or

(d) collateral acquired after a change of name, identity or corporate structure of the debtor (subsection (7)).

(3) A form substantially as follows is sufficient to comply with subsection (1):

Name of debtor (or assignor) _____

Address _____

Name of secured party (or assignee) _____

Address _____

1. This financing statement covers the following types (or items) of property:

(Describe) _____

2. (If collateral is crops) The above described crops are growing or are to be grown on:

(Describe Real Estate) _____

[3. (If collateral is goods which are or are to become fixtures) The above described goods are affixed or to be affixed to:

(Describe Real Estate) _____]

3. (If applicable) The above goods are to become fixtures on*

(Describe Real Estate) _____ and this financing statement is to be filed [[for record]] in the real estate records. (If the debtor does not have an interest of record) The name of a record owner is _____

4. (If [proceeds or] products of collateral are claimed) [Proceeds—] Products of the collateral are also covered.

(use whichever is applicable)

Signature of Debtor (or Assignor)

Signature of Secured Party (or Assignee)

(4) A financing statement may be amended by filing a writing signed by both the debtor and the secured party. An amendment does not extend the period of effectiveness of a financing statement. [The term "financing statement" as used in this Article means the original financing statement and any amendments but if] If any amendment adds collateral, it is effective as to the added collateral only from the filing date of the amendment. In this Article, unless the context otherwise requires, the term "financing statement" means the original financing statement and any amendments.

(5) A financing statement covering timber to be cut or covering minerals or the like (including oil and gas) or accounts subject to subsection (5) of Section 9-103, or a financing statement filed as a fixture filing (Section 9-313) where the debtor is not a transmitting utility, must show that it covers this type of collateral, must recite that it is to be filed [[for record]] in the real estate records, and the financing statement must contain a description of the real estate [[sufficient if it were contained in a mortgage of the real estate to give constructive notice of the mortgage under the law of this state]]. If the debtor does not have an interest of record in the real estate, the financing statement must show the name of a record owner.

*Where appropriate substitute either "The above timber is standing on . . .." or "The above minerals or the like (including oil and gas) or accounts will be financed at the wellhead or minehead of the well or mine located on . . .."

(6) A mortgage is effective as a financing statement filed as a fixture filing from the date of its recording if (a) the goods are described in the mortgage by item or type, (b) the goods are or are to become fixtures related to the real estate described in the mortgage, (c) the mortgage complies with the requirements for a financing statement in this section other than a recital that it is to be filed in the real estate records, and (d) the mortgage is duly recorded. No fee with reference to the financing statement is required other than the regular recording and satisfaction fees with respect to the mortgage.

(7) A financing statement sufficiently shows the name of the debtor if it gives the individual, partnership or corporate name of the debtor, whether or not it adds other trade names or the names of partners. Where the debtor so changes his name or in the case of an organization its name, identity or corporate structure that a filed financing statement becomes seriously misleading, the filing is not effective to perfect a security interest in collateral acquired by the debtor more than four months after the change, unless a new appropriate financing statement is filed before the expiration of that time. A filed financing statement remains effective with respect to collateral transferred by the debtor even though the secured party knows of or consents to the transfer.

(8) [(5)] A financing statement substantially complying with the requirements of this section is effective even though it contains minor errors which are not seriously misleading.

Note: Language in double brackets is optional.

Note: Where the state has any special recording system for real estate other than the usual grantor-grantee index (as, for instance, a tract system or a title registration or Torrens system) local adaptations of subsection (5) and Section 9-403(7) may be necessary. See Mass.Gen.Laws Chapter 106, Section 9-409.

Reasons for 1972 Change

Certain changes are conforming changes to new requirements of Section 9-401 that certain financing statements covering such collateral as timber and minerals be filed in the real estate records. Persons interested in real estate have complained with some justice that the provisions of the 1962 Code failed in several ways to tie the fixture filings to the real estate search system. Among these was the absence of clear specification that the fixture security interest was to be indexed in the real estate records. On this point, a responsive change has been made in Section 9-403. Other objections related to the adequacy of the real estate description and to the fact that the debtor might not be an owner of an interest of record in the real estate. The optional language in subsection (5) is designed to meet the objection as to real estate descriptions but without imposing on a fixture-secured party the duty of obtaining a "legal description" unless the state's recording system requires it. While no doubt a full "legal description" is proper practice in conveyancing, it is believed that something significantly less, like a street address, would be adequate in most states, and would frequently be a guide to a recorded map. Where a state has a tract index system or other special system not dependent on a grantor-grantee index, special adaptations may be required and no attempt is made in the Code to deal with all such situations.

Another objection of real estate parties has been that the name of the debtor might not be in the real estate chain of title and there have been numerous non-uniform amendments to Sections 9-401, 9-402, or 9-403 designed to require the showing of the name of the record owners of the real estate in the financing statement. Since Section 9-313(4)(a) and (b) permit fixture filing against persons in possession of the real estate who do not have interests of record, Section 9-402 requires the naming of an owner of record of the real estate in such cases, and Section 9-403(7) requires indexing the fixture filing against the name.

Subsection (6) makes it possible for a real estate mortgage to serve as a financing statement, and a related change in Section 9-403(6) makes it unnecessary to file continuation statements for such a financing statement.

Subsection (1) has been changed to require only the signature of the debtor rather than that of the secured party. The requirement of signatures of secured parties has sometimes misled secured parties, who are accustomed to pre-Code practice and real estate practice under which only the debtor, not the secured party, need sign such instruments as chattel mortgages and real estate mortgages. Thus, when the security agreement was used as the financing statement, it might have been defective under the 1962 Code for failure to have the signature of the secured party. This change also fits in with the provisions of Section 9-403(6), under which a real estate mortgage (customarily signed only by the debtor) may be effective as a financing statement.

Changes in the form of financing statement in subsection (3) conform to the foregoing and are also intended to have the secured party make clear when a financing statement is intended to be filed in real estate records. This had been a matter of some concern when the parties used the term "fixture" loosely in their description of goods.

Certain of the changes in Section 9-402 are not related to real estate filings. The changes in paragraph (2)(a) conform to Section 9-103(3), which requires refiling when the debtor's location changes. Additions in subsections (2)(d) and (7) relating to the problem of the name of the debtor against which a filing should be made and the effect of transfer are discussed in the related Comments.

§ 9-403. What Constitutes Filing; Duration of Filing; Effect of Lapsed Filing; Duties of Filing Officer.

(1) Presentation for filing of a financing statement and tender of the filing fee or acceptance of the statement by the filing officer constitutes filing under this Article.

(2) Except as provided in subsection (6)a [(2)A] filed financing statement [which states a maturity date of the obligation secured of five years or less is effective until such maturity date and thereafter for a period of sixty days. Any other filed financing statement] is effective for a period of five years from the date of filing. The effectiveness of a filed financing statement lapses [on the expiration of such sixty day period after a stated maturity date or] on the expiration of [such five] the five year period [, as the case may be] unless a continuation statement is filed prior to the lapse. If a security interest perfected by filing exists at the time insolvency proceedings are commenced by or against the debtor, the security interest remains perfected until termination of the insolvency proceedings and thereafter for a period of sixty days or until expiration of the five year period, whichever occurs later. Upon [such] lapse the security interest becomes unperfected, unless it is perfected without filing. If the security interest becomes unperfected upon lapse, it is deemed to have been unperfected as against a person who became a purchaser or lien creditor before lapse. [A filed financing statement which states that the obligation secured is payable on demand is effective for five years from the date of filing.]

(3) A continuation statement may be filed by the secured party [(i) within six months before and sixty days after a stated maturity date of five years or less, and (ii) otherwise] within six months prior to the expiration of the five year period specified in subsection (2). Any such continuation statement must be signed by the secured party, identify the original statement by file number and state that the original statement is still effective.

A continuation statement signed by a person other than the secured party of record must be accompanied by a separate written statement of assignment signed by the secured party of record and complying with subsection (2) of Section 9-405, including payment of the required fee. Upon timely filing of the continuation statement, the effectiveness of the original statement is continued for five years after the last date to which the filing was effective whereupon it lapses in the same manner as provided in subsection (2) unless another continuation statement is filed prior to such lapse. Succeeding continuation statements may be filed in the same manner to continue the effectiveness of the original statement. Unless a statute on disposition of public records provides otherwise, the filing officer may remove a lapsed statement from the files and destroy it[.] immediately if he has retained a microfilm or other photographic record, or in other cases after one year after the lapse. The filing officer shall so arrange matters by physical annexation of financing statements to continuation statements or other related filings, or by other means, that if he physically destroys the financing statements of a period more than five years past, those which have been continued by a continuation statement or which are still effective under subsection (6) shall be retained.

(4) Except as provided in subsection (7) a [(4) A] filing officer shall mark each statement with a [consecutive] file number and with the date and hour of filing and shall hold the statement or a microfilm or other photographic copy thereof for public inspection. In addition the filing officer shall index the statements according to the name of the debtor and shall note in the index the file number and the address of the debtor given in the statement.

[(5) The uniform fee for filing, indexing and furnishing filing data for an original or a continuation statement shall be $_____]

(5) The uniform fee for filing and indexing and for stamping a copy furnished by the secured party to show the date and place of filing for an original financing statement or for a continuation statement shall be $_____ if the statement is in the standard form prescribed by the [[Secretary of State]] and otherwise shall be $_____, plus in each case, if the financing statement is subject to subsection (5) of Section 9-402, $_____. The uniform fee for each name more than one required to be indexed shall be $_____. The secured party may at his option show a trade name for any person and an extra uniform indexing fee of $_____ shall be paid with respect thereto.

(6) If the debtor is a transmitting utility (subsection (5) of Section 9-401) and a filed financing statement so states, it is effective until a termination statement is filed. A real estate mortgage which is effective as a fixture filing under subsection (6) of Section 9-402 remains effective as a fixture filing until the mortgage is released or satisfied of record or its effectiveness otherwise terminates as to the real estate.

(7) When a financing statement covers timber to be cut or covers minerals or the like (including oil and gas) or accounts subject to subsection (5) of Section 9-103, or is filed as a fixture filing, [[it shall be filed for record and]] the filing officer shall index it under the names of the debtor and any owner of record shown on the financing statement in the same fashion as if they were the mortgagors in a mortgage of the real estate described, and, to the extent that the law of this state provides for indexing of mortgages under the name of the mortgagee, under the name of the secured party as if he were the mortgagee thereunder, or where indexing is by description in the same fashion as if the financing statement were a mortgage of the real estate described.

Note: In states in which writings will not appear in the real estate records and indices unless actually recorded the bracketed language in subsection (7) should be used.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The change in subsection (2) makes every financing statement (except those described in subsection (6)), effective for a full five years, thus changing the rule of the 1962 Code that a financing statement which showed a maturity less than 5 years was effective only for the period until maturity plus 60 days. This limitation could have been easily evaded simply by not showing a maturity, even though there was one. The change facilitates renewals or extensions up to a maximum combined duration of five years, without the danger of the financing statement ceasing to be effective.

Subsection (2) also recognizes that financing statements might expire during an insolvency proceeding. While the prevailing line of decisions is to the effect that the situation is frozen at the moment of bankruptcy without an obligation to refile, there are contrary decisions, and this situation might prove an inadvertent trap to a secured party who failed to refile or file a continuation statement during a bankruptcy. The change continues the validity of the financing statement until the end of the insolvency proceedings and for 60 days thereafter, or until the expiration of the five-year period, whichever is later. Ordinarily, if the secured party expects that the secured debt may continue in existence after the end of the insolvency proceedings, he should file a continuation statement on the normal schedule, to preserve the filing for use at the end of the insolvency proceeding and to preclude any discontinuity of the filings.

Subsection (2) also clarifies the effect of lapse, a matter on which there has been some dispute among writers on the subject. Compare also Section 9-103(1)(d).

Subsection (5) is intended to adopt non-uniform amendments made in some states giving the filing officer authority to charge extra fees if the financing statement does not conform to a uniform prescribed size and content. It also permits the secured party to show a trade name at his option and to have it indexed for an extra fee.

New subsection (6) deals with transmitting utilities (Sections 9-105 and 9-401(5)) and also with real estate mortgages which are effective as financing statements under Section 9-402(6). In these special cases a financing statement is good indefinitely and its validity is not limited to five years. The filing in real estate records of a financing statement which is also a real estate mortgage will give notice to persons searching the record as to this continuing validity and will not interfere with the purpose of the Code's standard rule of five-year validity for financing statements. The name of a transmitting utility should give equivalent notice in filings against that kind of company.

The purpose of the standard rule is to permit the files to be self-clearing, so that whether or not termination statements have been filed, the filing officer can clear the files after a suitable period after the five-year validity expires, unless the duration of the financing statement has been continued by a continuation statement.

Various technical changes in this section are designed to facilitate the handling of financing statements by filing officers in reference to the use of microfilm, etc., and to carry out the principle of the self-clearing nature of the files after five years.

New subsection (7) deals with a point in reference to fixtures on which the 1962 Code was properly subject to criticism, namely, that it was not explicitly stated that the fixture filing in the county where a real estate mortgage would be recorded was intended to be made and be indexed in the real estate records. This principle is now stated and is also made applicable to timber to be cut and to minerals and the like (including oil and gas) financed at the wellhead or minehead or accounts resulting from the sale thereof.

The other minor changes coordinate with the addition of subsection (7) to Section 9-402.

§ 9-404. Termination Statement.

(1) If a financing statement covering consumer goods is filed on or after

_____, then within one month or within ten days following written demand by the debtor after there is no outstanding secured obligation and no commitment to make advances, incur obligations or otherwise give value, the secured party must file with each filing officer with whom the financing statement was filed, a termination statement to the effect that he no longer claims a security interest under the financing statement, which shall be identified by file number. In other cases whenever [Whenever] there is no outstanding secured obligation and no commitment to make advances, incur obligations or otherwise give value, the secured party must on written demand by the debtor send the debtor, for each filing officer with whom the financing statement was filed, a termination statement to the effect that he no longer claims a security interest under the financing statement, which shall be identified by file number. A termination statement signed by a person other than the secured party of record must [include or] be accompanied by [the assignment or] a separate written statement of assignment signed by the secured party of record [that he has assigned the security interest to the signer of the termination statement. and] complying with subsection (2) of Section 9-405, including payment of the required fee. [The uniform fee for filing and indexing such an assignment or statement thereof shall be $_____.] If the affected secured party fails to file such a termination statement as required by this subsection, or to send such a termination statement within ten days after proper demand therefor he shall be liable to the debtor for one hundred dollars, and in addition for any loss caused to the debtor by such failure.

(2) On presentation to the filing officer of such a termination statement he must note it in the index. [The filing officer shall remove from the files, mark "terminated" and send or deliver to the secured party the financing statement and any continuation statement, statement of assignment or statement of release pertaining thereto.] If he has received the termination statement in duplicate, he shall return one copy of the termination statement to the secured party stamped to show the time of receipt thereof. If the filing officer has a microfilm or other photographic record of the financing statement, and of any related continuation statement, statement of assignment and statement of release, he may remove the originals from the files at any time after receipt of the termination statement, or if he has no such record, he may remove them from the files at any time after one year after receipt of the termination statement.

(3) If the termination statement is in the standard form prescribed by the [[Secretary of State]], the uniform fee for filing and indexing [a] the termination statement [including sending or delivering the financing statement] shall be $_____, and otherwise shall be $_____, plus in each case an additional fee of $_____ for each name more than one against which the termination statement is required to be indexed.

Note: The date to be inserted should be the effective date of the revised Article 9.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The additions to subsection (1) require the filing of termination statements in the case of consumer goods even without a demand by the consumer. It is believed that consumers will frequently not understand the importance of making demand in order to clear the files. The scope of the change is not as great as might first appear, because (1) filing is not required for purchase money security interests in consumer goods, except in the case of motor vehicles (Section 9-302(1)(d)); and (2) perfection of security interests in most motor vehicles is governed by certificate of title laws, not by the provisions of Article 9.

The other changes are purely formal and tie in with corresponding changes in filing mechanics in other sections.

§ 9-405. Assignment of Security Interest; Duties of Filing Officer; Fees.

(1) A financing statement may disclose an assignment of a security interest in the collateral described in the financing statement by indication in the financing statement of the name and address of the assignee or by an assignment itself or a copy thereof on the face or back of the statement. [Either the original secured party or the assignee may sign this statement as the secured party.] On presentation to the filing officer of such a financing statement the filing officer shall mark the same as provided in Section 9-403(4). The uniform fee for filing, indexing and furnishing filing data for a financing statement so indicating an assignment shall be $_____ if the statement is in the standard form prescribed by the [[Secretary of State]] and otherwise shall be $_____, plus in each case an additional fee of $_____ for each name more than one against which the financing statement is required to be indexed.

(2) A secured party may assign of record all or part of his rights under a financing statement by the filing in the place where the original financing statement was filed of a separate written statement of assignment signed by the secured party of record and setting forth the name of the secured party of record and the debtor, the file number and the date of filing of the financing statement and the name and address of the assignee and containing a description of the collateral assigned. A copy of the assignment is sufficient as a separate statement if it complies with the preceding sentence. On presentation to the filing officer of such a separate statement, the filing officer shall mark such separate statement with the date and hour of the filing. He shall note the assignment on the index of the financing statement, or in the case of a fixture filing, or a filing covering timber to be cut, or covering minerals or the like (including oil and gas) or accounts subject to subsection (5) of Section 9-103, he shall index the assignment under the name of the assignor as grantor and, to the extent that the law of this state provides for indexing the assignment of a mortgage under the name of the assignee, he shall index the assignment of the financing statement under the name of the assignee. The uniform fee for filing, indexing and furnishing filing data about such a separate statement of assignment shall be $_____ if the statement is in the standard form prescribed by the [[Secretary of State]] and otherwise shall be $_____, plus in each case an additional fee of $_____ for each name more than one against which the statement of assignment is required to be indexed. Notwithstanding the provisions of this subsection, an assignment of record of a security interest in a fixture contained in a mortgage effective as a fixture filing (subsection (6) of Section 9-402) may be made only by an assignment of the mortgage in the manner provided by the law of this state other than this Act.

(3) After the disclosure or filing of an assignment under this section, the assignee is the secured party of record.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The changes are all conforming changes connecting with changes in mechanics in other sections of Part 4; with the addition of timber and minerals or the like (including oil and gas) at wellhead or minehead and accounts resulting from the sale thereof to the groups of collateral which must be filed and indexed in the real estate records; and with the provision (Section 9-402(6)) that a mortgage of real estate may act as a financing statement of fixtures.

§ 9-406. Release of Collateral; Duties of Filing Officer; Fees.

A secured party of record may by his signed statement release all or a part of any collateral described in a filed financing statement. The statement of release is sufficient if it contains a description of the collateral being released, the name and address of the debtor, the name and address of the secured party, and the file number of the financing statement. A statement of release signed by a person other than the secured party of record must be accompanied by a separate written statement of assignment signed by the secured party of record and complying with subsection (2) of Section 9-405, including payment of the required fee. Upon presentation of such a statement of release to the filing officer he shall mark the statement with the hour and date of filing and shall note the same upon the margin of the index of the filing of the financing statement. The uniform fee for filing and noting such a statement of release shall be $_____ if the statement is in the standard form prescribed by the [[Secretary of State]] and otherwise shall be $_____, plus in each case an additional fee of $_____ for each name more than one against which the statement of release is required to be indexed.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The changes are merely conforming changes to changes in other sections.

[[§ 9-407. Information From Filing Officer]].

[[(1) If the person filing any financing statement, termination statement, statement of assignment, or statement of release, furnishes the filing officer a copy thereof, the filing officer shall upon request note upon the copy the file number and date and hour of the filing of the original and deliver or send the copy to such person.]]

[[(2) Upon request of any person, the filing officer shall issue his certificate showing whether there is on file on the date and hour stated therein, any presently effective financing statement naming a particular debtor and any statement of assignment thereof and if there is, giving the date and hour of filing of each such statement and the names and addresses of each secured party therein. The uniform fee for such a certificate shall be $_____ [plus $_____ for each financing statement and for each statement of assignment reported therein.] if the request for the certificate is in the standard form prescribed by the [[Secretary of State]] and otherwise shall be $_____ [plus $_____ for each financing statement and for each statement of assignment reported therein.] Upon request the filing officer shall furnish a copy of any filed financing statement or statement of assignment for a uniform fee of $_____ per page.]]

Reasons for 1972 Change

The change in this optional section is merely a conforming change to the changes in other sections.

Note: This section is proposed as an optional provision to require filing officers to furnish certificates. Local law and practices should be consulted with regard to the advisability of adoption.

§ 9-408. Financing Statements Covering Consigned or Leased Goods.

A consignor or lessor of goods may file a financing statement using the terms "consignor," "consignee," "lessor," "lessee" or the like instead of the terms specified in Section 9-402. The provisions of this Part shall apply as appropriate to such a financing statement but its filing shall not of itself be a factor in determining whether or not the consignment or lease is intended as security (Section 1-201(37)). However, if it is determined for other reasons that the consignment or lease is so intended, a security interest of the consignor or lessor which attaches to the consigned or leased goods is perfected by such filing.

Reasons for 1972 Adoption of New Section

This new section adapts the filing system of the Article to consignments and leases. Filing of consignments is required under certain conditions (Sections 2-326(3), 9-114). Filing of true leases which are not security interests (Section 1-201(37)) is not required; but because the question whether a lease is a true lease may be a close one, filing is permitted for leases.

PART 5
DEFAULT

§ 9-501. Default; Procedure When Security Agreement Covers Both Real and Personal Property.

(1) When a debtor is in default under a security agreement, a secured party has the rights and remedies provided in this Part and except as limited by subsection (3) those provided in the security agreement. He may reduce his claim to judgment, foreclose or otherwise enforce the security interest by any available judicial procedure. If the collateral is documents the secured party may proceed either as to the documents or as to the goods covered thereby. A secured party in possession has the rights, remedies and duties provided in Section 9-207. The rights and remedies referred to in this subsection are cumulative.

(2) After default, the debtor has the rights and remedies provided in this Part, those provided in the security agreement and those provided in Section 9-207.

(3) To the extent that they give rights to the debtor and impose duties on the secured party, the rules stated in the subsections referred to below may not be waived or varied except as provided with respect to compulsory disposition of collateral (subsection (3) of Section 9-504 and [(subsection (1) of] Section 9-505) and with respect to redemption of collateral (Section 9-506) but the parties may by agreement determine the standards by which the fulfillment of these rights and duties is to be measured if such standards are not manifestly unreasonable:

(a) subsection (2) of Section 9-502 and subsection (2) of Section 9-504 insofar as they require accounting for surplus proceeds of collateral;

(b) subsection (3) of Section 9-504 and subsection (1) of Section 9-505 which deal with disposition of collateral;

(c) subsection (2) of Section 9-505 which deals with acceptance of collateral as discharge of obligation;

(d) Section 9-506 which deals with redemption of collateral; and

(e) subsection (1) of Section 9-507 which deals with the secured party's liability for failure to comply with this Part.

(4) If the security agreement covers both real and personal property, the secured party may proceed under this Part as to the personal property or he may proceed as to both the real and the personal property in accordance with his rights and remedies in respect of the real property in which case the provisions of this Part do not apply.

(5) When a secured party has reduced his claim to judgment the lien of any levy which may be made upon his collateral by virtue of any execution based upon the judgment shall relate back to the date of the perfection of the security interest in such collateral. A judicial sale, pursuant to such execution, is a foreclosure of the security interest by judicial procedure within the meaning of this section, and the secured party may purchase at the sale and thereafter hold the collateral free of any other requirements of this Article.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The change is purely technical, to clear up an ambiguity as to whether a debtor could after default agree on the time within which a sale might be held or the time after which a secured party might keep the goods in lieu of a sale.

§ 9-502. Collection Rights of Secured Party.

(1) When so agreed and in any event on default the secured party is entitled to notify an account debtor or the obligor on an instrument to make payment to him whether or not the assignor was theretofore making collections on the collateral, and also to take control of any proceeds to which he is entitled under Section 9-306.

(2) A secured party who by agreement is entitled to charge back uncollected collateral or otherwise to full or limited recourse against the debtor and who undertakes to collect from the account debtors or obligors must proceed in a commercially reasonable manner and may deduct his reasonable expenses of realization from the collections. If the security agreement secures an indebtedness, the secured party must account to the debtor for any surplus, and unless otherwise agreed, the debtor is liable for any deficiency. But, if the underlying transaction was a sale of accounts [, contract rights,] or chattel paper, the debtor is entitled to any surplus or is liable for any deficiency only if the security agreement so provides.

Reasons for 1972 Change

The change is only the deletion of the term "contract rights", which is being eliminated as a defined term under the Article.

§ 9-504. Secured Party's Right to Dispose of Collateral After Default; Effect of Disposition.

(1) A secured party after default may sell, lease or otherwise dispose of any or all of the collateral in its then condition or following any commercially reasonable preparation or processing. Any sale of goods is subject to the Article on Sales (Article 2). The proceeds of disposition shall be applied in the order following to

(a) the reasonable expenses of retaking, holding, preparing for sale or lease, selling, leasing and the like and, to the extent provided for in the agreement and not prohibited by law, the reasonable attorneys' fees and legal expenses incurred by the secured party;

(b) the satisfaction of indebtedness secured by the security interest under which the disposition is made;

(c) the satisfaction of indebtedness secured by any subordinate security interest in the collateral if written notification of demand therefor is received before distribution of the proceeds is completed. If requested by the secured party, the holder of a subordinate security interest must seasonably furnish reasonable proof of his interest, and unless he does so, the secured party need not comply with his demand.

(2) If the security interest secures an indebtedness, the secured party must account to the debtor for any surplus, and, unless otherwise agreed, the debtor is liable for any deficiency. But if the underlying transaction was a sale of accounts [, contract rights,] or chattel paper, the debtor is entitled to any surplus or is liable for any deficiency only if the security agreement so provides.

(3) Disposition of the collateral may be by public or private proceedings and may be made by way of one or more contracts. Sale or other disposition may be as a unit or in parcels and at any time and place and on any terms but every aspect of the disposition including the method, manner, time, place and terms must be commercially reasonable. Unless collateral is perishable or threatens to decline speedily in value or is of a type customarily sold on a recognized market, reasonable notification of the time and place of any public sale or reasonable notification of the time after which any private sale or other intended disposition is to be made shall be sent by the secured party to the debtor, if he has not signed after default a statement renouncing or modifying his right to notification of sale. In the case of consumer goods no other notification need be sent. In other cases notification shall be sent to any other secured party from whom the secured party has received (before sending his notification to the debtor or before the debtor's renunciation of his rights) written notice of a claim of an interest in the collateral [and except in the case of consumer goods to any other person who has a security interest in the collateral and who has duly filed a financing statement indexed in the name of the debtor in this state or who is known by the secured party to have a security interest in the collateral]. The secured party may buy at any public sale and if the collateral is of a type customarily sold in a recognized market or is of a type which is the subject of widely distributed standard price quotations he may buy at private sale.

(4) When collateral is disposed of by a secured party after default, the disposition transfers to a purchaser for value all of the debtor's rights therein, discharges the security interest under which it is made and any security interest or lien subordinate thereto. The purchaser takes free of all such rights and interests even though the secured party fails to comply with the requirements of this Part or of any judicial proceedings

(a) in the case of a public sale, if the purchaser has no knowledge of any defects in the sale and if he does not buy in collusion with the secured party, other bidders or the person conducting the sale; or

(b) in any other case, if the purchaser acts in good faith.

(5) A person who is liable to a secured party under a guaranty, indorsement, repurchase agreement or the like and who receives a transfer of collateral from the secured party or is subrogated to his rights has thereafter the rights and duties of the secured party. Such a transfer of collateral is not a sale or disposition of the collateral under this Article.

Reasons for 1972 Change

Under the 1962 Code the secured party giving notice of sale had to notify (except in the case of consumer goods) not only every other person who had duly filed a financing statement indexed in the name of the debtor in the state and who still had a security interest in the collateral, but also any other person known by the secured party to have an interest in the collateral. This meant that the secured party had to search the records in every case of notice of sale, to ascertain whether there were any other secured parties with financing statements that might be deemed to cover the collateral in question. Moreover, he ran the risk that some informal communication by letter, or even orally, might be deemed to have given him knowledge of the interest of that other party. These burdens of searching the record and of checking the secured party's files were greater than the circumstances called for because as a practical matter there would seldom be a junior secured party who really had an interest needing protection in the case of a foreclosure sale. Therefore, a change is made requiring notice to persons other than the debtor only if such persons had notified the secured party in writing of their claim of an interest in the collateral before he sent his notification to the debtor or before the debtor's renunciation of his rights. Express provision is made to recognize the right of a debtor to renounce or modify his right to notice after, but not before, default. A corresponding change is made in Section 9-505.

§ 9-505. Compulsory Disposition of Collateral; Acceptance of the Collateral as Discharge of Obligation.

(1) If the debtor has paid sixty per cent of the cash price in the case of a purchase money security interest in consumer goods or sixty per cent of the loan in the case of another security interest in consumer goods, and has not signed after default a statement renouncing or modifying his rights under this Part a secured party who has taken possession of collateral must dispose of it under Section 9-504 and if he fails to do so within ninety days after he takes possession the debtor at his option may recover in conversion or under Section 9-507(1) on secured party's liability.

(2) In any other case involving consumer goods or any other collateral a secured party in possession may, after default, propose to retain the collateral in satisfaction of the obligation. Written notice of such proposal shall be sent to the debtor [and except in the case of consumer goods to any other secured party who has a security interest in the collateral and who has duly filed a financing statement indexed in the name of the debtor in this state or is known by the secured party in possession to have a security interest in it. If the debtor or other person entitled to receive notification objects in writing within thirty days from the receipt of the notification or if any other secured party objects in writing thirty days after the secured party obtains possession the secured party must dispose of the collateral under Section 9-504.] if he has not signed after default a statement renouncing or modifying his rights under this subsection. In the case of consumer goods no other notice need be given. In other cases notice shall be sent to any other secured party from whom the secured party has received (before sending his notice to the debtor or before the debtor's renunciation of his rights) written notice of a claim of an interest in the collateral. If the secured party receives objection in writing from a person entitled to receive notification within twenty-one days after the notice was sent, the secured party must dispose of the collateral under Section 9-504. In the absence of such written objection the secured party may retain the collateral in satisfaction of the debtor's obligation.

Reasons for 1972 Change

Under subsection (2) of this section the secured party may in lieu of sale give notice to the debtor and certain other persons that he proposes to retain the collateral in lieu of sale. Under the 1962 Code the other persons were the same as those who were entitled to notice of sale under Section 9-504(3), and such other persons are limited by the change in the same fashion as they were limited in Section 9-504(3) and for the same reasons. See the Reasons for Change under Section 9-504.

ARTICLE 11

EFFECTIVE DATE AND TRANSITION PROVISIONS

Notes: This material has been numbered Article 11 to distinguish it from Article 10, the transition provision of the 1962 Code, which may still remain in effect in some states to cover transition problems from pre-Code law to the original Uniform Commercial Code. Adaptation may be necessary in particular states. The terms "[old Code]" and "[new Code]" and "[old U.C.C.]" and "[new U.C.C.]" are used herein, and should be suitably changed in each state.

This draft was prepared by the Reporters and has not been passed upon by the Review Committee, the Permanent Editorial Board, the American Law Institute, or the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. It is submitted as a working draft which may be adapted as appropriate in each state. The "Discussions" were written by the Reporters to assist in understanding the purpose of the drafts.

This Act shall become effective at 12:01 A.M. on _____, 19____.

Discussion

An effective date substantially after enactment is advisable to allow ample time for refilings as required.

§ 11-102. Preservation of Old Transition Provision.

The provisions of [here insert reference to the original transition provision in the particular state] shall continue to apply to [the new U.C.C.] and for this purpose the [old U.C.C. and new U.C.C.] shall be considered one continuous statute.

Discussion

This section may be necessary in states in which the U.C.C. has only recently been effective. It preserves the principle of Section 10-102(2) of the 1962 Code that pre-Code transactions continue to be governed by pre-Code law. A different principle is set forth in this Article 11 for transition problems between the [old Code] and the [new Code], because the changes are not nearly as great. That principle is that the [new Code] governs (with minor exceptions).

§ 11-103. Transition to [New Code]—General Rule.

Transactions validly entered into after [effective date of old U.C.C.] and before [effective date of new U.C.C.], and which were subject to the provisions of [old U.C.C.] and which would be subject to this Act as amended if they had been entered into after the effective date of [new U.C.C.] and the rights, duties and interests flowing from such transactions remain valid after the latter date and may be terminated, completed, consummated or enforced as required or permitted by the [new U.C.C.]. Security interests arising out of such transactions which are perfected when [new U.C.C.] becomes effective shall remain perfected until they lapse as provided in [new U.C.C.], and may be continued as permitted by [new U.C.C.], except as stated in Section 11-105.

Discussion

This makes the [new Code] applicable to existing security interests, e.g., the revised notice provisions of Part 5 will apply to existing security interests. This would be so even if a 30-day notice period concerning retention of the collateral in lieu of sale were running on the effective date of the [new Code].

Suppose that a security interest attached in State A and the secured party filed in State B and assumed that he had 30 days to have the goods reach State B, in a non-purchase money case, under Section 9-103(3) of the [old Code]. Section 9-103(1)(c) of the [new Code] limits the 30-day provision on intended removals to purchase money cases. So long as an ample period of waiting and familiarization is allowed under Section 11-101, this should cause no practical problem.

The "except" clause at the end is necessary because of the possibility that new financing statements would have to be filed in different offices.

§ 11-104. Transition Provision on Change of Requirement of Filing.

A security interest for the perfection of which filing or the taking of possession was required under [old U.C.C.] and which attached prior to the effective date of [new U.C.C.] but was not perfected shall be deemed perfected on the effective date of [new U.C.C.] if [new U.C.C.] permits perfection without filing or authorizes filing in the office or offices where a prior ineffective filing was made.

Discussion

This covers the case of a purchase money security interest in consumer goods, which would not have had to be filed under the original Code if the goods had not been fixtures. Under the [new Code] the security interest will be perfected without filing, subject to the rights of real estate parties. Section 9-301(1)(d).

This also covers the case of factory or office machinery or replacement consumer goods appliances where the filing of a financing statement under the original Code in the regular chattel files was invalid because the goods were fixtures, but under the [new Code] that filing would be proper.

Under the [old Code] the status of assignments of revenues and similar collateral for governmental obligations was unclear. Section 9-104(e) of the [new Code] will make clear that Article 9 does not apply to these transfers. Section 11-108 of this draft may apply on the theory that the changes made by the [new Code] are considered to be merely declaratory. If this does not dispose of the matter, and if it might sometime be held that an assignment by a municipality had been ineffective for lack of filing, this provision would then apply from the effective date of the [new Code].

§ 11-105. Transition Provision on Change of Place of Filing.

(1) A financing statement or continuation statement filed prior to [effective date of new U.C.C.] which shall not have lapsed prior to [the effective date of new U.C.C.] shall remain effective for the period provided in the [old Code], but not less than five years after the filing.

(2) With respect to any collateral acquired by the debtor subsequent to the effective date of [new U.C.C.], any effective financing statement or continuation statement described in this section shall apply only if the filing or filings are in the office or offices that would be appropriate to perfect the security interests in the new collateral under [new U.C.C.].

(3) The effectiveness of any financing statement or continuation statement filed prior to [effective date of new U.C.C.] may be continued by a continuation statement as permitted by [new U.C.C.], except that if [new U.C.C.] requires a filing in an office where there was no previous financing statement, a new financing statement conforming to Section 11-106 shall be filed in that office.

(4) If the record of a mortgage of real estate would have been effective as a fixture filing of goods described therein if [new U.C.C.] had been in effect on the date of recording the mortgage, the mortgage shall be deemed effective as a fixture filing as to such goods under subsection (6) of Section 9-402 of the [new U.C.C.] on the effective date of [new U.C.C.].

Discussion

Subsection (1): All existing financing statements with a duration of less than 5 years are extended to the full 5 years. In the case of transmitting utilities for which a special rule of longer validity had been provided, the special rule will be continued.

Subsection (2) makes clear that all existing financing statements and continuations on the effective date remain valid for the remainder of the five years as to existing collateral, even though the appropriate place for filing may have changed under the new rules for accounts, general intangibles, etc. The existing filings also apply to new collateral acquired after the effective date, unless the appropriate filing place is different under the new rules. In that case there will have to be a new filing on the effective date to catch new collateral.

Subsection (3): A continuation statement may be filed after the effective date, but if the appropriate places under the new rules are different, the filing should be a financing statement.

Subsection (4) retroactively validates real estate mortgage recording as fixture filing.

(1) If a security interest is perfected or has priority when this Act takes effect as to all persons or as to certain persons without any filing or recording, and if the filing of a financing statement would be required for the perfection or priority of the security interest against those persons under [new U.C.C.], the perfection and priority rights of the security interest continue until 3 years after the effective date of [new U.C.C.]. The perfection will then lapse unless a financing statement is filed as provided in subsection (4) or unless the security interest is perfected otherwise than by filing.

(2) If a security interest is perfected when [new U.C.C.] takes effect under a law other than [U.C.C.] which requires no further filing, refiling or recording to continue its perfection, perfection continues until and will lapse 3 years after [new U.C.C.] takes effect, unless a financing statement is filed as provided in subsection (4) or unless the security interest is perfected otherwise than by filing, or unless under subsection (3) of Section 9-302 the other law continues to govern filing.

(3) If a security interest is perfected by a filing, refiling or recording under a law repealed by this Act which required further filing, refiling or recording to continue its perfection, perfection continues and will lapse on the date provided by the law so repealed for such further filing, refiling or recording unless a financing statement is filed as provided in subsection (4) or unless the security interest is perfected otherwise than by filing.

(4) A financing statement may be filed within six months before the perfection of a security interest would otherwise lapse. Any such financing statement may be signed by either the debtor or the secured party. It must identify the security agreement, statement or notice (however denominated in any statute or other law repealed or modified by this Act), state the office where and the date when the last filing, refiling or recording, if any, was made with respect thereto, and the filing number, if any, or book and page, if any, of recording and further state that the security agreement, statement or notice, however denominated, in another filing office under the [U.C.C.] or under any statute or other law repealed or modified by this Act is still effective. Section 9-401 and Section 9-103 determine the proper place to file such a financing statement. Except as specified in this subsection, the provisions of Section 9-403(3) for continuation statements apply to such a financing statement.

Discussion

Subsection (1) covers farm equipment perfected without filing. The three-year period ought to cover most existing transactions. It also applies to equipment trusts, and would appear to allow three years for filing. But generally filing under Article 9 for equipment trusts is excluded by Section 9-302(3), and the old pre-amendment filing under the Interstate Commerce Act will continue to serve the purpose.

Subsection (2) covers transmitting utility statutes and the like which were outside the Code, and provided for indefinite duration. It allows three years for refiling. But perfection under a certificate of title law or the like continues to be effective.

Some states dealt with transmitting utilities by internal amendment of the Code to permit filing which was good indefinitely. Section 11-105(1) operates to validate those filings indefinitely even though they may not have been in the Secretary of State's office.

Similarly, Section 11-105(1) would preserve the effect of Ohio's present Section 9-403(2), which in effect makes financing statements related to combined real estate and chattel mortgages good for the duration of the real estate mortgage, whether or not the chattels are fixtures.

Subsection (3) covers the case (if any) where a prior transmitting utility provision outside the Code had a filing of limited duration.

Subsection (4) covers a case where an ordinary continuation statement cannot be filed because the original filing was a non-Code filing or was a Code filing in a different filing office. It was thought advisable to use the concept of financing statement rather than the concept of continuation statement for these fact situations.

§ 11-107. Transition Provisions as to Priorities.

Except as otherwise provided in [Article 11], [old U.C.C.] shall apply to any questions of priority if the positions of the parties were fixed prior to the effective date of [new U.C.C.]. In other cases questions of priority shall be determined by [new U.C.C.].

Discussion

Most questions of priority can be broken down to questions between two parties, and the rule is that the [new Code] applies unless the rights of both parties were fixed under the [old Code].

If a creditor acquires knowledge of an unfiled security interest before the effective date of the [new Code], but gets his judgment after the effective date, the rule of the [new Code] governs, since he has no rights until after judgment and levy.

§ 11-108. Presumption that Rule of Law Continues Unchanged.

Unless a change in law has clearly been made, the provisions of [new U.C.C.] shall be deemed declaratory of the meaning of the [old U.C.C.].

Discussion

This asserts that the new Code is declaratory, except where a change is clearly intended. This is an effort to minimize transitional problems.

APPENDIX C

1977 Official Text Showing Changes Made in former Text of Article 8, Investment Securities, and of Related Sections and Reasons for Changes

Reporter's Introductory Comment

This proposed revision of Article 8 of the Uniform Commercial Code is an outgrowth of the work of the Committee on Stock Certificates of the Section of Corporation, Banking and Business Law of the American Bar Association. That committee, formed in 1971 in response to the "Paperwork Crunch" in the securities markets during the late 1960's, was charged with determining what legislation, if any, would be advisable to facilitate the elimination, or reduction in the use, of stock certificates and with drafting such legislation as was proposed. The committee's report, issued on September 15, 1975, contained two principal recommendations: 1) that the Model Business Corporation Act be amended in order to permit the issuance of corporate stock in uncertificated form and 2) that Article 8 of the Uniform Commercial Code (and related sections of other Articles) be revised to provide rules to regulate the rights, duties and obligations of the issuers of, and persons dealing with, uncertificated investment securities. Appendix B of the report was a suggested revision of Article 8.

The suggested revision of Article 8 was submitted by the committee to the Permanent Editorial Board for the Uniform Commercial Code which, in turn, referred it to its 348 Committee for review and comment. The revision, with changes suggested by the 348 Committee, was subsequently reviewed by the Permanent Editorial Board and further drafts were presented before the 1976 meeting of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, the Council of the American Law Institute and the 1977 Annual Meeting of the American Law Institute. At its 1977 meeting, the NCCUSL approved the substance of the revision and referred it to its Committee on Style. That committee made a number of stylistic changes in wording, punctuation and the like, and its product is presented herewith.

In this introductory comment, section references are to the revised Article unless preceded by the word "present". Detailed "Reasons for 1977 Change" follow almost every section of the revision, but the pattern is summarized in this introductory comment in the hope that it will be helpful to an understanding of the general scheme of the revision.

Scope

Perhaps the best approach to describing the scope of the revision is first to state what it does not do. The revision does not compel the issuance of uncertificated securities by any issuer. Furthermore, the revision does not authorize the issuance of uncertificated securities, a function of the state corporation laws. What the revision is intended to accomplish is to set forth a coherent group of rules for the issuers, buyers, sellers and other persons dealing with uncertificated securities, to the same extent that present Article 8 deals with these matters with respect to certificated securities. Although the primary focus of inquiry regarding the possible elimination of certificates has been on corporate stock, the revision is broad enough to cover uncertificated debt securities, should such be issued in the future. It might be noted that the most significant uncertificated system now in operation is that conducted by the Federal Reserve Banks for United States Government Bonds. It is possible, and, indeed, probable, that particular issues of securities may, temporarily or even permanently, be partly certificated and partly uncertificated. If such be the case, the choice of form will lie with the owner and provisions are made for exchangeability at the owner's option [8-407].

The present definition of "security" [present 8-102(1)(a)] is restated, in somewhat changed form but without intended change of substance, as the definition of "certificated security" [8-102(1)(a)]. A parallel definition of "uncertificated security" is then provided, differing in that it does not require representation by an instrument and somewhat narrower in scope to eliminate the inclusion of some interests, e.g., bank accounts, that a broad construction might otherwise include [8-102(1)(b)]. It is not intended that either definition coincide with the definition of "security" for other purposes, e.g., the federal securities laws. See Comment 3 to Section 8-102.

Approach

There has been a conscious attempt to disturb present Article 8 as little as possible. First, the subject-matter content and order of the forty-one numbered sections of the present statute have been preserved. Only four sections have been added. Three of these have no application to wholly certificated systems [8-108, 8-407 & 8-408].

Secondly, with the exception of only two present sections [8-313 & 8-317] and the other new section [8-321], there has been no attempt to change the law with respect to certificated securities. In some instances, where there seemed to be compelling reasons to do so, certain wording and structure have been changed, but without any intention to change the substance. In most instances, the language of the present Article, as it applies to certificated securities, has been preserved with minor stylistic changes.

Finally, the rules governing uncertificated securities have been formulated to conform as closely as possible to the rules for certificated securities, consistent, of course, with such changes as are demanded by the absence of an indispensable instrument. For example, the rights of secured parties [8-207], the "appropriate person" to initiate requests for registration of transfer [8-308] and the assurances an issuer may require as a condition to complying with such requests [8-402] have been structured in a way to produce a minimum of disparity of results and procedures whether certificated or uncertificated securities are involved.

Transfer

The essential difference between a certificated and an uncertificated security, and that from which the principal difficulties arise, is that the former is represented by an instrument, which may be treated as the property it represents, and the latter is not. Under present Article 8, transfer of a certificated security by purchase, a term which includes all voluntary transfers whether or not for value [present 1-201(32)], is accomplished by delivery of the certificated security to the purchaser [present 8-301(1)] or by some other method deemed to constitute delivery to the purchaser [present 8-313(1)]. Obviously, when a security is uncertificated, there is no instrument to deliver.

In the revised Article, the transfer rules are collected in a single subsection [8-313(1)] and are expressly made exclusive. The basic rule for certificated securities, transfer by delivery, is restated [8-313(1)(a)] and a coordinate rule for uncertificated securities, transfer by registration, is added [8-313(1)(b)]. The present rule, that delivery to the purchaser's broker of a certificated security issued in the name of or specially indorsed to the purchaser constitutes transfer to the purchaser, is preserved [8-313(1)(c)], but is expanded to cover such delivery not only to the purchaser's broker but to any financial intermediary acting for the purchaser. A "financial intermediary" is defined to include (in addition to brokers) banks, clearing corporations and other entities which regularly maintain security accounts for their customers [8-313(4)].

The remaining subparagraphs recognize current security-holding practices and provide explicitly for the transfer of ownership of both certificated and uncertificated securities controlled by third parties. Thus, when the controlling party is a clearing corporation [8-102(3)], transfer is effected merely by book entry [8-313(1)(g)]. When the controlling party is a financial intermediary, but not a clearing corporation, transfer is effected by confirmation to the purchaser accompanied by book entry [8-313(1)(d)]. When the controlling party is not a financial intermediary, transfer is effected by acknowledgment to the purchaser [8-313(1)(e) & (f)]. Three provisions apply only to the creation and release of security interests [8-313(1)(h), (i) & (j)].

Registration of Transfer

Registration of transfer of a certificated security is requested by presenting the security itself, duly indorsed, to the issuer [8-401(1)]. With uncertificated securities that procedure is unavailable, and the request for registration of transfer is made by an "instruction" [8-308(4)] which normally will be a signed writing [8-308(5)(a)] but which may, under the terms of a written agreement, be in other than written form [8-308(5)(b)]. To be effective, an instruction must be originated by an "appropriate person" who, for an unencumbered security, is the registered owner or his representative [8-308(7)(a) & (8)].

Upon receipt of an instruction, the issuer is under a duty to effect a duly requested registration [8-401(1)], liable for delay or failure to comply [8-401(2)], entitled to certain assurances [8-402], and liable for improper registration [8-404(3)] in much the same manner applicable to requests for registration of transfer of a certificated security.

Within two business days after registration of transfer of an uncertificated security, the issuer must send a written statement confirming the registration to both the transferor [8-408(5)] and the transferee [8-408(1)

]. The statement sent to the transferor will alert him to take appropriate action if the transfer was unauthorized or otherwise improper. The statement sent to the transferee will assure him that the transfer has been properly registered and will also serve as notice to him of any liens [8-103(b)], restrictions [8-204(b)] or claims [8-304(2)] to which the uncertificated security may be subject. Unless a transferee for value is relying on a third party, e.g., his broker, it is anticipated that he may withhold his consideration, in escrow or otherwise, until he receives an appropriate statement from the issuer.

Creation of Security Interests

A security interest in a certificated security is normally created by delivery (pledge) of the security, duly indorsed, to the secured party (pledgee). The physical procedure is indistinguishable from an outright transfer. The pledgee may elect to leave the security registered in the name of the debtor or to cause the registration of transfer to himself or his nominee.

A security interest in an uncertificated security may be created by registration of transfer to the secured party, a procedure which involves no concepts distinct from those involved in any outright transfer of an uncertificated security. The secured party will be in essentially the same position as the pledgee of a certificated security who obtains registration of transfer to himself.

This revision provides an additional method for evidencing a security interest in an uncertificated security—registration of pledge [8-108]. This is intended to create a situation analogous to that when the pledgee of a certificated security leaves the security registered in the debtor's name. Registration of pledge is effected by submission of an instruction [8-308(4)] to the issuer, originated by the registered owner or his representative [8-308(7)(a) & (8)]. The procedure for registration follows that established for registration of transfer. The issuer is obligated to send confirmatory statements to the pledgee and owner immediately following registration [8-408(2)] and the pledgee, like the buyer, may choose to await receipt of the statement before advancing the loan.

Once a pledge has been registered, the registered owner continues to enjoy all the rights of an owner (dividends, voting rights, notices, etc.) [8-207(2)] except one—the power to order transfer. That power passes exclusively to the registered pledgee [8-207(3)] and only the pledgee or his representative is an appropriate person to originate a transfer instruction [8-308(7)(b) & (8)]. This is substantially the situation that exists when a certificated security is pledged. The still registered owner is recognized as such by the issuer [8-207(1)], but the pledgee's possession of the duly indorsed certificate achieves the dual purpose of depriving the debtor of his power to transfer and conferring that power on the pledgee. The registered pledgee of an uncertificated security may exercise his transfer power in three ways: by outright transfer free of his pledge [8-207(4)(a)]; by transfer of ownership subject to his pledge [8-207(4)(b)]; or by transfer of his security interest to another secured party [8-207(4)(c)].

There is one area of disparity between the pledge of a certificated security and the registered pledge of an uncertificated security. When a certificated security is held by a pledgee without registration of transfer, additional securities distributed with respect to the pledged security, e.g., stock dividends, will necessarily be delivered to the registered owner, since the issuer is unaware of the pledgee's interest. When an uncertificated security is subject to a registered pledge, such additional securities will, if uncertificated, be registered subject to the pledge [8-207(6)(a)] or, if certificated, will be delivered to the pledgee [8-207(6)(b)]. This appears to be a desirable result which is impractical to obtain under the pledge of a certificated security. Similarly, securities issued or money paid in exchange for an uncertificated security will be subject to the pledgee's control [8-207(6)].

Under the revised Article, the transfer rules are exclusive and expressly include the transfer of security interests [8-313(1)]. Thus, the creation of security interests is conditioned upon the use of an effective means of transfer [8-321(1)]. The transfer rules include the physical delivery of a certificated security [8-313(1)(a)] and the registration of either pledge or transfer of an uncertificated security [8-313(1)(b)]. They also include provisions when securities are controlled by third parties. When the controlling party is a clearing corporation [8-102(3)], transfer is effected by book entry [8-313(1)(g)]. When the controlling party is a financial intermediary [8-313(4)], but not a clearing corporation, transfer is effected by confirmation to the secured party accompanied by a book entry [8-313(1)(d)]. When the controlling party is not a financial intermediary, e.g., a prior pledgee, transfer is effected by acknowledgment to the secured party [8-313(1)(e) & (f)]. Security interests created by any of these methods are enforceable even without a written agreement signed by the debtor [8-321(2)] since they involve either possession by the secured party or the functional equivalent thereof.

In addition, three methods of transfer, applicable only to the creation of security interests, are provided [8-313(1)(h), (i) & (j)]. These methods do require a written security agreement signed by the debtor and are included to permit the continuation of practices which result in perfected nonpossessory security interests under present Article 9 [present 9-304(4) & 9-305] and to document the creation of a security interest in securities already held in the debtor's account by a financial intermediary.

Perfection of Security Interests

The security interest of the pledgee of a certificated security is both created [present 9-203(1)(a)] and perfected [present 9-304(1)] by the secured party's possession. Possessory security interests are expressly exempted from the normal filing requirements of Article 9 [9-302(1)(a)]. A nonpossessory security interest may be perfected by notice to a bailee [present 9-305] or, under certain conditions and for temporary periods, automatically [present 9-304(4) & (5)].

Under the revised Article, a security interest which is effectively created is also perfected [8-321(2)]. If the security interest is created under the provision which corresponds to the present provision of Article 9 for temporary automatic perfection [8-313(1)(i)], perfection expires at the end of the 21 day period unless other steps are timely taken [8-321(2)]. Security interests in securities are expressly excluded from the perfection provisions of Article 9 [9-302(1)(f), 9-304(1) & (4) and 9-305].

Termination of Security Interests

The security interest of a pledgee of a certificated security is normally released by redelivery of the security to the debtor. Similarly, the security interest in an uncertificated security created by registration of transfer to the secured party is released by registration of transfer back to the debtor. A security interest in an uncertificated security created by registration of pledge is released by registration of release [8-108]. Registration of release is effected by submission of an instruction [8-308(4)] to the issuer, originated by the registered pledgee or his representative [8-308(7)(b) & (8)]. The procedure for registration follows that established for registration of transfer or pledge. The issuer is obligated to send confirmatory statements to the pledgee and the owner immediately following registration [8-408(3)] and the owner may choose to make arrangements to withhold his repayment until he has received an appropriate statement.

A security interest in securities controlled by a third party would normally be terminated by a transfer back to the debtor under the same method employed for its creation [8-313(1)(d), (e), (f), (g) or (h)]. Unless the parties otherwise agree, any such transfer will terminate the security interest. Provision is made for temporary continuation of perfection in the case where a certificated security is redelivered to the debtor for limited purposes [8-321(4)], analogous to similar provisions in Article 9 [present 9-304(5)].

The Initial Transaction Statement

When a security is certificated, the security itself, if genuine, is prima facie evidence of the holder's rights [8-105(3)(c)]. When a security is uncertificated, a similar, but distinctly more limited, function is served by the initial transaction statement (hereinafter "ITS"). The ITS is a signed statement sent by the issuer of an uncertificated security upon registration of transfer, pledge or release to the transferee, pledgee or owner, respectively [8-408(4)]. Like certificated securities, an ITS acts as an estoppel statement against the issuer. But unlike certificated securities, an ITS runs in favor of only the addressee and speaks only as of the time of its issuance [8-105(3)(d)]. Consequently, parties other than the addressee, particularly subsequent purchasers, cannot justifiably rely on what an ITS does or does not contain. The statute requires a warning legend to that effect [8-408(9)].

The purchaser of an uncertificated security is charged with notice of the issuer's right to a lien [8-103(b)], terms of a security [8-202(1)], restrictions on transfer [8-204(b)] and adverse claims [8-304(2)] which appear or are referred to in the ITS sent to him. Conversely, the purchaser for value without notice who receives an ITS which does not refer to defects or defenses is normally entitled to assume that none exists. Furthermore, the purchaser for value without notice who receives an ITS is generally entitled to assume that the uncertificated security referred to therein is valid [8-202(2)(a)], that, in many cases, it has been properly signed, even when it has not [8-205], that it has been properly completed, even when it has not [8-206(3)(b)] and receives the benefit of certain warranties of third party signatories [8-208(1)]. Finally, the purchaser for value without notice who receives an ITS enjoys a limitation in the warranties he has made in connection with the presentation of a certificated security to the issuer [8-306(1)] and is shielded from liability to a former owner or pledgee [8-311(a)]. In these respects, the ITS serves substantially the same function for the addressee as does a certificated security.

Under the shelter principle, the purchaser of a security acquires the rights of his transferor [8-301(1)]. If A had purchased an uncertificated security without knowledge of a restriction to which it was subject and had received an ITS which failed to note the restriction, he would take free of the restriction [8-204(b)]. Any purchaser from A would acquire the security free of the restriction and could, relying on A's rights, demand a clean ITS from the issuer. If, however, A had knowledge of the restriction when he purchased, A would be subject to the restriction even if, by error, the ITS sent to him had failed to note its existence. In that event, notwithstanding A's clean ITS, the rights of a purchaser from A would rise no higher than A's, and the purchaser would take subject to the restriction. The purchaser would take free of the restriction only if he purchased without knowledge and if the ITS sent to him failed to note the restriction. In contrast, if A had purchased a certificated security with knowledge of a restriction not noted thereon, a purchaser from A without knowledge would take free of the restriction [8-204(a)] even though A could not have.

There is a much more significant difference. A purchaser may normally assume that the holder (registered owner, indorsee or bearer) of a certificated security is the owner and entitled to transfer it. An ITS, however, merely evidences the facts at the time of its issuance [8-105(3)(d)]. The fact that A exhibits an ITS showing that A had become the owner of an uncertificated security at some prior date gives a potential purchaser absolutely no assurance that A has any rights in that security now. Since the time of the ITS's issuance, A might have pledged, otherwise encumbered or transferred the security. While, in some cases, the purchaser may be willing to rely on A's representations or on those of a third-party guarantor, he cannot justifiably rely on any rights against the issuer until he receives his own ITS.

Rights and Obligations of Buyers and Sellers

All securities of the same issue, both certificated and uncertificated, are treated as fungible. Thus, when an issue of securities is comprised of both certificated and uncertificated securities, a person obligated to transfer securities of that issue may perform either by delivering duly registered or indorsed certificated securities to his obligee or by causing the registration of transfer of equivalent uncertificated securities to his obligee [8-107(1)]. Similarly, the buyer of securities becomes obligated to pay the price whether the securities transferred to him are certificated or uncertificated [8-107(2)].

In an exchange or brokerage transaction, the selling customer may complete his obligation by delivering certificated securities to his broker

[8-314(1)(a)(i)], by causing the registration of transfer of uncertificated securities to his broker [8-314(1)(a)(ii)] or, if requested, by causing a third party to acknowledge that he holds a security for the broker [8-314(1)(a)(iii)]. In addition, the selling customer can conditionally fulfill his obligation by delivering to his broker a transfer instruction for an uncertificated security, but his obligation is not completed if the instruction is presented to the issuer within thirty days and the issuer refuses to register the requested transfer [8-314(1)(a)(iv)]. This final alternative is also available to the selling broker in fulfilling his obligation to the buying broker, with the same condition attaching [8-314(1)(b)(iii)]. In a transaction not on an exchange or through brokers, the transferor's duty is not fulfilled, even conditionally, by the delivery of an instruction [8-314(2)].

If the issuer of an uncertificated security demands proof of authority or other evidence which is necessary to obtain registration of transfer, pledge or release of the security, the transferor, pledgor or pledgee, as the case may be, is obligated to provide such evidence, but, if the transfer, pledge or release is not for value, only if he is reimbursed for any expense involved [8-316].

The performance exception to the statute of frauds includes, in addition to the acceptance of delivery of a certificated security, the acceptance of a transfer instruction and the situation where the transfer of an uncertificated security has been registered to the alleged buyer and the alleged buyer does not object in writing to the issuer within ten days after receiving the statement confirming the registration of transfer [8-319(b)].

Warranties

The person who requests an issuer to register the transfer of a certificated security, by presenting a duly indorsed certificated security, warrants to the issuer that he has the power to do so, or, in effect, that the chain of indorsements is genuine and complete [8-306(1)]. In making that warranty, the presenter, who, in the typical case, is, or acts for, the transferee, has before him, as evidence, the security, the indorsements and signature guarantees. On the other hand, the person who requests an issuer to register the transfer (or pledge or release) of an uncertificated security does so by presenting an instruction, which is not even presumptive evidence that the originator is the registered owner or pledgee of the security involved. Hence, the presenter, as such, warrants nothing to the issuer. Rather, the originator of the instruction, who is responsible for its creation, warrants to the issuer that he will be, at the time of presentation, an appropriate person to originate the instruction and entitled to the requested registration—facts which he, and perhaps no one else, knows [8-306(5)].

The transferor of a certificated security warrants to a purchaser for value the effectiveness and rightfulness of the transfer and the genuineness of the security [8-306(2)]. In effect, he undertakes that the issuer will recognize the purchaser as the owner of the intangible interest represented by the security free from any defects not noted thereon. The warranties made by the originator of an instruction to a purchaser for value are intended to produce substantially the same obligation and include, therefore, a warranty of absence of defects—a fact which the purchaser of a certificated security can himself ascertain from the security itself [8-306(7)] but of which the purchaser of an uncertificated security cannot have knowledge until he receives his initial transaction statement from the issuer.

The warranties made by secured parties who originate instructions with respect to uncertificated securities are limited [8-306(8)] consistent with similar limitations of the warranties of secured parties who deliver certificated securities they hold in pledge [8-306(4)].

Guarantees

The signature guarantee, which is an essential element of the transfer process for widely-held securities, presents a special problem. The signature guarantor of the indorsement of a certificated security warrants that the indorser is an appropriate person, i.e., that he is, or acts for, the owner [8-312(1)(b)]. To make a similar undertaking with respect to the originator of an instruction to transfer (or pledge or release) an uncertificated security, the signature guarantor, without a certificated security, prior indorsements and signature guarantees before him, would have to warrant a fact of which he has no evidence—that the originator is, or acts for, the registered owner or pledgee. That fact, however, will be known to the issuer and since the issuer is the only person who must act on the instruction, there is no need to require the signature guarantor's warranty. Hence, the warranties of the signature guarantor of an instruction are limited to genuineness, capacity and the fact that the signer is, or acts for, the purported owner or pledgee [8-312(2)]. The originator himself warrants to the issuer that he is an appropriate person [8-306(5)].

A special guarantee of signature is also provided by which the guarantor warrants, in effect, that the instruction will result in the requested transfer, free from defects [8-312(3)]. Although the issuer cannot require a special guarantee [8-312(7)], it is anticipated that it will be used in brokerage transactions in which the broker will specially guarantee the signature of his own customer. When a special guarantee of signature is made, the originator makes equivalent warranties to the guarantor [8-306(6)].

Finally, there is a guarantee of instruction which entails a warranty of rightfulness in all respects [8-312(6)], analogous to the guarantee of indorsement of a certificated security [8-312(5)]. This guarantee cannot be required by the issuer [8-312(7)], but when it is made, the originator makes equivalent warranties to the guarantor [8-306(7)].

Bona Fide Purchase

The concept of bona fide purchase applies to both certificated and uncertificated securities [8-302(1)]. The difference is that the purchaser of a certificated security is charged with notice only of what appears when he or a person acting in his behalf takes delivery of the security while the purchaser of an uncertificated security is charged with notice of what appears in the initial transaction statement sent to him. Thus, the purchaser of a certificated security without notice takes free of liens [8-103(a)], terms of a security which may be defenses [8-202(1)] and restrictions [8-204(a)] not noted on the security. He may also take free of any adverse claim [8-302(3)] unless the nature of the claim is such that it would be disclosed by the security itself [8-304(1)]. The purchaser of an uncertificated security without notice, however, is charged with notice of liens [8-103(b)], defenses [8-202(1)] and restrictions [8-204(b)] noted in the initial transaction statement sent to him. He is also charged with notice of adverse claims shown in the initial transaction statement [8-304(2)]. Only when he has received a clean initial transaction statement can he be sure that he enjoys bona fide purchaser status [8-302(1)(b)].

The above-described difference is of limited practical significance. As has already been noted, the purchaser of an uncertificated security cannot be sure that he has received anything (whether or not defective) until he receives his initial transaction statement. Therefore, unless he chooses to rely on the warranties of his seller or a third party guarantor, he will not release his consideration unless and until he receives a clean initial transaction statement to give him the assurance that he has, indeed, received what he bargained for. The wide-spread use of wholly certificateless systems will necessarily involve the development of escrow arrangements or other mechanisms by means of which the parties will obtain satisfactory assurances.

Adverse Claims

The treatment of adverse claims presented a very special kind of problem. With certificated securities they are communicated by mere written notification to the issuer [8-403(1)]. They do not normally constitute a serious problem because they can be so easily defeated by transfer of the security to a purchaser without knowledge [8-302(3)]. The rules for certificated securities have, therefore, been preserved [8-403(1), (2) & (3)].

With uncertificated securities, however, the rules become unworkable because transfer is accomplished only by communication with the issuer [8-313(1)(b)] and the purchaser is charged with notice of whatever appears in the initial transaction statement sent to him [8-304(2)]. Consequently, new rules have been developed for uncertificated securities. They require that a third party claim be embodied in legal process in order to make it cognizable by the issuer [8-403(4)(a)]. They also permit, under certain circumstances, the registration of transfer or pledge subject to an adverse claim [8-403(5)]. Finally, they provide protection to a registered pledgee who attained bona fide purchaser status prior to the time that notice of a cognizable adverse claim reached the issuer [8-403(6)].

Creditors' Rights

The general rule of present Article 8, that no judicial lien on a debtor's interest in a security is valid until the security is actually seized [present 8-317(1)] is wholly inapplicable to uncertificated securities and, in the light of wide-spread nominee registration, depository systems and the like, has become inadequate even with respect to certificated securities. That rule is retained only for certificated securities in the debtor's control [8-317(1)]. Uncertificated securities registered in the debtor's name may be reached only by service upon the issuer [8-317(2)]. The interest of a debtor in either certificated or uncertificated securities under the control of secured parties or financial intermediaries is reached by service upon the controlling party [8-317(3) & (4)]. When a debtor's interest in securities controlled by a third party is subject to a judicial lien, provisions are made for the transfer of such securities, free of the lien, and the shifting of the lien to the proceeds in the hands of the third party [8-317(5)].

Nominee Registration

The increasing incidence of nominee registration in brokerage accounts, bank custody accounts, security depositories and otherwise has led to new and expanded provisions regarding the rights of creditors [8-317]. The same phenomenon has also led to a revision of the general transfer rules by substituting the broader category of "financial intermediary" [8-313(4)] where only "broker" formerly appeared [8-313(1)(c) & (d), (2) & (3)].

ARTICLE 8
INVESTMENT SECURITIES

PART 1
SHORT TITLE AND GENERAL MATTERS

§ 8-101. Short Title.

This Article shall be known and may be cited as Uniform Commercial Code—Investment Securities.

Reasons for 1977 Change

Although the title of the Article has not been changed, its coverage has been broadened, by amendment to Section 8-102, to include both securities which are reified, i.e., represented by certificates or other instruments, and those which are not. The former are defined as "certificated securities" and constitute the entire subject matter of present Article 8. The latter are defined as "uncertificated securities" and are not now expressly covered by the Uniform Commercial Code. The revised Article is intended to govern the relationships, rights and duties of the issuers of and the parties that deal with both certificated and uncertificated securities to the same extent that present Article 8 governs such relationships, rights and duties with respect to certificated securities alone.

This Article does not purport to determine whether a particular issue of securities should be represented by certificates, in whole or in part. It is contemplated that such determination will be made by the issuer under appropriate state or federal law. It is further contemplated that a particular issue of securities may be partly certificated and partly uncertificated, in which event the determination will be at the option of the owner to the extent that the issuer permits.

The form of the Article has been disturbed as little as possible and each numbered section deals with the subject matter of the similarly numbered section of the present Article. Only four new sections, 8-108, 8-321, 8-407 and 8-408, have been added.

§ 8-102. Definitions and Index of Definitions.

(1) In this Article, unless the context otherwise requires:

(6) In addition Article 1 contains general definitions and principles of construction and interpretation applicable throughout this Article.

Reasons for 1977 Change

New paragraph (1)(a) defines "certificated security" in essentially the same terms as present paragraph (1)(a) defines "security". The definition is rearranged in order to permit a parallel definition of "uncertificated security" in new paragraph (1)(b). Two minor changes have been made. The phrase "of the issuer" has been repeated in order to make clear that it modifies "property" and "enterprise" as well as "obligation". It is understood that this was intended in the present statute. The word "represented" has been substituted for "evidenced" as more accurately conveying the notion that a certificated security is, in many ways, treated as if it were the property itself, e.g., ownership is transferred by delivery. Compare the definition of "instrument" in Section 9-105(1)(i).

This terminology, which is used throughout the revised Article, conforms to that of Section 23 of the Model Business Corporation Act and avoids confusion since there will be pieces of paper, statements and the like that will "evidence" uncertificated securities.

The definition of "uncertificated security" in paragraph (1)(b) differs from the definition of certificated security in two respects. The first change is in subparagraph (i) which provides that it is not represented by an instrument and is always registered. The second change is the omission from subparagraph (ii) of the phrase "or commonly recognized in any area in which it is issued or dealt in as a medium for investment". It was thought that where there was no requirement of representation by an instrument a great many interests which might be regarded as media for investment would be classified as securities under the umbrella of the omitted phrase. Although the official comment to the present section calls attention to the possible difference in coverage of Article 8 and other securities laws, the definition has been narrowed in order to minimize, if not eliminate, the need for strained distinctions. The remaining language of subparagraph (ii) is intended to cover such interests as the stock of closely-held corporations which, although not in fact dealt in on exchanges or markets, is "of a type" that is. Interests like bank accounts are intended to be excluded by the omission of the medium for investment language.

Paragraph (1)(c) defines "security" as either a certificated security or an uncertificated security, defined in the two preceding paragraphs. The second sentence of (1)(c) is intended to eliminate confusion arising from the fact that certificated securities (all securities under the present statute) are alternatively viewed as the actual pieces of paper and the interests they represent. See, e.g., present Section 8-103, which provides "A lien upon a security [the intangible interest] . . . is valid . . . only if . . . noted conspicuously on the security [the piece of paper]." The final sentence of (1)(c) is to recognize that an issuer which nominally issues certificated securities but does not normally send the certificates to the owners is functionally identical to the issuer of uncertificated securities and should be guided by the same rules.

Subsection (3), which represents a change from the 1972 Official Text of the present statute, is, with limited exceptions, not part of this proposed revision. Rather, it is a revision proposed by the Banking and Securities Industry Committee to facilitate the development of the securities depository system. It has been previously approved by the Permanent Editorial Board for the Uniform Commercial Code and has been adopted by more than forty states. The changes made by this revision include the addition of "a corporation registered as a 'clearing agency' under the federal securities laws" in the opening sentence, the substitution of "organizations" for "persons (other than individuals)" and the substitution of "federal securities laws" for the specific statutory references in subparagraphs (a)(ii) and (iii).

In subsection (5) the section reference to the definition of "Adverse claim" has been changed and three new terms have been added to the list of definitions. Three terms, defined in Section 9-105, have also been included.

§ 8-103. Issuer's Lien.

A lien upon a security in favor of an issuer thereof is valid against a purchaser only if*:*

(a) the security is certificated and the right of the issuer to [such] the lien is noted conspicuously [on the security] thereon; or

(b) the security is uncertificated and a notation of the right of the issuer to the lien is contained in the initial transaction statement sent to the purchaser or, if his interest is transferred to him other than by registration of transfer, pledge, or release, the initial transaction statement sent to the registered owner or the registered pledgee.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The substance of the present section has been preserved in paragraph (a) which deals with certificated securities. An analogous rule for uncertificated securities is set forth in paragraph (b) which conditions the validity of an issuer's lien on a notation in the statement which must be sent to a purchaser upon registration of transfer, pledge or release under Section 8-408. When transfer is not effected by registration, see Section 8-313(1)(d), (f), (g), (h), (i) or (j), the notation must appear in the statement sent to the registered owner or pledgee who "holds" for the purchaser. Compare Sections 8-202 and 8-204 which deal, respectively, with issuers' defenses and restrictions imposed by issuers.

§ 8-104. Effect of Overissue; "Overissue".

(1) The provisions of this Article which validate a security or compel its issue or reissue do not apply to the extent that validation, issue*,* or reissue would result in overissue; but if:

(a) [if] an identical security which does not constitute an overissue is reasonably available for purchase, the person entitled to issue or validation may compel the issuer to purchase [and deliver such a] the security [to] for him and either to deliver a certificated security or to register the transfer of an uncertificated security to him, against surrender of [the] any certificated security [, if any, which] he holds; or

(b) [if] a security is not so available for purchase, the person entitled to issue or validation may recover from the issuer the price he or the last purchaser for value paid for it with interest from the date of his demand.

(2) "Overissue" means the issue of securities in excess of the amount [which] the issuer has corporate power to issue.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The language added to subparagraph (1)(a) gives the issuer obligated to transfer a security the alternatives of delivering a certificated security or registering the transfer of an uncertificated security to the person entitled. As a practical matter, the alternatives will be available only when the securities of the particular issue involved are partly certificated and partly uncertificated. In that event, either the registered owner or the registered pledgee will have the right, under Section 8-407, to exchange one form of security for the other, thus giving that person the ultimate choice.

§ 8-105. Certificated Securities Negotiable; Statements and Instructions Not Negotiable; Presumptions.

(1) Certificated securities governed by this Article are negotiable instruments.

(2) Statements (Section 8-408), notices, or the like, sent by the issuer of uncertificated securities and instructions (Section 8-308) are neither negotiable instruments nor certificated securities.

(3) [(2)] In any action on a security*:*

(a) unless specifically denied in the pleadings, each signature on [the] a certificated security [or], in a necessary indorsement*, on an initial transaction statement, or on an instruction,* is admitted;

(b) [when] if the effectiveness of a signature is put in issue*,* the burden of establishing it is on the party claiming under the signature*,* but the signature is presumed to be genuine or authorized;

(c) [when] if signatures on a certificated security are admitted or established*,* production of the [instrument] security entitles a holder to recover on it unless the defendant establishes a defense or a defect going to the validity of the security; [and]

(d) if signatures on an initial transaction statement are admitted or established, the facts stated in the statement are presumed to be true as of the time of its issuance; and

(e) [(d)] after it is shown that a defense or defect exists*,* the plaintiff has the burden of establishing that he or some person under whom he claims is a person against whom the defense or defect is ineffective (Section 8-202).

Reasons for 1977 Change

This section is substantially unchanged with respect to certificated securities. Subsection (2) has been added, through an abundance of caution, to make it clear that neither the various writings which must or may be sent by the issuers of uncertificated securities nor instructions, which are orders to the issuer requesting registration, are to be regarded as negotiable instruments or certificated securities. Section 8-408(9) requires an appropriate warning legend on the statements that issuers must send.

Language has been added to paragraph (3)(a) to extend the presumption of validity to signatures on initial transaction statements, sent by the issuers of uncertificated securities, and on instructions, originated by owners and pledgees of uncertificated securities. Paragraph (3)(d) has been added to give the same evidentiary value to a genuine initial transaction statement that paragraph (3)(c) accords to a genuine certificated security. It should be noted that the representations typically contained in a certificated security are of a continuing nature while the initial transaction statement speaks only as of the time of its issuance.

§ 8-106. Applicability.

The law (including the conflict of laws rules) of the jurisdiction of organization of the issuer governs the validity of a security, the effectiveness of registration by the issuer, and the rights and duties of the issuer with respect to*:*

(a) registration of transfer of a certificated security;

(b) registration of transfer, pledge, or release of an uncertificated security; and

(c) sending of statements of uncertificated securities.

[are governed by the law (including the conflict of laws rules) of the jurisdiction of organization of the issuer.]

Reasons for 1977 Change

No change is intended in the coverage of this section with respect to certificated securities. The transfer of certificated securities, effected by delivery, will continue to be governed by present conflict of laws rules, not included in this Article. The transfer of uncertificated securities is, under Section 8-313, generally effected by registration on the books of the issuer. Hence, the effectiveness of such registration is included in the section's coverage.

Section 8-321 provides that certain security interests in uncertificated securities can be created and released by registration. Section 8-408 obligates the issuer of uncertificated securities to send certain statements. Both these matters are brought within the coverage of this section by the addition of subparagraphs (b) and (c). The pledge and release of certificated securities is not intended to be covered by this section and continues to be governed by other conflict of laws rules, e.g., Section 9-103.

§ 8-107. Securities [Deliverable] Transferable; Action for Price.

(1) Unless otherwise agreed and subject to any applicable law or regulation respecting short sales, a person obligated to [deliver] transfer securities may [deliver] transfer any certificated security of the specified issue in bearer form or registered in the name of the transferee*,* or indorsed to him or in blank*, or he may transfer an equivalent uncertificated security to the transferee or a person designated by the transferee*.

(2) [When] If the buyer fails to pay the price as it comes due under a contract of sale*,* the seller may recover the price of:

(a) [of] certificated securities accepted by the buyer; [and]

(b) uncertificated securities that have been transferred to the buyer or a person designated by the buyer; and

(c) [(b) of] other securities if efforts at their resale would be unduly burdensome or if there is no readily available market for their resale.

Reasons for 1977 Change

In order to make this section equally applicable to all securities, the words "Deliverable" in the title and "deliver" in subsection (1) have been changed to "Transferable" and

"transfer", respectively. Since certificated securities continue to be transferred by delivery, there is no change of substance with respect to certificated securities.

Present subsection (1) states the rule that all certificated securities of the same issue are to be regarded as fungible. New subsection (1) extends that concept to uncertificated securities of the same issue. Thus, a seller's obligation may normally be satisfied not only by the transfer of any certificated security of the same issue but also by the transfer of an uncertificated security of that issue.

Paragraph (2)(b) has been added so that the transfer of an uncertificated security to the buyer or his designee, which is the functional equivalent of the delivery of a certificated security, results in the same obligation to pay.

§ 8-108. Registration of Pledge and Release of Uncertificated Securities.

A security interest in an uncertificated security may be evidenced by the registration of pledge to the secured party or a person designated by him. There can be no more than one registered pledge of an uncertificated security at any time. The registered owner of an uncertificated security is the person in whose name the security is registered, even if the security is subject to a registered pledge. The rights of a registered pledgee of an uncertificated security under this Article are terminated by the registration of release.

Reasons for 1977 Change

This is an entirely new section which introduces the concept of the registered pledge of uncertificated securities. The term "pledge" is used, notwithstanding the absence of physical delivery, because it reflects common terminology employed in connection with security interests in investment securities. Note that the same term has been used in present Section 8-320 to describe the security interest created by book entry by a securities depository. The rights of a registered pledgee, set forth in other sections (particularly Section 8-207), are intended to resemble, as closely as possible, the rights of the pledgee of a certificated security who retains possession of the pledged security without re-registration. Although the registration of pledge requires communication to the issuer, no details of the security agreement between the debtor and the secured party need be disclosed.

There is no provision for the registration of more than one pledge at a time. This limits the burden on issuers and insulates them from problems of conflicting priorities and the like. The registration of pledge is only one among several methods of creating security interests under Section 8-313(1) and other methods can be effectively employed to create security interests junior to that of the registered pledgee or even first security interests if, for some reason, the use of the registered pledge mechanism is inadvisable. See new Section 8-321 which deals comprehensively with security interests and incorporates the transfer rules of Section 8-313(1) by reference.

The third sentence makes it clear that the registered owner, and not the registered pledgee, is the person in whose name an uncertificated security is registered as, for example, to determine how an unsecured creditor may reach his debtor's interest under Section 8-317(2). The registration of release, in effect, nullifies the registration of pledge, and is functionally equivalent to the redelivery of a pledged certificated security to the pledgor.

PART 2
ISSUE—ISSUER

§ 8-201. "Issuer".

(1) With respect to obligations on or defenses to a security, "issuer" includes a person who:

(a) places or authorizes the placing of his name on a certificated security (otherwise than as authenticating trustee, registrar, transfer agent, or the like) to evidence that it represents a share, participation, or other interest in his property or in an enterprise, or to evidence his duty to perform an obligation [evidenced] represented by the certificated security; [or]

(b) creates shares, participations or other interests in his property or in an enterprise or undertakes obligations, which shares, participations, interests, or obligations are uncertificated securities;

(c) [(b)] directly or indirectly creates fractional interests in his rights or property, which fractional interests are [evidenced] represented by certificated securities; or

(d) [(c)] becomes responsible for or in place of any other person described as an issuer in this section.

(2) With respect to obligations on or defenses to a security, a guarantor is an issuer to the extent of his guaranty, whether or not his obligation is noted on [the] a certificated security or on statements of uncertificated securities sent pursuant to Section 8-408.

(3) With respect to registration of transfer, pledge, or release (Part 4 of this Article), "issuer" means a person on whose behalf transfer books are maintained.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The definition of "issuer" has been broadened to include persons who create either certificated securities, uncertificated securities or both. Because the first two paragraphs of present subsection (1) apply, by their terms, only to securities represented by instruments, a new paragraph (b) has been inserted which deals with uncertificated securities.

The definition of "uncertificated security" in Section 8-102 and the definition of "issuer" in this section contemplate that uncertificated securities may be either equity or debt securities. Current thinking about uncertificated securities has focused primarily on equities and the difference in the relationship between a shareholder and a corporation in contrast to that between a creditor and his debtor may militate in favor of retaining instruments to represent debt securities. It should be noted, however, that the Federal Reserve Banks, as transfer agents for the United States, have a well-developed uncertificated transfer system for United States government bonds.

Language has been added to subsection (2) to refer to the statements which issuers of uncertificated securities are obligated to send. Language has been added to subsection (3) to include the registration of pledge and release, in addition to transfer.

§ 8-202. Issuer's Responsibility and Defenses; Notice of Defect or Defense.

(1) Even against a purchaser for value and without notice, the terms of a security include:

(a) if the security is certificated, those stated on the security;

(b) if the security is uncertificated, those contained in the initial transaction statement sent to such purchaser, or if his interest is transferred to him other than by registration of transfer, pledge, or release, the initial transaction statement sent to the registered owner or registered pledgee; and

(c) those made part of the security by reference, on the certificated security or in the initial transaction statement, to another instrument, indenture, or document or to a constitution, statute, ordinance, rule, regulation, order or the like, to the extent that the terms [so] referred to do not conflict with the [stated] terms stated on the certificated security or contained in the statement. [Such] A reference under this paragraph does not of itself charge a purchaser for value with notice of a defect going to the validity of the security*,* even though the certificated security or statement expressly states that a person accepting it admits [such] notice.

(2) [(a)] A certificated security in the hands of a purchaser for value or an uncertificated security as to which an initial transaction statement has been sent to a purchaser for value, other than [one] a security issued by a government or governmental agency or unit*,* even though issued with a defect going to its validity*,* is valid [in the hands of a] with respect to the purchaser [for value and] if he is without notice of the particular defect unless the defect involves a violation of constitutional provisions*,* in which case the security is valid [in the hands of] with respect to a subsequent purchaser for value and without notice of the defect. [(b)] The rule of subparagraph (a)] This subsection applies to an issuer [which] that is a government or governmental agency or unit only if either there has been substantial compliance with the legal requirements governing the issue or the issuer has received a substantial consideration for the issue as a whole or for the particular security and a stated purpose of the issue is one for which the issuer has power to borrow money or issue the security.

(3) Except as [otherwise] provided in the case of certain unauthorized signatures [on issue] (Section 8-205), lack of genuineness of a certificated security or an initial transaction statement is a complete defense*,* even against a purchaser for value and without notice.

(4) All other defenses of the issuer of a certificated or uncertificated security, including nondelivery and conditional delivery of [the] a certificated security*,* are ineffective against a purchaser for value who has taken without notice of the particular defense.

(5) Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect the right of a party to a "when, as and if issued" or a "when distributed" contract to cancel the contract in the event of a material change in the character of the security [which] that is the subject of the contract or in the plan or arrangement pursuant to which [such] the security is to be issued or distributed.

Reasons for 1977 Change

Subsection (1) has been broadened to provide that not only the terms noted or referred to on a certificated security but also the terms noted or referred to in the initial transaction statement sent to the purchaser of an uncertificated security (or one who "holds" for the purchaser) will constitute constructive notice to persons who deal with the security.

The rule of subsection (2), which estops the issuer of a certificated security from asserting its invalidity against a purchaser for value without notice has been extended to afford the same protection to the purchaser of an uncertificated security for value and without notice to whom an initial transaction statement has been sent.

The defense of lack of genuineness which is accorded to the alleged issuer of a certificated security by present subsection (3) is similarly accorded to the alleged sender of an initial transaction statement by the added language. The exception of Section 8-205 similarly applies.

Subsection (4) applies to both certificated and uncertificated securities and language has been added to make that clear. Note that a purchaser may be chargeable with notice of an issuer's defense from another source, even in the absence of a notation on a certificated security or an initial transaction statement. Compare Section 8-103 with respect to issuer's liens.

§ 8-203. Staleness as Notice of Defects or Defenses.

(1) After an act or event [which creates] creating a right to immediate performance of the principal obligation [evidenced] represented by [the] a certificated security or [which] that sets a date on or after which the security is to be presented or surrendered for redemption or exchange, a purchaser is charged with notice of any defect in its issue or defense of the issuer if:

(a) [if] the act or event is one requiring the payment of money [or], the delivery of certificated securities*, the registration of transfer of uncertificated securities,* or [both] any of these on presentation or surrender of the certificated security [and such], the funds or securities are available on the date set for payment or exchange*,* and he takes the security more than one year after that date; and

(b) [if] the act or event is not covered by paragraph (a) and he takes the security more than [two] 2 years after the date set for surrender or presentation or the date on which [such] performance became due.

(2) A call [which] that has been revoked is not within subsection (1).

Reasons for 1977 Change

The substance of this section applies only to certificated securities because such securities may be transferred to a purchaser by delivery after they have matured, been called or become redeemable or exchangeable. It is contemplated that uncertificated securities which have matured or been called will merely be cancelled on the books of the issuer and the proceeds sent to the registered owner or registered pledgee, as the case may be. Uncertificated securities which have become redeemable or exchangeable, at the option of the owner, may be transferred to a purchaser, but the transfer is effectuated only by registration of transfer, thus necessitating communication with the issuer. If defects or defenses in such securities exist, the issuer will necessarily have the opportunity to bring them to the attention of the purchaser in the initial transaction statement sent to him.

§ 8-204. Effect of Issuer's Restrictions on Transfer.

[Unless noted conspicuously on the security a] A restriction on transfer of a security imposed by the issuer*,* even though otherwise lawful*,* is ineffective [except] against [a] any person [with] without actual knowledge of it[.] unless:

(a) the security is certificated and the restriction is noted conspicuously thereon; or

(b) the security is uncertificated and a notation of the restriction is contained in the initial transaction statement sent to the person or, if his interest is transferred to him other than by registration of transfer, pledge, or release, the initial transaction statement sent to the registered owner or the registered pledgee.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The present section provides that an issuer's restriction on transfer is valid against persons with actual knowledge and that a notation on the certificate constitutes constructive knowledge. The revised section preserves these rules with respect to certificated securities and sets forth a coordinate rule that a notation on an initial transaction statement sent with respect to an uncertificated security similarly constitutes constructive knowledge. A prospective transferee of an uncertificated security must communicate with the issuer in order to effectuate transfer by registration.

Registration of transfer by the issuer will negate the existence of restrictions on that particular transfer. Restrictions on further transfer, to be effective against a purchaser without actual knowledge, must be noted in the initial transaction statement sent to the purchaser or one who "holds" for the purchaser. Such restrictions may constitute a breach of the transferor's warranty under Section 8-306. Compare Section 8-103 which precludes the issuer from asserting a lien against a purchaser unless appropriate notations were contained in the initial transaction statement.

§ 8-205. Effect of Unauthorized Signature on [Issue] Certificated Security or Initial Transaction Statement.

An unauthorized signature placed on a certificated security prior to or in the course of issue or placed on an initial transaction statement is ineffective, [except that] but the signature is effective in favor of a purchaser for value of the certificated security or a purchaser for value of an uncertificated security to whom such initial transaction statement has been sent, if the purchaser is [and] without notice of the lack of authority and [if] the signing has been done by*:*

(a) an authenticating trustee, registrar, transfer agent*,* or other person entrusted by the issuer with the signing of the security [or], of similar securities*,* or of initial transaction statements or [their] the immediate preparation for signing of any of them; or

(b) an employee of the issuer*,* or of any of the foregoing*,* entrusted with responsible handling of the security or initial transaction statement.

Reasons for 1977 Change

It is contemplated that purchasers, including pledgees, of uncertificated securities should be able to and will rely on the initial transaction statements sent to them when a transfer, pledge or release is registered. In order to insure the genuineness of such statements, Section 8-408(4) requires that they be signed. Note that "signed" is a term defined by Section 1-201(39) and does not necessarily involve a manual signature.

The rule of this section with respect to the ineffectiveness of unauthorized signatures, and, more importantly, the exception to that rule in favor of purchasers for value, has been broadened to include signatures on initial transaction statements. Note that the exception, with respect to initial transaction statements, runs in favor of only the purchaser to whom the statement has been sent. Thus, a subsequent purchaser from the addressee of an initial transaction statement on which the signature was unauthorized but was done by a person described in paragraph (a) or (b) cannot rely on the exception of the section if the addressee had notice of the lack of authority.

§ 8-206. Completion or Alteration of [Instrument] Certificated Security or Initial Transaction Statement.

(1) [Where] If a certificated security contains the signatures necessary to its issue or transfer but is incomplete in any other respect*:*

(a) any person may complete it by filling in the blanks as authorized; and

(b) even though the blanks are incorrectly filled in, the security as completed is enforceable by a purchaser who took it for value and without notice of [such] the incorrectness.

(2) A complete certificated security [which] that has been improperly altered*,* even though fraudulently*,* remains enforceable*,* but only according to its original terms.

(3) If an initial transaction statement contains the signatures necessary to its validity, but is incomplete in any other respect:

(a) any person may complete it by filling in the blanks as authorized; and

(b) even though the blanks are incorrectly filled in, the statement as completed is effective in favor of the person to whom it is sent if he purchased the security referred to therein for value and without notice of the incorrectness.

(4) A complete initial transaction statement that has been improperly altered, even though fraudulently, is effective in favor of a purchaser to whom it has been sent, but only according to its original terms.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The rules of the present section with respect to certificated securities are restated in subsections (1) and (2). These rules are extended to the completion or alteration of initial transaction statements by new subsections (3) and (4).

Note that the protection of paragraph (3)(b) extends only to the addressee of the initial transaction statement. If, for example, a properly signed initial transaction statement indicated, in the space for notations of liens, the word "None", which had been incorrectly inserted, and the addressee of that statement had actual knowledge that a lien existed, a subsequent purchaser from the addressee would not take free of the lien, despite the incorrect insertion. If, however, the subsequent purchaser then received an initial transaction statement showing no liens, he would then have the protection of Section 8-103 and this section.

§ 8-207. Rights and Duties of Issuer With Respect to Registered Owners and Registered Pledgees.

(1) Prior to due presentment for registration of transfer of a certificated security in registered form, the issuer or indenture trustee may treat the registered owner as the person exclusively entitled to vote, to receive notifications, and otherwise to exercise all the rights and powers of an owner.

(2) Subject to the provisions of subsections (3), (4), and (6), the issuer or indenture trustee may treat the registered owner of an uncertificated security as the person exclusively entitled to vote, to receive notifications, and otherwise to exercise all the rights and powers of an owner.

(3) The registered owner of an uncertificated security that is subject to a registered pledge is not entitled to registration of transfer prior to the due presentment to the issuer of a release instruction. The exercise of conversion rights with respect to a convertible uncertificated security is a transfer within the meaning of this section.

(4) Upon due presentment of a transfer instruction from the registered pledgee of an uncertificated security, the issuer shall:

(a) register the transfer of the security to the new owner free of pledge, if the instruction specifies a new owner (who may be the registered pledgee) and does not specify a pledgee;

(b) register the transfer of the security to the new owner subject to the interest of the existing pledgee, if the instruction specifies a new owner and the existing pledgee; or

(c) register the release of the security from the existing pledge and register the pledge of the security to the other pledgee, if the instruction specifies the existing owner and another pledgee.

(5) Continuity of perfection of a security interest is not broken by registration of transfer under subsection (4)(b) or by registration of release and pledge under subsection (4)(c), if the security interest is assigned.

(6) If an uncertificated security is subject to a registered pledge:

(a) any uncertificated securities issued in exchange for or distributed with respect to the pledged security shall be registered subject to the pledge;

(b) any certificated securities issued in exchange for or distributed with respect to the pledged security shall be delivered to the registered pledgee; and

(c) any money paid in exchange for or in redemption of part or all of the security shall be paid to the registered pledgee.

(7) [(2)] Nothing in this Article shall be construed to affect the liability of the registered owner of a security for calls, assessments, or the like.

Reasons for 1977 Change

Under present subsection (1), the issuer of a certificated security may and, in the absence of conclusive evidence that the security has been transferred, presumably will rely on the registry to establish the identity of those entitled to ownership rights. New subsection (2) establishes the same rule for the issuer of uncertificated securities, subject, however, to the rights of registered pledgees which are set forth in subsections (3), (4) and (6). It should be noted that an uncertificated security can normally be transferred only by registration of transfer.

Under subsection (3), the owner of an uncertificated security subject to a registered pledge cannot transfer his interest until the pledge has been released by the registered pledgee. Although this requirement appears to conflict with the free alienability of the debtor's interest under Section 9-311, it does so no more than the current practice of delivery of a certificated security to the pledgee, which, in effect, deprives the owner of the power to transfer an interest without the pledgee's cooperation.

The final sentence of subsection (3) makes clear that when a convertible uncertificated security is subject to a registered pledge, it is the pledgee, and not the owner, who has the exclusive power to exercise the conversion rights. Since the exercise of conversion rights for a certificated security generally requires delivery of the security to the issuer, the cooperation of the secured party is similarly required. Note that the proceeds of the conversion are subject to the pledgee's interest or delivered to the pledgee under subsection (6).

Subsection (4) obliges the issuer to comply with the transfer instruction of the registered pledgee of an uncertificated security, thus placing such pledgee in the same position as the pledgee of a certificated security to whom the security has been delivered with all necessary indorsements. The three subparagraphs of subsection (4) provide respectively for (a) the outright transfer of the security, free of the pledgee's interest, to a buyer or any other person, including the pledgee; (b) the transfer of the owner's equity to a third person with the pledgee's interest continuing; and (c) the substitution of a new pledgee for the existing pledgee with ownership continuing undisturbed. Subsection (5) provides for continuity of perfection for purposes of priority under Article 9, the Bankruptcy Act and other statutes.

Subsection (6) protects the pledgee's interest in the proceeds of conversion, exchange or redemption of uncertificated securities, since no instrument need be surrendered to effectuate such transactions. Subsection (6) also provides that additional securities, certificated or uncertificated, issued in connection with stock splits or stock dividends will continue under the control of the registered pledgee. This contrasts with the situation when certificated securities are pledged and dividend certificates are customarily sent to the registered owner—the only party shown on the issuer's records. In that event, the pledgee must obtain the dividend certificates from the pledgor, exposing them, in the interim, to wrongful transfer.

§ 8-208. Effect of Signature of Authenticating Trustee, Registrar, or Transfer Agent.

(1) A person placing his signature upon a certificated security or an initial transaction statement as authenticating trustee, registrar, transfer agent, or the like, warrants to a purchaser for value of the certificated security or a purchaser for value of an uncertificated security to whom the initial transaction statement has been sent, if the purchaser is without notice of the particular defect, that*:*

(a) the certificated security or initial transaction statement is genuine; [and]

(b) his own participation in the issue or registration of the transfer, pledge, or release of the security is within his capacity and within the scope of the [authorization] authority received by him from the issuer; and

(c) he has reasonable grounds to believe that the security is in the form and within the amount the issuer is authorized to issue.

(2) Unless otherwise agreed, a person by so placing his signature does not assume responsibility for the validity of the security in other respects.

Reasons for 1977 Change

Language has been added to this section to extend the warranties of a signing authenticating trustee, registrar, transfer agent or the like to the addressees of initial transaction statements. It should be noted that this warranty extends only to the addressee. Compare Sections 8-205 and 8-206 and the explanation of changes thereunder.

PART 3

[PURCHASE] TRANSFER

§ 8-301. Rights Acquired by Purchaser [; "Adverse Claim"; Title Acquired by Bona Fide Purchaser].

(1) Upon [delivery] transfer of a security to a purchaser (Section 8-313), the purchaser acquires the rights in the security which his transferor had or had actual authority to convey unless the purchaser's rights are limited by Section 8-302(4). [except that a purchaser who has himself been a party to any fraud or illegality affecting the security or who as a prior holder had notice of an adverse claim cannot improve his position by taking from a later bona fide purchaser. "Adverse claim" includes a claim that a transfer was or would be wrongful or that a particular adverse person is the owner of or has an interest in the security.]

[(2) A bona fide purchaser in addition to acquiring the rights of a purchaser also acquires the security free of any adverse claim.]

(2) [(3)] A [purchaser] transferee of a limited interest acquires rights only to the extent of the interest [purchased] transferred. The creation or release of a security interest in a security is the transfer of a limited interest in that security.

Reasons for 1977 Change

Although the definition of "Purchase" in Section 1-201 (32) includes any "voluntary transaction", with or without consideration, the title of Part 3 has been changed to "Transfer" as a more natural description of the material covered therein. Similar changes have been made in the statutory text, where appropriate.

Transfers by operation of law, i.e., not to purchasers, are not intended to be covered by Part 3 of either the present or revised Article. Such transfers are effective upon the occurrence of the motivating event (death, bankruptcy or the like) and subsequent delivery and registration are merely confirmatory of what has already happened.

Subsection (1) states the basic rule of the present statute including the so-called shelter principle. The word "transfer" has been substituted for "delivery" in order that appropriate methods for the transfer of uncertificated securities can be included.

The balance of subsection (1) and all of present subsection (2) have been deleted from this Section but are now included in Section 8-302 which is intended to deal completely with the concept of bona fide purchase.

A sentence has been added to former subsection (3) to make clear that the creation and release of security interests are included in the statute's coverage.

(1) A "bona fide purchaser" is a purchaser for value in good faith and without notice of any adverse claim*:*

(a) who takes delivery of a certificated security in bearer form or [of one] in registered form*,* issued [to him] or indorsed to him or in blank*;*

(b) to whom the transfer, pledge or release of an uncertificated security is registered on the books of the issuer; or

(c) to whom a security is transferred under the provisions of paragraph (c), (d)(i), or (g) of Section 8-313(1).

(2) "Adverse claim" includes a claim that a transfer was or would be wrongful or that a particular adverse person is the owner of or has an interest in the security.

(3) A bona fide purchaser in addition to acquiring the rights of a purchaser (Section 8-301) also acquires his interest in the security free of any adverse claim.

(4) Notwithstanding Section 8-301(1), the transferee of a particular certificated security who has been a party to any fraud or illegality affecting the security, or who as a prior holder of that certificated security had notice of an adverse claim, cannot improve his position by taking from a bona fide purchaser.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The definition of bona fide purchaser of a certificated security is preserved in subparagraph (1)(a). A coordinate rule for the purchaser of an uncertificated security is stated in subparagraph (1)(b). The relevant time for testing the knowledge or constructive knowledge of a purchaser is the time of delivery in the case of a certificated security and the time of registration in the case of an uncertificated security. Note that the purchaser of an uncertificated security is charged with knowledge of adverse claims noted in the initial transaction statement sent to him as provided in Section 8-304.

In the present statute, Section 8-313 equates certain events with delivery and subsection (2) thereof provides that a purchaser who is deemed to have taken delivery through his broker under certain of the procedures in subsection (1) can be a "holder." It was thought advisable to add subparagraph (1)(c) to this section in order to identify expressly those provisions of revised Section 8-313(1) that will confer "holder" status on a purchaser and thus enable him to be a bona fide purchaser under this section.

The definition of adverse claim, the description of the title of a bona fide purchaser and the exception to the shelter principle, all of which are included in Section 8-301 of the present statute, are set forth as subsections (2), (3) and (4) respectively. Language has been added to subsection (4) to make clear that it is limited to the holder of a particular certificated security.

§ 8-303. "Broker".

"Broker" means a person engaged for all or part of his time in the business of buying and selling securities, who in the transaction concerned acts for, [or] buys a security from*,* or sells a security to*,* a customer. Nothing in this Article determines the capacity in which a person acts for purposes of any other statute or rule to which [such] the person is subject.

§ 8-304. Notice to Purchaser of Adverse Claims.

(1) A purchaser (including a broker for the seller or buyer, but excluding an intermediary bank) of a certificated security is charged with notice of adverse claims if:

(a) the security, whether in bearer or registered form, has been indorsed "for collection" or "for surrender" or for some other purpose not involving transfer; or

(b) the security is in bearer form and has on it an unambiguous statement that it is the property of a person other than the transferor. The mere writing of a name on a security is not such a statement.

(2) A purchaser (including a broker for the seller or buyer, but excluding an intermediary bank) to whom the transfer, pledge, or release of an uncertificated security is registered is charged with notice of adverse claims as to which the issuer has a duty under Section 8-403(4) at the time of registration and which are noted in the initial transaction statement sent to the purchaser or, if his interest is transferred to him other than by registration of transfer, pledge, or release, the initial transaction statement sent to the registered owner or the registered pledgee.

(3) [(2)] The fact that the purchaser (including a broker for the seller or buyer) of a certificated or uncertificated security has notice that the security is held for a third person or is registered in the name of or indorsed by a fiduciary does not create a duty of inquiry into the rightfulness of the transfer or constitute constructive notice of adverse claims. [If,] However, if the purchaser (excluding an intermediary bank) has knowledge that the proceeds are being used or [that] the transaction is for the individual benefit of the fiduciary or otherwise in breach of duty, the purchaser is charged with notice of adverse claims.

Reasons for 1977 Change

Subsection (1), which deals with notice arising from what appears on a certificated security is applicable only to the purchaser of a certificated security. New subsection (2) provides that the purchaser of an uncertificated security is subject to those adverse claims that are noted on the initial transaction statement sent to him (or one who "holds" for him) confirming the transfer, pledge or release which has been registered. Subsection (3) is equally applicable to the purchasers of certificated and uncertificated securities and language has been added to make that clear.

§ 8-305. Staleness as Notice of Adverse Claims.

An act or event [which] that creates a right to immediate performance of the principal obligation [evidenced] represented by [the] a certificated security or [which] sets a date on or after which [the] a certificated security is to be presented or surrendered for redemption or exchange does not [of] itself constitute any notice of adverse claims except in the case of a [purchase] transfer:

(a) after one year from any date set for [such] presentment or surrender for redemption or exchange; or

(b) after [six] 6 months from any date set for payment of money against presentation or surrender of the security if funds are available for payment on that date.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The substance of this section applies only to certificated securities for the same reasons as Section 8-203. It is not contemplated that uncertificated securities which have been called or have matured will be traded. With uncertificated securities which have become redeemable or exchangeable, effective transfer requires communication with the issuer and, therefore, presents the opportunity for the issuer to give the prospective transferee effective notice of such claims as have been lodged with it.

(1) A person who presents a certificated security for registration of transfer or for payment or exchange warrants to the issuer that he is entitled to the registration, payment, or exchange. But, a purchaser for value and without notice of adverse claims who receives a new, reissued, or re-registered certificated security on registration of transfer or receives an initial transaction statement confirming the registration of transfer of an equivalent uncertificated security to him warrants only that he has no knowledge of any unauthorized signature (Section 8-311) in a necessary indorsement.

(2) A person by transferring a certificated security to a purchaser for value warrants only that*:*

(a) his transfer is effective and rightful; [and]

(b) the security is genuine and has not been materially altered; and

(c) he knows of no fact which might impair the validity of the security.

(3) [Where] If a certificated security is delivered by an intermediary known to be entrusted with delivery of the security on behalf of another or with collection of a draft or other claim against [such] delivery, the intermediary by [such] delivery warrants only his own good faith and authority, even though he has purchased or made advances against the claim to be collected against the delivery.

(4) A pledgee or other holder for security who redelivers [the] a certificated security received, or after payment and on order of the debtor delivers that security to a third person, makes only the warranties of an intermediary under subsection (3).

(5) A person who originates an instruction warrants to the issuer that:

(a) he is an appropriate person to originate the instruction; and

(b) at the time the instruction is presented to the issuer he will be entitled to the registration of transfer, pledge, or release.

(6) A person who originates an instruction warrants to any person specially guaranteeing his signature (subsection 8-312(3)) that:

(a) he is an appropriate person to originate the instruction; and

(b) at the time the instruction is presented to the issuer

(i) he will be entitled to the registration of transfer, pledge, or release; and

(ii) the transfer, pledge, or release requested in the instruction will be registered by the issuer free from all liens, security interests, restrictions, and claims other than those specified in the instruction.

(7) A person who originates an instruction warrants to a purchaser for value and to any person guaranteeing the instruction (Section 8-312(6)) that:

(a) he is an appropriate person to originate the instruction;

(b) the uncertificated security referred to therein is valid; and

(c) at the time the instruction is presented to the issuer

(i) the transferor will be entitled to the registration of transfer, pledge, or release;

(ii) the transfer, pledge, or release requested in the instruction will be registered by the issuer free from all liens, security interests, restrictions, and claims other than those specified in the instruction; and

(iii) the requested transfer, pledge, or release will be rightful.

(8) If a secured party is the registered pledgee or the registered owner of an uncertificated security, a person who originates an instruction of release or transfer to the debtor or, after payment and on order of the debtor, a transfer instruction to a third person, warrants to the debtor or the third person only that he is an appropriate person to originate the instruction and at the time the instruction is presented to the issuer, the transferor will be entitled to the registration of release or transfer. If a transfer instruction to a third person who is a purchaser for value is originated on order of the debtor, the debtor makes to the purchaser the warranties of paragraphs (b), (c)(ii) and (c)(iii) of subsection (7).

(9) A person who transfers an uncertificated security to a purchaser for value and does not originate an instruction in connection with the transfer warrants only that:

(a) his transfer is effective and rightful; and

(b) the uncertificated security is valid.

(10) [(5)] A broker gives to his customer and to the issuer and a purchaser the applicable warranties provided in this section and has the rights and privileges of a purchaser under this section. The warranties of and in favor of the broker acting as an agent are in addition to applicable warranties given by and in favor of his customer.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The substance of the present section, with respect to certificated securities, has been preserved in the first four subsections. The section title and these subsections have been changed only to make clear that application only to certificated securities is intended. Because the registration of transfer of an uncertificated security to the transferee is functionally equivalent to the delivery of a certificated security to the transferee by the issuer, language has been added to subsection (1) to equate the position of purchasers for value without notice of adverse claims whether the security they "receive" from the issuer is certificated or uncertificated.

Subsection (5) establishes the warranty made to the issuer by the originator of an instruction, which is an order to the issuer and is defined in Section 8-308(4). These warranties are designed to protect issuers who rely on instructions which may be forged, fraudulent or otherwise improper against the persons who are responsible for the creation of such instructions. If, for example, an issuer should improperly transfer shares out of the name of a shareholder on the basis of a forged instruction, and transfer those shares to a bona fide purchaser to whom a valid initial transaction statement is sent, the issuer would be subject to liability to the purported transferor under Section 8-404(3).

Subsection (6) sets forth the warranty made by the originator of an instruction to a special signature guarantor. It adds to the two warranties of subsection (5) a warranty that the instruction will result in the registration of a "clean" transfer, pledge, or release and is consistent with the warranty made by a special signature guarantor under Section 8-312(3)(b).

Subsection (7) sets forth the warranty made by the originator of an instruction to both a purchaser for value and an instruction guarantor. It adds to the warranties in subsections

(5) and (6) additional warranties of rightfulness and validity and is essentially identical to the warranty of the transferor of a certificated security under subsection (2). The absolute warranty of validity, rather than the mere denial of knowledge of invalidity, is appropriate because the instruction must be communicated to the issuer in order to complete the transfer. If, upon receipt of the instruction, the issuer should dispute the validity of the security, it seems proper to place the burden of proving validity on the transferor. It is contemplated that purchasers of uncertificated securities will not normally part with their consideration unless and until they are satisfied that the transaction has been duly registered and acknowledged to be free from defects by the issuer, except when they are relying on their brokers or other third parties.

Because the guarantor of an instruction makes an absolute warranty of rightfulness under Section 8-312(6), he is given the benefit of the originator's warranty under subsection (7).

Subsection (8) limits the warranties of the originator of an instruction when the uncertificated security is subject to a security interest and the originator is or acts for either the registered pledgee or registered owner who is the secured party. In such cases, when the instruction is for release, transfer to the debtor or transfer, after payment, to a third person on the debtor's order, the originator's warranties are limited in substantially the same way that subsection (4) limits the warranties of the pledgee of a certificated security acting under similar circumstances.

When the transferor of an uncertificated security is neither the registered owner nor the registered pledgee, the transferor will have no occasion to originate an instruction in connection with the transfer. In such cases, the transferor warrants the rightfulness of the transfer and the validity of the security to a purchaser for value, as provided in subsection (9).

§ 8-307. Effect of Delivery Without Indorsement; Right to Compel Indorsement.

[Where] If a certificated security in registered form has been delivered to a purchaser without a necessary indorsement he may become a bona fide purchaser only as of the time the indorsement is supplied[,]; but against the transferor*,* the transfer is complete upon delivery and the purchaser has a specifically enforceable right to have any necessary indorsement supplied.

(1) An indorsement of a certificated security in registered form is made when an appropriate person signs on it or on a separate document an assignment or transfer of the security or a power to assign or transfer it or [when the] his signature [of such person] is written without more upon the back of the security.

(2) An indorsement may be in blank or special. An indorsement in blank includes an indorsement to bearer. A special indorsement specifies [the person] to whom the security is to be transferred, or who has power to transfer it. A holder may convert a blank indorsement into a special indorsement.

(3) [(5)] An indorsement purporting to be only of part of a certificated security representing units intended by the issuer to be separately transferable is effective to the extent of the indorsement.

(4) An "instruction" is an order to the issuer of an uncertificated security requesting that the transfer, pledge, or release from pledge of the uncertificated security specified therein be registered.

(5) An instruction originated by an appropriate person is:

(a) a writing signed by an appropriate person; or

(b) a communication to the issuer in any form agreed upon in a writing signed by the issuer and an appropriate person.

If an instruction has been originated by an appropriate person but is incomplete in any other respect, any person may complete it as authorized and the issuer may rely on it as completed even though it has been completed incorrectly.

(6) [(3)] "An appropriate person" in subsection (1) means [(a)] the person specified by the certificated security or by special indorsement to be entitled to the security [; or].

(7) "An appropriate person" in subsection (5) means:

(a) for an instruction to transfer or pledge an uncertificated security which is then not subject to a registered pledge, the registered owner; or

(b) for an instruction to transfer or release an uncertificated security which is then subject to a registered pledge, the registered pledgee.

(8) In addition to the persons designated in subsections (6) and (7), "an appropriate person" in subsections (1) and (5) includes:

(a) [(b) where] if the person [so specified] designated is described as a fiduciary but is no longer serving in the described capacity, [____] either that person or his successor; [or]

(b) [(c) where] if the [security or indorsement so specifies] persons designated are described as more than one person as fiduciaries and one or more are no longer serving in the described capacity, [____] the remaining fiduciary or fiduciaries, whether or not a successor has been appointed or qualified; [or]

(c) [(d) where] if the person [so specified] designated is an individual and is without capacity to act by virtue of death, incompetence, infancy, or otherwise, [____] his executor, administrator, guardian, or like fiduciary; [or]

(d) [(e) where] if the [security or indorsement so specifies] persons designated are described as more than one person as tenants by the entirety or with right of survivorship and by reason of death all cannot sign, [____] the survivor or survivors; [or]

(e) [(f)] a person having power to sign under applicable law or controlling instrument; [or] and

(f) [(g)] to the extent that the person designated or any of the foregoing persons may act through an agent, [____] his authorized agent.

(9) [(4)] Unless otherwise agreed, the indorser of a certificated security by his indorsement or the originator of an instruction by his origination assumes no obligation that the security will be honored by the issuer but only the obligations provided in Section 8-306.

(10) [(6)] Whether the person signing is appropriate is determined as of the date of signing and an indorsement made by or an instruction originated by [such a person] him does not become unauthorized for the purposes of this Article by virtue of any subsequent change of circumstances.

(11) [(7)] Failure of a fiduciary to comply with a controlling instrument or with the law of the state having jurisdiction of the fiduciary relationship, including any law requiring the fiduciary to obtain court approval of the transfer, pledge, or release, does not render his indorsement or an instruction originated by him unauthorized for the purposes of this Article.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The substance of the present section has been preserved, insofar as it applies to certificated securities, in subsections (1), (2), (3), (6), (8), (9), (10) and (11). Subsections (4), (5) and (7) deal solely with uncertificated securities. Present paragraph (3)(a) has been incorporated in new subsection (6). The remainder of present subsection (3) is incorporated in new subsection (8). Present subsections (4), (6) and (7) have been broadened to cover both forms of securities and are set forth in new subsections (9), (10) and (11). An attempt has been made to integrate the rules in order that issuers can rely on precisely the same documentation and evidence in connection with registration with respect to both certificated and uncertificated securities.

An order for the registration of transfer of a certificated security is the security itself, duly indorsed and presented to the issuer. Because uncertificated securities are not represented by instruments, a separate order, in some form, written or otherwise, is demanded. Subsection (4) defines an "instruction" as that order and further provides that not only registration of transfer, but also registration of pledge and release, can be requested thereby.

Subsection (5) provides that an instruction may be an appropriately signed writing, and it is contemplated that, in most cases, it will be. It further provides, however, that instructions may be other than signed writings when both parties, the issuer on the one hand and the registered owner or registered pledgee on the other, have agreed, in a signed writing, that some other procedure is mutually acceptable. Thus, paragraph (5)(b) is intended to facilitate the registration of transfers, pledges and releases on the authority of electronic, telegraphic or even oral instructions when the relevant parties are assured that the means selected will provide adequate safeguards against the execution of unauthorized transactions.

Subsection (7) designates the primary party appropriate to originate an instruction. When the uncertificated security is not subject to a registered pledge, the registered owner is that party and may properly originate an instruction to register either a transfer or pledge. When the uncertificated security is subject to a registered pledge, however, only the registered pledgee may properly originate an instruction to register either transfer or release. There is no provision to register a pledge other than that of a single registered pledgee. See Section 8-108.

The final phrase of subsection (9) has been inserted because of a possible ambiguity concerning the word "honored." Under the terms of Section 8-306 the transferor of a certificated security and the originator of an instruction do warrant, in effect, that the issuer will honor their respective orders to register the appropriate transaction. They do not, unless otherwise agreed, become sureties of the obligations of the issuer beyond the duty to register, as, for example, the issuer's obligations to pay interest and principal on a security which is an indebtedness of the issuer.

§ 8-309. Effect of Indorsement Without Delivery.

An indorsement of a certificated security*,* whether special or in blank*,* does not constitute a transfer until delivery of the certificated security on which it appears or*,* if the indorsement is on a separate document*,* until delivery of both the document and the certificated security.

§ 8-310. Indorsement of Certificated Security in Bearer Form.

An indorsement of a certificated security in bearer form may give notice of adverse claims (Section 8-304) but does not otherwise affect any right to registration the holder [may possess] possesses.

§ 8-311. Effect of Unauthorized Indorsement or Instruction.

Unless the owner or pledgee has ratified an unauthorized indorsement or instruction or is otherwise precluded from asserting its ineffectiveness*:*

(a) he may assert its ineffectiveness against the issuer or any purchaser*,* other than a purchaser for value and without notice of adverse claims*,* who has in good faith received a new, reissued*,* or re-registered certificated security on registration of transfer or received an initial transaction statement confirming the registration of transfer, pledge, or release of an equivalent uncertificated security to him; and

(b) an issuer who registers the transfer of a certificated security upon the unauthorized indorsement or who registers the transfer, pledge, or release of an uncertificated security upon the unauthorized instruction is subject to liability for improper registration (Section 8-404).

Reasons for 1977 Change

This section is broadened to give the same effect to an unauthorized instruction as the present statute gives to an unauthorized indorsement of a certificated security. Thus, the protection which paragraph (a) accords to a bona fide purchaser who receives a certificated security from the issuer is also accorded to a bona fide purchaser who receives an initial transaction statement with respect to an uncertificated security. Similarly, the liability of the issuer for improper registration set forth in paragraph (b) extends to improper registration pursuant to an unauthorized instruction.

§ 8-312. Effect of Guaranteeing Signature*,* [or] Indorsement or Instruction.

(1) Any person guaranteeing a signature of an indorser of a certificated security warrants that at the time of signing*:*

(a) the signature was genuine; [and]

(b) the signer was an appropriate person to indorse (Section 8-308); and

(c) the signer had legal capacity to sign.

[But the guarantor does not otherwise warrant the rightfulness of the particular transfer.]

(2) Any person guaranteeing a signature of the originator of an instruction warrants that at the time of signing:

(a) the signature was genuine;

(b) the signer was an appropriate person to originate the instruction (Section 8-308) if the person specified in the instruction as the registered owner or registered pledgee of the uncertificated security was, in fact, the registered owner or registered pledgee of such security, as to which fact the signature guarantor makes no warranty;

(c) the signer had legal capacity to sign; and

(d) the taxpayer identification number, if any, appearing on the instruction as that of the registered owner or registered pledgee was the taxpayer identification number of the signer or of the owner or pledgee for whom the signer was acting.

(3) Any person specially guaranteeing the signature of the originator of an instruction makes not only the warranties of a signature guarantor (subsection (2)) but also warrants that at the time the instruction is presented to the issuer:

(a) the person specified in the instruction as the registered owner or registered pledgee of the uncertificated security will be the registered owner or registered pledgee; and

(b) the transfer, pledge, or release of the uncertificated security requested in the instruction will be registered by the issuer free from all liens, security interests, restrictions, and claims other than those specified in the instruction.

(4) [But] The guarantor under subsections (1) and (2) or the special guarantor under subsection (3) does not otherwise warrant the rightfulness of the particular transfer*, pledge, or release*.

(5) [(2)] Any person [may guarantee] guaranteeing an indorsement of a certificated security [and by so doing warrants not only the signature (subsection 1)] makes not only the warranties of a signature guarantor under subsection (1) but also warrants the rightfulness of the particular transfer in all respects. [But no issuer may require a guarantee of indorsement as a condition to registration of transfer.]

(6) Any person guaranteeing an instruction requesting the transfer, pledge, or release of an uncertificated security makes not only the warranties of a special signature guarantor under subsection (3) but also warrants the rightfulness of the particular transfer, pledge, or release in all respects.

(7) [But] No issuer may require a special guarantee of signature (subsection (3)), a guarantee of indorsement (subsection (5)), or a guarantee of instruction (subsection (6)) as a condition to registration of transfer*, pledge, or release*.

(8) [(3)] The foregoing warranties are made to any person taking or dealing with the security in reliance on the guarantee, and the guarantor is liable to [such] the person for any loss resulting from breach of the warranties.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The substance of the present section has been preserved, insofar as it applies to certificated securities, in subsections (1), (4), (5), (7) and (8). Some of the language has been changed and restructured in order to integrate the material concerning uncertificated securities, but no change of substance is intended.

Subsection (2) sets forth the warranties that can reasonably be expected from the guarantor of the signature on an instruction, who, though familiar with the signer, does not have before him any evidence that the purported owner or pledgee is, in fact, the owner or pledgee of the subject uncertificated security. This is in distinct contrast to the position of the person guaranteeing a signature on a certificate who can see a certificate in the signer's possession in the name of or indorsed to the signer or in blank.

Thus, the warranty of appropriateness in clause (b) is expressly conditioned on the actual registration conforming to that represented by the originator. If the signer purports to be the owner or pledgee, the guarantor under clause (b), warrants only his identity. If, however, the signer is acting in a representative capacity, the guarantor warrants both his identity and his authority to act for the purported owner or pledgee. The additional warranty of clause (d) as to the taxpayer identification number is intended to prevent error or fraud resulting from identical or similar names. The warranties of subsection (2) are intended to provide satisfactory assurance to the issuer who needs no warranty as to the facts of registration because he can ascertain those facts from his own records.

Subsection (3) sets forth a "special guarantee of signature" under which the guarantor additionally warrants both registered ownership or pledge and freedom from undisclosed defects of record. The guarantor of the signature of an indorser of a certificated security effectively makes these warranties to a purchaser for value on the evidence of a clean certificate issued in the name of the indorser, indorsed to the indorser or indorsed in blank. By specially guaranteeing under subsection (3), the guarantor warrants that the instruction will, when presented to the issuer, result in the requested registration free from defects not specified. It is contemplated that the special guarantee of signature will be used principally in brokerage transactions where the broker will be specially guaranteeing the signature on an instruction originated by his own customer. The broker's risk will be no greater than that of a broker who now commonly executes the sale of a security for his customer without the absolute assurance that his customer will deliver a clean certificate at settlement.

§ 8-313. When [Delivery] Transfer to [the] Purchaser Occurs: [; Purchaser's Broker] Financial Intermediary as [Holder] Bona Fide Purchaser; "Financial Intermediary".

(1) [Delivery] Transfer of a security or a limited interest (including a security interest) therein to a purchaser occurs only [when]:

(a) at the time he or a person designated by him acquires possession of a certificated security; [or]

(b) at the time the transfer, pledge, or release of an uncertificated security is registered to him or a person designated by him;

(c) [(b)] at the time his [broker] financial intermediary acquires possession of a certificated security specially indorsed to or issued in the name of the purchaser; [or]

(d) [(c)] at the time [his broker] a financial intermediary, not a clearing corporation, sends him confirmation of the purchase and also by book entry or otherwise identifies [a specific security in the broker's possession] as belonging to the purchaser[; or]

(i) a specific certificated security in the financial intermediary's possession;

(ii) a quantity of securities that constitute or are part of a fungible bulk of certificated securities in the financial intermediary's possession or of uncertificated securities registered in the name of the financial intermediary; or

(iii) a quantity of securities that constitute or are part of a fungible bulk of securities shown on the account of the financial intermediary on the books of another financial intermediary;

(e) [(d)] with respect to an identified certificated security to be delivered while still in the possession of a third person*, not a financial intermediary,* [when] at the time that person acknowledges that he holds for the purchaser; [or]

(f) with respect to a specific uncertificated security the pledge or transfer of which has been registered to a third person, not a financial intermediary, at the time that person acknowledges that he holds for the purchaser;

(g) [(e)] at the time appropriate entries to the account of the purchaser or a person designated by him on the books of a clearing corporation are made under Section 8-320[.];

(h) with respect to the transfer of a security interest where the debtor has signed a security agreement containing a description of the security, at the time a written notification, which, in the case of the creation of the security interest, is signed by the debtor (which may be a copy of the security agreement) or which, in the case of the release or assignment of the security interest created pursuant to this paragraph, is signed by the secured party, is received by

(i) a financial intermediary on whose books the interest of the transferor in the security appears;

(ii) a third person, not a financial intermediary, in possession of the security, if it is certificated;

(iii) a third person, not a financial intermediary, who is the registered owner of the security, if it is uncertificated and not subject to a registered pledge; or

(iv) a third person, not a financial intermediary, who is the registered pledgee of the security, if it is uncertificated and subject to a registered pledge;

(i) with respect to the transfer of a security interest where the transferor has signed a security agreement containing a description of the security, at the time new value is given by the secured party; or

(j) with respect to the transfer of a security interest where the secured party is a financial intermediary and the security has already been transferred to the financial intermediary under paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), or (g), at the time the transferor has signed a security agreement containing a description of the security and value is given by the secured party.

(2) The purchaser is the owner of a security held for him by [his broker] a financial intermediary, but [is not the holder] cannot be a bona fide purchaser of a security so held except [as] in the circumstances specified in [subparagraphs] paragraphs [(b)] (c), (d)(i), and [(e)] (g) of subsection (1). [Where] If a security so held is part of a fungible bulk*, as in the circumstances specified in paragraphs (d)(ii) and (d)(iii) of subsection (1),* the purchaser is the owner of a proportionate property interest in the fungible bulk.

(3) Notice of an adverse claim received by the [broker] financial intermediary or by the purchaser after the [broker] financial intermediary takes delivery of a certificated security as a holder for value or after the transfer, pledge, or release of an uncertificated security has been registered free of the claim to a financial intermediary who has given value is not effective either as to the [broker] financial intermediary or as to the purchaser. However, as between the [broker] financial intermediary and the purchaser the purchaser may demand [delivery] transfer of an equivalent security as to which no notice of [an] adverse claim has been received.

(4) A "financial intermediary" is a bank, broker, clearing corporation or other person (or the nominee of any of them) which in the ordinary course of its business maintains security accounts for its customers and is acting in that capacity. A financial intermediary may have a security interest in securities held in account for its customer.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The title of this section has been changed and its content broadened in order to identify the time when both certificated and uncertificated securities are transferred to purchasers. The content has been further extended to recognize that many transactions are conducted through financial intermediaries, a term defined in subsection (4) to include all entities, and not merely brokers, that maintain security accounts for their customers. It is one of the three sections in this revision in which it is intended to extend the coverage of Article 8 as to certificated securities. Sections 8-317 and 8-321 are the others.

Subsection (1) is expressly made applicable to limited interests, including security interests, as well as entire interests. Compare Section 8-301(2). The addition of the word "only" in the first sentence is intended to provide that the methods of transfer listed are exclusive and that compliance with one of them is essential to a valid transfer. Transfers by operation of law are excepted because they are not transfers to a "purchaser".

The rules of the present statute as they apply to certificated securities are preserved in subparagraphs (a), (c), (d)(i), (e) and (g). The coverage of (c) and (d)(i), however, is extended to situations where any financial intermediary, except a clearing corporation, is involved and the coverage of (e) is limited to third persons who are not financial intermediaries.

Subparagraph (b) is the basic rule for uncertificated securities and provides that a transfer (including a pledge or release, which are transfers of security interests) occurs when it is registered. Subparagraph (f) is the analogue of (e) and applies when an uncertificated security is controlled by a third person. In both (e) and (f), acknowledgement by the third person is the critical event.

Subparagraphs (d)(ii) and (d)(iii) have no counterpart in the present statute but are considered desirable express statements in the light of modern security holding practices of both brokers and banks. The final sentence of present subsection (2) implies this result without stating it expressly. Once the "fungible bulk" principle is established, it is immaterial whether the underlying securities are certificated, uncertificated or held in a clearing corporation account.

Entire subparagraph (d) is applicable to all financial intermediaries except clearing corporations and requires, as conditions of transfer, both a confirmation to the purchaser and a book entry. In contrast, subparagraph (g) applies only to clearing corporations and requires only the appropriate book entry. The difference results from the fact that clearing corporations will normally control only securities belonging to their customers while other financial intermediaries may themselves be the beneficial owners or pledgees of securities not held in account for their customers. In the event of the insolvency of either the financial intermediary or the customer, it appears desirable to have some objective evidence of a transfer in addition to an internal book entry. This distinction preserves the similar distinction between subparagraphs (c) and (e) of the present statute.

Under the present statute, the rules of Section 8-313(1) are neither expressly applicable to security interests nor are they expressly made exclusive. On the other hand, when value has been given and the debtor has rights in the collateral, present Section 9-203(1) permits the creation of an enforceable security interest when either the secured party has possession of the collateral or the debtor has signed a written security agreement. Under present Article 9, a security interest created by signed agreement, although enforceable, would, with limited exceptions, be unperfected.

Under this revision, new Section 8-321 requires a transfer under Section 8-313(1) to create an enforceable security interest and Section 9-203(1) is expressly made subject to Section 8-321. As a result, it will not be possible to create a security interest in securities by mere written agreement. It is not considered necessary to continue to provide for the creation of unperfected security interests. It is considered desirable, however, to provide for the creation of security interests, unaccompanied by possession, which can be perfected under present Article 9.

Subparagraph (h), limited to the transfer of a security interest, deals with the situation where a security interest, pursuant to written agreement, is perfected by notice to a bailee under Section 9-305. Unlike a transfer under subparagraph (d), (e) or (f) of subsection (1), Section 9-305 does not require confirmation or acknowledgement by the controlling party, but only the receipt of notice. Subparagraph (h) provides that a transfer is effective when notice is received and further identifies the party to be notified. Subparagraph (h) is applicable to both certificated and uncertificated securities and, even when certificated securities are involved, eliminates speculation as to who is the bailee and, indeed, whether there is an instrument. Unlike Section 9-305, which merely requires notification, subsection (h) requires that the notification be signed by the transferor, thereby reducing the possibility of interference by fraudulent claimants. By this revision, securities are expressly excluded from the coverage of Section 9-305.

Subparagraph (i), also limited to the transfer of a security interest, deals with the situation where a security interest, pursuant to written agreement, for new value is automatically perfected for a period of 21 days under Section 9-304(4). Under subparagraph (i), such a security interest is effectively transferred when the new value is given. Section 8-321(2) provides for the expiration of perfection after 21 days. By this revision, securities are expressly excluded from the coverage of Section 9-304(4).

Subparagraph (j) is addressed to the situation where a financial intermediary holds securities in account for a customer and also acquires a security interest in those securities for its own account, e.g., a margin account with a broker or a bank lending on the collateral of its borrower's custody account. In such cases, the financial intermediary's control of the securities is in a dual capacity, and a written agreement signed by the debtor was thought to be a desirable protection.

Present subsection (2) denies holder status to a broker's customer except in cases where the broker is holding a specific certificated security for the customer's account. The effect of this is to prevent the customer from becoming a bona fide purchaser when all he has is an interest in a fungible bulk of securities. Revised subsection (2) deals with the problem expressly in terms of who can or cannot become a bona fide purchaser. Note that in neither the present nor the revised statute can the purchaser who becomes such by acknowledgment by a third party bailee or agent attain bona fide purchaser status. Subsection (2) should be compared with Section 8-302(1)(c).

Subsection (3) states the principle that once a financial intermediary has become a bona fide purchaser subsequent notice of claims to either him or his customer are ineffective, and extends the coverage to uncertificated securities. The final sentence, now applicable to all financial intermediaries, gives the customer the right to obtain a "clean" security from his broker or bank.

New subsection (4) defines the term "financial intermediary" as an entity which maintains security accounts for its customers. Note that the definition applies only when the entity is acting in that capacity. Thus, a bank is a financial intermediary in transactions involving its custody accounts but is not a financial intermediary with respect to securities it holds as a pledgee or for its own account.

§ 8-314. Duty to [Deliver] Transfer, When Completed.

(1) Unless otherwise agreed, [where] if a sale of a security is made on an exchange or otherwise through brokers*:*

(a) the selling customer fulfills his duty to [deliver when] transfer at the time he:

(i) [he] places [such] a certificated security in the possession of the selling broker or of a person designated by the broker*;* [or if requested causes an acknowledgment to be made to the selling broker that it is held for him; and]

(ii) causes an uncertificated security to be registered in the name of the selling broker or a person designated by the broker;

(iii) if requested*,* causes an acknowledgment to be made to the selling broker that [it] a certificated or uncertificated security is held for [him; and] the broker; or

(iv) places in the possession of the selling broker or of a person designated by the broker a transfer instruction for an uncertificated security, providing the issuer does not refuse to register the requested transfer if the instruction is presented to the issuer for registration within 30 days thereafter; and

(b) the selling broker*,* including a correspondent broker acting for a selling customer*,* fulfills his duty to [deliver] transfer at the time he:

(i) [by placing the] places a certificated security [or a like security] in the possession of the buying broker or a person designated by [him or] the buying broker;

(ii) causes an uncertificated security to be registered in the name of the buying broker or a person designated by the buying broker;

(iii) places in the possession of the buying broker or of a person designated by the buying broker a transfer instruction for an uncertificated security, providing the issuer does not refuse to register the requested transfer if the instruction is presented to the issuer for registration within 30 days thereafter; or

(iv) [by effecting] effects clearance of the sale in accordance with the rules of the exchange on which the transaction took place.

(2) Except as [otherwise] provided in this section and unless otherwise agreed, a transferor's duty to [deliver] transfer a security under a contract of purchase is not fulfilled until he:

(a) [he] places [the] a certificated security in form to be negotiated by the purchaser in the possession of the purchaser or of a person designated by the purchaser; [him or at the purchaser's request causes an acknowledgment to be made to the purchaser that it is held for him.]

(b) causes an uncertificated security to be registered in the name of the purchaser or a person designated by the purchaser; or

(c) [at the purchaser's request] if the purchaser requests, causes an acknowledgment to be made to the purchaser that [it] a certificated or uncertificated security is held for [him] the purchaser.

(3) Unless made on an exchange*,* a sale to a broker purchasing for his own account is within [this] subsection (2) and not within subsection (1).

Reasons for 1977 Change

This section presently provides that a transferor's duty is fulfilled by physical delivery of a certificated security. This rule is preserved in subparagraphs (1)(a)(i), (1)(b)(i) and (2)(a). New subparagraphs (1)(a)(ii), (1)(b)(ii) and (2)(b) permit the transferor also to perform by causing the registration of transfer of an uncertificated security to the transferee or his designee. Another alternative, causing a third party holder to acknowledge that he holds for the transferee if the transferee so requests, is provided in the present section and is explicitly stated in new subparagraphs (1)(a)(iii) and (2)(c). A selling broker may also fulfill his duty by effecting clearance pursuant to exchange rules. This is stated in new subparagraph (i)(b)(iv).

In brokerage transactions only, subparagraphs (1)(a)(iv) and (1)(b)(iii) permit yet another alternative. Under these, the transferor may conditionally satisfy his duty by the delivery of an instruction. Such delivery does not constitute complete performance if the instruction is timely presented for registration and the issuer refuses to comply with its request. The burden of timely presentment is placed on the recipient of the instruction and it is not intended that instructions so given will circulate in the manner in which certificated securities now commonly circulate by indorsement. It is contemplated that this method of performance will be commonly employed in transactions settled through brokers, with, in many cases, the selling broker specially guaranteeing the signature of the originator of the instruction pursuant to Section 8-312(3).

§ 8-315. Action Against [Purchaser] Transferee Based Upon Wrongful Transfer.

(1) Any person against whom the transfer of a security is wrongful for any reason, including his incapacity, [may] as against anyone except a bona fide purchaser*, may:*

(a) reclaim possession of the certificated security wrongfully transferred; [or]

(b) obtain possession of any new certificated security [evidencing] representing all or part of the same rights*;* [or]

(c) compel the origination of an instruction to transfer to him or a person designated by him an uncertificated security constituting all or part of the same rights; or

(d) have damages.

(2) If the transfer is wrongful because of an unauthorized indorsement of a certificated security, the owner may also reclaim or obtain possession of the security or a new certificated security, even from a bona fide purchaser, if the ineffectiveness of the purported indorsement can be asserted against him under the provisions of this Article on unauthorized indorsements (Section 8-311).

(3) The right to obtain or reclaim possession of a certificated security or to compel the origination of a transfer instruction may be specifically enforced and [its] the transfer of a certificated or uncertificated security enjoined and [the] a certificated security impounded pending the litigation.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The coverage of this section is broadened to include remedies for the wrongful transfer of both certificated and uncertificated securities. Subparagraph (c) is added to subsection (1) to establish the alternative remedy of compelling the origination of an instruction to transfer an equivalent uncertificated security which is the functional equivalent of subparagraph (b).

Subsection (2) is applicable only to certificated securities and language is added to make that clear. The right to specific enforcement provided in subsection (3) is extended to the origination of a transfer instruction and the right to enjoin transfer is made applicable to both certificated and uncertificated securities.

§ 8-316. Purchaser's Right to Requisites for Registration of Transfer, Pledge, or Release on Books.

Unless otherwise agreed, the transferor of a certificated security or the transferor, pledgor, or pledgee of an uncertificated security [must] on due demand must supply his purchaser with any proof of his authority to transfer, pledge, or release or with any other requisite [which may be] necessary to obtain registration of the transfer, pledge, or release of the security; but if the transfer, pledge, or release is not for value, a transferor, pledgor, or pledgee need not do so unless the purchaser furnishes the necessary expenses. Failure within a reasonable time to comply with a demand made [within a reasonable time] gives the purchaser the right to reject or rescind the transfer, pledge, or release.

Reasons for 1977 Change

Language has been added to this section in order to broaden its coverage to both certificated and uncertificated securities. Because uncertificated securities are not only transferred, but also can be pledged and released by registration, language has been added to include such transactions.

§ 8-317. [Attachment or Levy Upon Security] Creditors' Rights.

(1) Subject to the exceptions in subsections (3) and (4), no attachment or levy upon a certificated security or any share or other interest [evidenced] represented thereby which is outstanding [shall be] is valid until the security is actually seized by the officer making the attachment or levy, but a certificated security which has been surrendered to the issuer may be [attached or levied upon at the source] reached by a creditor by legal process at the issuer's chief executive office in the United States.

(2) An uncertificated security registered in the name of the debtor may not be reached by a creditor except by legal process at the issuer's chief executive office in the United States.

(3) The interest of a debtor in a certificated security that is in the possession of a secured party not a financial intermediary or in an uncertificated security registered in the name of a secured party not a financial intermediary (or in the name of a nominee of the secured party) may be reached by a creditor by legal process upon the secured party.

(4) The interest of a debtor in a certificated security that is in the possession of or registered in the name of a financial intermediary or in an uncertificated security registered in the name of a financial intermediary may be reached by a creditor by legal process upon the financial intermediary on whose books the interest of the debtor appears.

(5) Unless otherwise provided by law, a creditor's lien upon the interest of a debtor in a security obtained pursuant to subsection (3) or (4) is not a restraint on the transfer of the security, free of the lien, to a third party for new value; but in the event of a transfer, the lien applies to the proceeds of the transfer in the hands of the secured party or financial intermediary, subject to any claims having priority.

(6) [(2)] A creditor whose debtor is the owner of a security [shall be] is entitled to [such] aid from courts of appropriate jurisdiction, by injunction or otherwise, in reaching [such] the security or in satisfying the claim by means [thereof as is] allowed at law or in equity in regard to property [which] that cannot readily be [attached or levied upon] reached by ordinary legal process.

Reasons for 1977 Change

This section has been substantially rewritten and expanded, not only to provide for the rights of creditors of the owners of uncertificated securities, but also to provide expressly for remedies against the interest of debtors in certificated securities which are not within the debtor's control. It is one of the three sections in this revision in which it is intended to extend the coverage of Article 8 as to certificated securities. Sections 8-313 and 8-321 are the others.

Subsection (1) states the rule of the present statute for certificated securities which provides that a creditor's lien upon a certificated security is not valid until actual seizure. The chief justification for this rule is the protection of purchasers from the debtor. The rule is entirely appropriate when the security is within the debtor's control. When the debtor does not have such control, the rule has no function.

The present statute recognizes a single exception to the rule where the security has been surrendered to the issuer. New subsection (1) includes this exception and expressly provides that such a security can be reached by serving the issuer at its chief executive office, replacing the cryptic phrase "at the source." The most logical place to serve the issuer would be the place where the transfer records are maintained, but that location might be difficult to identify, especially when the separate elements of a computer network might be situated in different places. The chief executive office is selected as the appropriate place by analogy to Section 9-103(3)(d).

Subsection (2) provides that process upon the issuer is the only method for a creditor to reach an uncertificated security registered in the name of the debtor. This conclusion was reached with some reluctance since it requires a creditor to institute legal action and/or a debtor to defend that action in a jurisdiction which may have no relationship to either of the parties or the dispute other than the happenstance that the debtor owns a security of the particular issuer. Nevertheless, attempts to formulate a procedure by which even a judgment creditor could effectively reach his debtor's uncertificated securities without such legal action resulted in what seemed to be an intolerable burden for issuers.

Subsection (3) provides a second exception to the seizure rule when a certificated security is in the possession of a secured party. In such a case, an effective lien can be established by service on the secured party without depriving him of his possession. This section does not attempt to provide for rights as between the creditor and the secured party, as, for example, whether or when the secured party must liquidate the security. For essentially the same reasons, subsection (3) also covers the case where an uncertificated security has been transferred into the name of a secured party either at the inception of the loan or thereafter.

Subsection (4) recognizes that certificated securities are frequently held in account for customers by banks or brokers and that such securities may be registered not only in the name of the debtor but, more commonly, in street or other nominee name. Additionally, in such cases, the securities may have been commingled, repledged or deposited so that no particular security could be identified as that of the debtor. The subsection provides that the debtor's account can be reached by process upon the entity upon whose books the interest of the debtor appears. This appears to be the most effective way of preventing the transfer of the debtor's interest and thus protecting the creditor. It is only that entity that is aware of the debtor's interest, irrespective of where the securities are located or in what name they happen to be registered. For the same reason, subsection (4) also covers the case where uncertificated securities are registered in street name.

Subsection (5) expressly provides that securities in which the debtor's interest is reached pursuant to subsections (3) or (4) may be transferred for new value, free of the creditor's lien, but, when and if they are, that the lien will be transferred to the proceeds. Nothing in subsection (5) is intended to validate any transfer that would otherwise constitute a fraudulent conveyance. Furthermore, subsection (5) is expressly subject to the procedural laws of the states and no attempt has been made to prescribe the consequences of obtaining such a lien or the procedures for its enforcement.

Particular terms to describe creditor's process have been avoided in this section. This section is not intended to have any effect on the availability of garnishment or similar third-party process as a pre-judgment or post-judgment remedy. Such matters are a proper concern of the procedural rules of the states, subject, of course, to constitutional limitations.

§ 8-318. No Conversion by Good Faith [Delivery] Conduct.

An agent or bailee who in good faith (including observance of reasonable commercial standards if he is in the business of buying, selling*,* or otherwise dealing with securities) has received certificated securities and sold, pledged*,* or delivered them or has sold or caused the transfer or pledge of uncertificated securities over which he had control according to the instructions of his principal*,* is not liable for conversion or for participation in breach of fiduciary duty although the principal [has] had no right [to dispose of them] so to deal with the securities.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The section which exonerates the agent or bailee who has made a good faith sale, pledge or delivery of certificated securities has been broadened to provide similar protection for similar parties engaging in similar activities with respect to uncertificated securities.

§ 8-319. Statute of Frauds.

A contract for the sale of securities is not enforceable by way of action or defense unless*:*

(a) there is some writing signed by the party against whom enforcement is sought or by his authorized agent or broker*,* sufficient to indicate that a contract has been made for sale of a stated quantity of described securities at a defined or stated price; [or]

(b) delivery of [the] a certificated security or transfer instruction has been accepted*, or transfer of an uncertificated security has been registered and the transferee has failed to send written objection to the issuer within*

10 days after receipt of the initial transaction statement confirming the registration, or payment has been made*,* but the contract is enforceable under this provision only to the extent of [such] the delivery*, registration,* or payment; [or]

(c) within a reasonable time a writing in confirmation of the sale or purchase and sufficient against the sender under paragraph (a) has been received by the party against whom enforcement is sought and he has failed to send written objection to its contents within [ten] 10 days after its receipt; or

(d) the party against whom enforcement is sought admits in his pleading, testimony*,* or otherwise in court that a contract was made for the sale of a stated quantity of described securities at a defined or stated price.

Reasons for 1977 Change

This section extends the coverage of the statute of frauds to contracts for the sale of both certificated and uncertificated securities. The performance exceptions of paragraph (b) now include the acceptance of a transfer instruction by the alleged transferee and the registration of transfer of an uncertificated security to which registration the alleged transferee has not objected in writing within ten days after receiving the initial transaction statement confirming such registration. These additions, while necessary to enforcement against the alleged transferee, are unnecessary with respect to the transferor since each will almost certainly involve a writing signed by the transferor and thus will be within paragraph (a).

§ 8-320. Transfer or Pledge Within [a] Central Depository System.

(1) In addition to other methods, a transfer, pledge, or release of a security or any interest therein may be effected by the making of appropriate entries on the books of a clearing corporation reducing the account of the transferor, pledgor, or pledgee and increasing the account of the transferee, pledgee, or pledgor by the amount of the obligation, or the number of shares or rights transferred, pledged, or released, if the security is shown on the account of a transferor, pledgor, or pledgee on the books of the clearing corporation; is subject to the control of the clearing corporation; and

(a) [(1)] if [a security] certificated,

(i) [(a)] is in the custody of [a] the clearing corporation*, another clearing corporation,* [or of] a custodian bank or a nominee of [either subject to the instructions of the clearing corporation] any of them; and

(ii) [(b)] is in bearer form or indorsed in blank by an appropriate person or registered in the name of the clearing corporation*,* [or] a custodian bank*,* or a nominee of [either] any of them; or [and]

(b) if uncertificated, is registered in the name of the clearing corporation, another clearing corporation, a custodian bank, or a nominee of any of them;

[(c) is shown on the account of a transferor or pledgor on the books of the clearing corporation;

then, in addition to other methods, a transfer or pledge of the security or any interest therein may be effected by the making of appropriate entries on the books of the clearing corporation reducing the account of the transferor or pledgor and increasing the account of the transferee or pledgee by the amount of the obligation or the number of shares or rights transferred or pledged.]

(2) Under this section entries may be made with respect to like securities or interests therein as a part of a fungible bulk and may refer merely to a quantity of a particular security without reference to the name of the registered owner, certificate or bond number*,* or the like*,* and, in appropriate cases, may be on a net basis taking into account other transfer*,* [or] pledges*, or releases* of the same security.

(3) A transfer [or pledge] under this section [has the effect of a delivery of a security in bearer form or duly indorsed in blank (Section 8-301) representing the amount of the obligation or the number of shares or rights transferred or pledged] is effective (Section 8-313) and the purchaser acquires the rights of the transferor (Section 8-301). A pledge or release under this section is the transfer of a limited interest. If a pledge or the creation of a security interest is intended, [the making of entries has the effect of a taking of delivery by the pledgee or a secured party (Section 9-304 and 9-305)] the security interest is perfected at the time when both value is given by the pledgee and the appropriate entries are made (Section 8-321). A transferee or pledgee under this section [is a holder] may be a bona fide purchaser (Section 8-302).

(4) A transfer or pledge under this section [does] is not [constitute] a registration of transfer under Part 4 [of this Article].

(5) That entries made on the books of the clearing corporation as provided in subsection (1) are not appropriate does not affect the validity or effect of the entries [nor] or the liabilities or obligations of the clearing corporation to any person adversely affected thereby.

Reasons for 1977 Change

Changes have been made in this section to make it applicable to certificated and uncertificated securities. This will affect the operation of securities depositories in three ways. First, it will enable participants to add to their accounts with the depository by the registration of transfer of uncertificated securities to the depository or its nominee in addition to the current method of delivering certificated securities in negotiable form. Secondly, it will permit the depository to maintain its holdings of securities in uncertificated form, thus reducing custodial problems. Finally, it will permit the depository to transfer uncertificated securities out to its participants by causing the registration of transfer, as an alternative to the current method of maintaining an inventory of certificated securities for that purpose.

Subsection (1) has been restructured to make it clear that it covers securities that clearing corporation A may control through its account in clearing corporation B. The growing system of interfacing depositories makes such clarification desirable.

Subsection (3) has been rewritten to address certain consequences directly, rather than merely by analogy to the physical delivery of certificated securities.

§ 8-321. Enforceability, Attachment, Perfection and Termination of Security Interests.

(1) A security interest in a security is enforceable and can attach only if it is transferred to the secured party or a person designated by him pursuant to a provision of Section 8-313(1).

(2) A security interest so transferred pursuant to agreement by a transferor who has rights in the security to a transferee who has given value is a perfected security interest, but a security interest that has been transferred solely under paragraph (i) of Section 8-313(1) becomes unperfected after 21 days unless, within that time, the requirements for transfer under any other provision of Section 8-313(1) are satisfied.

(3) A security interest in a security is subject to the provisions of Article 9, but:

(a) no filing is required to perfect the security interest; and

(b) no written security agreement signed by the debtor is necessary to make the security interest enforceable, except as otherwise provided in paragraph (h), (i), or (j) of Section 8-313(1).

The secured party has the rights and duties provided under Section 9-207, to the extent they are applicable, whether or not the security is certificated, and, if certificated, whether or not it is in his possession.

(4) Unless otherwise agreed, a security interest in a security is terminated by transfer to the debtor or a person designated by him pursuant to a provision of Section 8-313(1). If a security is thus transferred, the security interest, if not terminated, becomes unperfected unless the security is certificated and is delivered to the debtor for the purpose of ultimate sale or exchange or presentation, collection, renewal, or registration of transfer. In that case, the security interest becomes unperfected after 21 days unless, within that time, the security (or securities for which it has been exchanged) is transferred to the secured party or a person designated by him pursuant to a provision of Section 8-313(1).

Reasons for 1977 Change

This is an entirely new section and is intended to govern the creation, perfection and termination of security interests in all securities, certificated and uncertificated. It is one of three sections in this revision in which it is intended to extend to coverage of Article 8 as to certificated securities. Sections 8-313 and 8-317 are the others. Several sections of Article 9 are made subject to or are affected by this section.

Subsection (1) provides that an effective transfer under Section 8-313(1) is an essential element to the creation of an enforceable security interest. Under present Section 9-203(1), an enforceable security interest can be created without possession if there is a written security agreement signed by the debtor. Under this revision, Section 9-203(1) is expressly made subject to this section.

Subsection (2) provides that when value has been given and the debtor has rights in the collateral, an appropriate transfer will result not only in an enforceable security interest but also in one that is perfected. Under this revision, an unperfected security interest in a security cannot be created. A security interest created by transfer under Section 8-313(1)(i), however, may become unperfected if, within 21 days, the requirements of another method of effective transfer are not satisfied. This produces the same result as present Section 9-304(4). Securities are expressly excluded from the coverage of Section 9-304(4).

Subsection (3) expressly makes a security interest in securities subject to the provisions of Article 9 except those provisions dealing with the creation and perfection of security interests. Those matters are governed by this section. In addition, the provisions of Section 9-207, which govern the rights and duties of the pledgee of a certificated security, are extended, to the extent they are applicable, to all secured parties, whether or not the possession of a certificated security is involved. Thus, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, the secured party, who might be the registered owner of an uncertificated security, would have the duty to remit dividends he received to the debtor or to apply them in reduction of the obligation under Section 9-207(2)(c).

Subsection (4) provides that a security interest is terminated by re-transfer to the debtor unless the parties otherwise agree. Even when the parties agree that the security interest is to continue, it will become unperfected unless there is delivery of a certificated security for the limited purposes described in the second sentence. This provision is intended to produce the same result as present Section 9-304(5) from the coverage of which securities are expressly excluded. The final sentence limits the continued perfection to a 21 day period, as does Section 9-304(5), and requires re-transfer to the secured party, in a manner analogous to Section 9-304(6), as a condition of continued or renewed perfection.

REGISTRATION

§ 8-401. Duty of Issuer to Register Transfer, Pledge, or Release.

(1) [Where] If a certificated security in registered form is presented to the issuer with a request to register transfer[,] or an instruction is presented to the issuer with a request to register transfer, pledge, or release, the issuer [is under a duty to] shall register the transfer*, pledge, or release* as requested if*:*

(a) the security is indorsed or the instruction was originated by the appropriate person or persons (Section 8-308); [and]

(b) reasonable assurance is given that those indorsements or instructions are genuine and effective (Section 8-402); [and]

(c) the issuer has no duty [to inquire into] as to adverse claims or has discharged [any such] the duty (Section 8-403); [and]

(d) any applicable law relating to the collection of taxes has been complied with; and

(e) the transfer*, pledge, or release* is in fact rightful or is to a bona fide purchaser.

(2) [Where] If an issuer is under a duty to register a transfer*, pledge, or release* of a security*,* the issuer is also liable to the person presenting a certificated security or an instruction [it] for registration or his principal for loss resulting from any unreasonable delay in registration or from failure or refusal to register the transfer*, pledge, or release*.

Reasons for 1977 Change

Subsection (1) states the duty of the issuer to honor instructions to register the transfer, pledge or release of uncertificated securities in the same terms and with the same conditions that the present statute imposes with respect to the registration of transfer of certificated securities.

The issuer's liability under subsection (2) is extended to cover losses resulting from failure to take timely action with respect to instructions to transfer, pledge or release uncertificated securities.

§ 8-402. Assurance that Indorsements and Instructions Are Effective.

(1) The issuer may require the following assurance that each necessary indorsement of a certificated security or each instruction (Section 8-308) is genuine and effective*:*

(a) in all cases, a guarantee of the signature ([subsection (1) of] Section 8-312*(1) or (2)*) of the person indorsing a certificated security or originating an instruction including, in the case of an instruction, a warranty of the taxpayer identification number or, in the absence thereof, other reasonable assurance of identity; [and]

(b) [where] if the indorsement is made or the instruction is originated by an agent, appropriate assurance of authority to sign;

(c) [where] if the indorsement is made or the instruction is originated by a fiduciary, appropriate evidence of appointment or incumbency;

(d) [where] if there is more than one fiduciary, reasonable assurance that all who are required to sign have done so; and

(e) [where] if the indorsement is made or the instruction is originated by a person not covered by any of the foregoing, assurance appropriate to the case corresponding as nearly as may be to the foregoing.

(2) A "guarantee of the signature" in subsection (1) means a guarantee signed by or on behalf of a person reasonably believed by the issuer to be responsible. The issuer may adopt standards with respect to responsibility [provided such standards] if they are not manifestly unreasonable.

(3) "Appropriate evidence of appointment or incumbency" in subsection (1) means*:*

(a) in the case of a fiduciary appointed or qualified by a court, a certificate issued by or under the direction or supervision of that court or an officer thereof and dated within [sixty] 60 days before the date of presentation for transfer*, pledge, or release*; or

(b) in any other case, a copy of a document showing the appointment or a certificate issued by or on behalf of a person reasonably believed by the issuer to be responsible or, in the absence of [such a] that document or certificate, other evidence reasonably deemed by the issuer to be appropriate. The issuer may adopt standards with respect to [such] the evidence [provided such standards] if they are not manifestly unreasonable. The issuer is not charged with notice of the contents of any document obtained pursuant to this paragraph (b) except to the extent that the contents relate directly to the appointment or incumbency.

(4) The issuer may elect to require reasonable assurance beyond that specified in this section*,* but if it does so and*,* for a purpose other than that specified in subsection (3)(b), both requires and obtains a copy of a will, trust, indenture, articles of co-partnership, by-laws*,* or other controlling instrument*,* it is charged with notice of all matters contained therein affecting the transfer*, pledge, or release*.

Reasons for 1977 Change

This section has been modified so as to permit the issuer to require, as a condition of honoring an instruction, precisely the same assurances and supplementary documentation as the present section permits the issuer to require as a condition of registering the transfer of a certificated security. In addition, under the last phrase of subparagraph (1)(a) the issuer may require either a warranty of the taxpayer identification number on an instruction as provided in Section 8-312(2)(d) or other evidence of identity.

§ 8-403. [Limited Duty of Inquiry] Issuer's Duty as to Adverse Claims.

(1) An issuer to whom a certificated security is presented for registration [is under a duty to] shall inquire into adverse claims if:

(a) a written notification of an adverse claim is received at a time and in a manner [which affords] affording the issuer a reasonable opportunity to act on it prior to the issuance of a new, reissued*,* or re-registered certificated security*,* and the notification identifies the claimant, the registered owner*,* and the issue of which the security is a part*,* and provides an address for communications directed to the claimant; or

(b) the issuer is charged with notice of an adverse claim from a controlling instrument [which] it has elected to require under [subsection (4) of] Section 8-402*(4)*.

(2) The issuer may discharge any duty of inquiry by any reasonable means, including notifying an adverse claimant by registered or certified mail at the address furnished by him or, if there be no such address, at his residence or regular place of business that the certificated security has been presented for registration of transfer by a named person, and that the transfer will be registered unless within [thirty] 30 days from the date of mailing the notification, either*:*

(a) an appropriate restraining order, injunction, or other process issues from a court of competent jurisdiction; or

(b) there is filed with the issuer an indemnity bond, sufficient in the issuer's judgment to protect the issuer and any transfer agent, registrar, or other agent of the issuer involved[,] from any loss [which] it or they may suffer by complying with the adverse claim [is filed with the issuer].

(3) Unless an issuer is charged with notice of an adverse claim from a controlling instrument which it has elected to require under [subsection (4) of] Section 8-402*(4)* or receives notification of an adverse claim under subsection (1) [of this section, where], if a certificated security presented for registration is indorsed by the appropriate person or persons the issuer is under no duty to inquire into adverse claims. In particular*:*

(a) an issuer registering a certificated security in the name of a person who is a fiduciary or who is described as a fiduciary is not bound to inquire into the existence, extent, or correct description of the fiduciary relationship*;* and thereafter the issuer may assume without inquiry that the newly registered owner continues to be the fiduciary until the issuer receives written notice that the fiduciary is no longer acting as such with respect to the particular security;

(b) an issuer registering transfer on an indorsement by a fiduciary is not bound to inquire whether the transfer is made in compliance with a controlling instrument or with the law of the state having jurisdiction of the fiduciary relationship, including any law requiring the fiduciary to obtain court approval of the transfer; and

(c) the issuer is not charged with notice of the contents of any court record or file or other recorded or unrecorded document even though the document is in its possession and even though the transfer is made on the indorsement of a fiduciary to the fiduciary himself or to his nominee.

(4) An issuer is under no duty as to adverse claims with respect to an uncertificated security except:

(a) claims embodied in a restraining order, injunction, or other legal process served upon the issuer if the process was served at a time and in a manner affording the issuer a reasonable opportunity to act on it in accordance with the requirements of subsection (5);

(b) claims of which the issuer has received a written notification from the registered owner or the registered pledgee if the notification was received at a time and in a manner affording the issuer a reasonable opportunity to act on it in accordance with the requirements of subsection (5);

(c) claims (including restrictions on transfer not imposed by the issuer) to which the registration of transfer to the present registered owner was subject and were so noted in the initial transaction statement sent to him; and

(d) claims as to which an issuer is charged with notice from a controlling instrument it has elected to require under Section 8-402(4).

(5) If the issuer of an uncertificated security is under a duty as to an adverse claim, he discharges that duty by:

(a) including a notation of the claim in any statements sent with respect to the security under Sections 8-408(3), (6), and (7); and

(b) refusing to register the transfer or pledge of the security unless the nature of the claim does not preclude transfer or pledge subject thereto.

(6) If the transfer or pledge of the security is registered subject to an adverse claim, a notation of the claim must be included in the initial transaction statement and all subsequent statements sent to the transferee and pledgee under Section 8-408.

(7) Notwithstanding subsections (4) and (5), if an uncertificated security was subject to a registered pledge at the time the issuer first came under a duty as to a particular adverse claim, the issuer has no duty as to that claim if transfer of the security is requested by the registered pledgee or an appropriate person acting for the registered pledgee unless:

(a) the claim was embodied in legal process which expressly provides otherwise;

(b) the claim was asserted in a written notification from the registered pledgee;

(c) the claim was one as to which the issuer was charged with notice from a controlling instrument it required under Section 8-402(4) in connection with the pledgee's request for transfer; or

(d) the transfer requested is to the registered owner.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The present law permits an adverse claimant to delay the registration of transfer of a certificated security by thirty days merely by sending a timely written notification to the issuer identifying the claimant, registered owner and issue and giving an address for communications. This rather loose procedure has not constituted a serious problem for two reasons. First, the transfer of a certificated security is effected by delivery and the rights of the parties are established before the security is presented to the issuer for registration. More significantly, the bona fide purchaser of a security takes free of adverse claims and claims known to the issuer need not be known to him.

The present system enables the claimant to assert his rights in court before the issuer lets a new certificated security loose which might find its way into the hands of a bona fide purchaser. He can effectively do so, of course, only when the rights of a bona fide purchaser have not already intervened, but, in that minority of instances, he does receive protection. Conversely, the ease with which a claimant can register his claim with the issuer is not a great burden on the owner since the clean certificate in his hands gives him the power to transfer to a bona fide purchaser free of the adverse claim. Thus, the present statute requires no notice to the owner when a claim is filed with the issuer and the claim has no effect on transactions until the certificate is presented for registration of transfer. By then, the effect is usually limited to mere delay.

With uncertificated securities, however, transfer does not take place until registration so that any mandated delay seriously impairs an owner's ability to sell or pledge his security. Since a prudent purchaser may not pay until he receives a clean initial transaction statement, the effect of a mere letter notifying the issuer of an adverse claim, however frivolous, would be disastrous. Because of this important difference, the rules of the present section, in subsections (1), (2) and (3) have been restated, unchanged, but limited to situations involving only certificated securities. New rules, applying only to uncertificated securities, are set forth in subsections (4), (5) and (6) and are intended to accommodate the interests of owners, purchasers, issuers and adverse claimants.

Subsection (4) states that an issuer has no duty as to adverse claims except in four described situations. Mere written notifications result in a duty only when they come from existing owners and pledgees and are analogous to stop payment orders on checks. There is a duty as to claims to which the security was subject when it was purchased by the present owner, a situation with which the owner is already familiar. There is a duty as to claims arising from the issuer's request for documentation under Section 8-402.

The significant difference is that claims asserted by third parties, in order to impose a duty on the issuer, must be supported by legal process. This will constitute assurance that the claim is not merely frivolous and that its assertion is more than harassment. In most cases the owner will have been notified and have had the opportunity to be heard. While claims thus asserted may ultimately be adjudged invalid, the owner will not be tied up by a bare written communication from the claimant. On the other hand, while a more substantial burden is imposed on the claimant, there is a channel through which he can assert his claim before the rights of a bona fide purchaser intervene.

Once it is established that the claim imposes a duty on the issuer, notations of the claim must be contained in all statements sent with respect to the security and registration of transfer or pledge must be refused unless the nature of the claim is consistent with transfer or pledge subject to the claim. When transfer or pledge is registered subject to the claim, the final sentence of subsection (5) requires that the claim be noted in all statements sent to the transferee or pledgee.

Subsection (7) deals with the situation where an uncertificated security is already subject to a registered pledge when the issuer first learns of an adverse claim as to which he has a duty. In that event, the registered pledgee who became such without notice of the claim may be a bona fide purchaser with the right to transfer the security free of the claim. That right cannot be curtailed by the claim of a third party (including the registered owner) unless legal process embodying the claim expressly deals with the pledgee's interest. There is obviously no curtailment of the pledgee's right when the claim is asserted by the pledgee himself. It should be curtailed if the pledgee's right to obtain registration of transfer is called into question by a controlling instrument which the issuer elects to require before acting on the pledgee's request. Since the transfer to the registered owner is the equivalent of a release of the pledge, such a transfer should not terminate the issuer's duty as to the claim.

§ 8-404. Liability and Non-Liability for Registration.

(1) Except as [otherwise] provided in any law relating to the collection of taxes, the issuer is not liable to the owner*, pledgee,* or any other person suffering loss as a result of the registration of a transfer*, pledge, or release* of a security if*:*

(a) there were on or with [the] a certificated security the necessary indorsements or the issuer had received an instruction originated by an appropriate person (Section 8-308); and

(b) the issuer had no duty [to inquire into] as to adverse claims or has discharged [any such] the duty (Section 8-403).

(2) [Where] If an issuer has registered a transfer of a certificated security to a person not entitled to it*,* the issuer on demand [must] shall deliver a like security to the true owner unless*:*

(a) the registration was pursuant to subsection (1); [or]

(b) the owner is precluded from asserting any claim for registering the transfer under [subsection (1) of the following section] Section 8-405(1); or

(c) [such] the delivery would result in overissue, in which case the issuer's liability is governed by Section 8-104.

(3) If an issuer has improperly registered a transfer, pledge, or release of an uncertificated security, the issuer on demand from the injured party shall restore the records as to the injured party to the condition that would have obtained if the improper registration had not been made unless:

(a) the registration was pursuant to subsection (1); or

(b) the registration would result in overissue, in which case the issuer's liability is governed by Section 8-104.

Reasons for 1977 Change

Subsection (1) exonerates the issuer from liability to any person arising from registration of transfer, pledge or release of an uncertificated security under the same conditions that the present statute provides with respect to the registration of transfer of a certificated security.

The remedy for improper registration under subsection (2), i.e., the delivery of a like security to the true owner, is inapplicable to uncertificated securities. Thus, subsection (3) provides an analogous remedy for uncertificated securities, the restoration of the records to their proper condition. The same exception is made in the event of overissue. The exception of paragraph (2)(b) is inapplicable to uncertificated securities which, by definition, cannot be lost, destroyed or stolen, and is omitted from subsection (3).

§ 8-405. Lost, Destroyed, and Stolen Certificated Securities.

(1) [Where] If a certificated security has been lost, apparently destroyed, or wrongfully taken, and the owner fails to notify the issuer of that fact within a reasonable time after he has notice of it and the issuer registers a transfer of the security before receiving [such a] notification, the owner is precluded from asserting against the issuer any claim for registering the transfer under [the preceding section] Section 8-404 or any claim to a new security under this section.

(2) [Where] If the owner of [the] a certificated security claims that the security has been lost, destroyed, or wrongfully taken, the issuer [must] shall issue a new certificated security or, at the option of the issuer, an equivalent uncertificated security in place of the original security if the owner*:*

(a) so requests before the issuer has notice that the security has been acquired by a bona fide purchaser; [and]

(b) files with the issuer a sufficient indemnity bond; and

(c) satisfies any other reasonable requirements imposed by the issuer.

(3) If, after the issue of [the] a new certificated or uncertificated security, a bona fide purchaser of the original certificated security presents it for registration of transfer, the issuer [must] shall register the transfer unless registration would result in overissue, in which event the issuer's liability is governed by Section 8-104. In addition to any rights on the indemnity bond, the issuer may recover the new certificated security from the person to whom it was issued or any person taking under him except a bona fide purchaser or may cancel the uncertificated security unless a bona fide purchaser or any person taking under a bona fide purchaser is then the registered owner or registered pledgee thereof.

Reasons for 1977 Change

Subsection (1) is applicable only to certificated securities, since only they can be lost, destroyed or stolen.

Subsection (2) permits the issuer to satisfy his obligation to replace a lost, destroyed or stolen certificated security by issuing a replacement in either certificated or uncertificated form. Such alternatives exist only when the particular issue is partly certificated and partly uncertificated. In that event, the owner may have the privilege of exchanging one for the other under Section 8-407, thus placing the ultimate option with him. Compare explanation of changes under Section 8-104.

§ 8-406. Duty of Authenticating Trustee, Transfer Agent, or Registrar.

(1) [Where] If a person acts as authenticating trustee, transfer agent, registrar, or other agent for an issuer in the registration of transfers of its certificated securities or in the registration of transfers, pledges, and releases of its uncertificated securities, [or] in the issue of new securities, or in the cancellation of surrendered securities*:*

(a) he is under a duty to the issuer to exercise good faith and due diligence in performing his functions; and

(b) [he has] with regard to the particular functions he performs*, he has* the same obligation to the holder or owner of [the] a certificated security or to the owner or pledgee of an uncertificated security and has the same rights and privileges as the issuer has in regard to those functions.

(2) Notice to an authenticating trustee, transfer agent, registrar or other [such] agent is notice to the issuer with respect to the functions performed by the agent.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The coverage of this section is broadened to include the agents of the issuers of both certificated and uncertificated securities.

§ 8-407. Exchangeability of Securities.

(1) No issuer is subject to the requirements of this section unless it regularly maintains a system for issuing the class of securities involved under which both certificated and uncertificated securities are regularly issued to the category of owners, which includes the person in whose name the new security is to be registered.

(2) Upon surrender of a certificated security with all necessary indorsements and presentation of a written request by the person surrendering the security, the issuer, if he has no duty as to adverse claims or has discharged the duty (Section 8-403), shall issue to the person or a person designated by him an equivalent uncertificated security subject to all liens, restrictions, and claims that were noted on the certificated security.

(3) Upon receipt of a transfer instruction originated by an appropriate person who so requests, the issuer of an uncertificated security shall cancel the uncertificated security and issue an equivalent certificated security on which must be noted conspicuously any liens and restrictions of the issuer and any adverse claims (as to which the issuer has a duty under Section 8-403(4)) to which the uncertificated security was subject. The certificated security shall be registered in the name of and delivered to:

(a) the registered owner, if the uncertificated security was not subject to a registered pledge; or

(b) the registered pledgee, if the uncertificated security was subject to a registered pledge.

Reasons for 1977 Change

This is an entirely new section which deals with the right of the holder of a certificated security to exchange it for an equivalent uncertificated security and the right of the registered owner or registered pledgee of an uncertificated security to obtain a certificated security in exchange for it. This section is applicable only in those situations where both certificated and uncertificated securities exist within the same issue and either form is available to the particular owner. Subsection (1) so limits its applicability.

Neither this nor any other section of this Article is intended to mandate the establishment or continuance of a dual system of registration. It is contemplated that some issuers may provide for both forms of securities on a more or less indefinite basis. Issuers of existing issues which are necessarily wholly certificated may make uncertificated securities available with the intention to phase out the certificated securities over a period of time. Some issuers, if permitted by relevant law, may restrict the availability of uncertificated securities to particular categories of owners, e.g., brokers, banks and institutions.

Subsections (2) and (3) establish the mechanism for exchange. When a certificated security is surrendered for exchange and the issuer has a duty as to adverse claims, that duty must be discharged before an equivalent uncertificated security can be issued. When an instruction requests the issuance of a certificated security in exchange for an uncertificated security, adverse claims as to which the issuer has a duty are to be noted conspicuously thereon. In either case, the existence of the issuer's duty is determined by the provisions of Section 8-403.

§ 8-408. Statements of Uncertificated Securities.

(1) Within 2 business days after the transfer of an uncertificated security has been registered, the issuer shall send to the new registered owner and, if the security has been transferred subject to a registered pledge, to the registered pledgee a written statement containing:

(a) a description of the issue of which the uncertificated security is a part;

(b) the number of shares or units transferred;

(c) the name and address and any taxpayer identification number of the new registered owner and, if the security has been transferred subject to a registered pledge, the name and address and any taxpayer identification number of the registered pledgee;

(d) a notation of any liens and restrictions of the issuer and any adverse claims (as to which the issuer has a duty under Section 8-403(4)) to which the uncertificated security is or may be subject at the time of registration or a statement that there are none of those liens, restrictions, or adverse claims; and

(e) the date the transfer was registered.

(2) Within 2 business days after the pledge of an uncertificated security has been registered, the issuer shall send to the registered owner and the registered pledgee a written statement containing:

(a) a description of the issue of which the uncertificated security is a part;

(b) the number of shares or units pledged;

(c) the name and address and any taxpayer identification number of the registered owner and the registered pledgee;

(d) a notation of any liens and restrictions of the issuer and any adverse claims (as to which the issuer has a duty under Section 8-403(4)) to which the uncertificated security is or may be subject at the time of registration or a statement that there are none of those liens, restrictions, or adverse claims; and

(e) the date the pledge was registered.

(3) Within 2 business days after the release from pledge of an uncertificated security has been registered, the issuer shall send to the registered owner and the pledgee whose interest was released a written statement containing:

(a) a description of the issue of which the uncertificated security is a part;

(b) the number of shares or units released from pledge;

(c) the name and address and any taxpayer identification number of the registered owner and the pledgee whose interest was released;

(d) a notation of any liens and restrictions of the issuer and any adverse claims (as to which the issuer has a duty under Section 8-403(4)) to which the uncertificated security is or may be subject at the time of registration or a statement that there are none of those liens, restrictions or adverse claims; and

(e) the date the release was registered.

(4) An "initial transaction statement" is the statement sent to:

(a) the new registered owner and, if applicable, to the registered pledgee pursuant to subsection (1);

(b) the registered pledgee pursuant to subsection (2); or

(c) the registered owner pursuant to subsection (3).

Each initial transaction statement shall be signed by or on behalf of the issuer and must be identified as "Initial Transaction Statement".

(5) Within 2 business days after the transfer of an uncertificated security has been registered, the issuer shall send to the former registered owner and the former registered pledgee, if any, a written statement containing:

(a) a description of the issue of which the uncertificated security is a part;

(b) the number of shares or units transferred;

(c) the name and address and any taxpayer identification number of the former registered owner and of any former registered pledgee; and

(d) the date the transfer was registered.

(6) At periodic intervals no less frequent than annually and at any time upon the reasonable written request of the registered owner, the issuer shall send to the registered owner of each uncertificated security a dated written statement containing:

(a) a description of the issue of which the uncertificated security is a part;

(b) the name and address and any taxpayer identification number of the registered owner;

(c) the number of shares or units of the uncertificated security registered in the name of the registered owner on the date of the statement;

(d) the name and address and any taxpayer identification number of any registered pledgee and the number of shares or units subject to the pledge; and

(e) a notation of any liens and restrictions of the issuer and any adverse claims (as to which the issuer has a duty under Section 8-403(4)) to which the uncertificated security is or may be subject or a statement that there are none of those liens, restrictions, or adverse claims.

(7) At periodic intervals no less frequent than annually and at any time upon the reasonable written request of the registered pledgee, the issuer shall send to the registered pledgee of each uncertificated security a dated written statement containing:

(a) a description of the issue of which the uncertificated security is a part;

(b) the name and address and any taxpayer identification number of the registered owner;

(c) the name and address and any taxpayer identification number of the registered pledgee;

(d) the number of shares or units subject to the pledge; and

(e) a notation of any liens and restrictions of the issuer and any adverse claims (as to which the issuer has a duty under Section 8-403(4)) to which the uncertificated security is or may be subject or a statement that there are none of those liens, restrictions, or adverse claims.

(8) If the issuer sends the statements described in subsections (6) and (7) at periodic intervals no less frequent than quarterly, the issuer is not obliged to send additional statements upon request unless the owner or pledgee requesting them pays to the issuer the reasonable cost of furnishing them.

(9) Each statement sent pursuant to this section must bear a conspicuous legend reading substantially as follows: "This statement is merely a record of the rights of the addressee as of the time of its issuance. Delivery of this statement, of itself, confers no rights on the recipient. This statement is neither a negotiable instrument nor a security."

Reasons for 1977 Change

This is an entirely new section which obliges the issuer of uncertificated securities to send certain statements. The required statements are of two types. Transaction statements, required by subsections (1), (2), (3) and (5), are analogous to debit and credit advices and the periodic statements can be reconciled from them. Periodic statements, required by subsections (6) and (7) are analogous to bank statements and will advise owners and pledgees of their positions at given points in time.

The transaction statements, which are mandated upon the registration of transfer, pledge or release, must be sent within two days after the relevant registration, but it is contemplated that such statements will be prepared virtually simultaneously with the actual registration and sent immediately thereafter.

The transaction statements are intended to serve two functions. They are notice to the transferor (the owner in the case of a transfer or pledge or the pledgee in the case of a release or the transfer of a security subject to a pledge) that his interest has been reduced. In the event of fraudulent, unauthorized or otherwise improper registration, the transaction statement will serve as notice that timely action should be taken.

More importantly, these statements are notice to the transferee (new owner in the case of a transfer, pledgee in the case of a pledge, present owner in the case of a release) that the increase of his interest has, in fact, been registered. Furthermore, since all statements except those required by subsection (5) must include a notation of defects or an express statement that there are none, these statements will give the transferee the assurance equivalent to that afforded by a "clean" certificated security and create an estoppel against the issuer.

It is contemplated that transferees will and should be able to rely on these statements and, in many cases, will not part with their consideration until they receive them. In order that they will have the desired effect of establishing rights for the transferee against the issuer, subsection (4) requires that the copy of each transaction statement sent to the transferee, called an "initial transaction statement," be signed. Note that Section 1-201(39) does not require a manual signature for compliance with this requirement. Compare also Sections 8-103(b), 8-105(3)(d), 8-202, 8-204(b), 8-205, 8-206, 8-208, 8-304 and 8-313(3) for the effects of initial transaction statements.

The frequency of one year, with which periodic statements must be sent to owners and pledgees, is intended to be a minimum requirement for all issuers, including closely held corporations. Owners and pledgees are entitled to request additional statements of position at any time. It is contemplated, however, that publicly held issuers will adopt the practice of sending quarterly statements conforming to the common practice of sending quarterly reports and dividend checks. For those that do, subsection (8) eliminates the obligation to furnish additional statements of position on request unless the issuer is reimbursed for the additional cost.

Subsection (9) requires a conspicuous legend to be borne by each statement as a protection against unjustified reliance on statements of uncertificated securities by persons who might deal with them. Other than the aforesaid legend, the form of the statements required by this section is not prescribed. Perhaps the forms now used by the transfer agents of mutual funds to confirm acquisitions, dispositions, reinvestment of dividends, periodic liquidations and statements of position might serve as a model.

Amendments to Article 9 (1972 Official Text)

§ 9-103. Perfection of Security Interests in Multiple State Transactions.

(3) Accounts, general intangibles and mobile goods.

(a) This subsection applies to accounts (other than an account described in subsection (5) on minerals) and general intangibles (other than uncertificated securities) and to goods . . ..

(6) Uncertificated securities.

The law (including the conflict of laws rules) of the jurisdiction of organization of the issuer governs the perfection and the effect of perfection or non-perfection of a security interest in uncertificated securities.

Reasons for 1977 Change

Uncertificated securities are included in the definition of "General intangibles" under Section 9-106. Since the perfection of a security interest in an uncertificated security is normally accomplished by registration of pledge or transfer under Article 8, uncertificated securities are excluded from the coverage of subsection (3) under which the location of the debtor would govern. New subsection (6) prescribes the law of the issuer's jurisdiction of organization as the governing law, consistent with Section 8-106.

§ 9-105. Definitions and Index of Definitions.

(1) In this Article unless the context otherwise requires:

(i) "Instrument" means a negotiable instrument (defined in Section 3-104), or a certificated security (defined in Section 8-102) or . . .

Reasons for 1977 Change

Because Section 8-102 now defines "security" as either a certificated or an uncertificated security, the word "certificated" is inserted to limit the definition only to those securities which are represented by instruments.

§ 9-203. Attachment and Enforceability of Security Interest; Proceeds; Formal Requisites.

(1) Subject to the provisions of Section 4-208 on the security interest of a collecting bank*, Section 8-321 on security interests in securities* and Section 9-113 on a security interest arising under the Article on Sales, a security interest is not enforceable against the debtor or third parties with respect to the collateral and does not attach unless*:*

(a) the collateral is in the possession of the secured party pursuant to agreement, or the debtor has signed a security agreement which contains a description of the collateral and in addition, when the security interest covers crops growing or to be grown or timber to be cut, a description of the land concerned; [and]

(b) value has been given; and

(c) the debtor has rights in the collateral.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The added language in subsection (1) expressly makes this section subject to Section 8-321. Section 8-321(1) provides that an enforceable security interest in a security can be created only by a transfer which complies with Section 8-313(1).

It should be noted that both subsection (1) of this section and Section 8-321(2) contain the requirements that value be given and that the debtor have rights in the collateral. Subparagraph (1)(a) of this section, however, requires either possession by the secured party or a security agreement signed by the debtor. Of the various provisions of Section 8-313(1), some require possession by the secured party, some require a signed security agreement and the rest require procedures which are functionally equivalent to possession.

It is intended that compliance with some provision of Section 8-313(1) is essential to the creation of an enforceable security interest in a security and, conversely, that compliance with the requirements of subsection (1) of this section will not, of itself, suffice.

§ 9-302. When Filing is Required to Perfect Security Interest; Security Interests to Which Filing Provisions of This Article Do Not Apply.

(1) A financing statement must be filed to perfect all security interest[s] except the following:

(f) a security interest of a collecting bank (Section 4-208) or in securities (Section 8-321) or arising under the Article on Sales (see Section 9-113) or covered in subsection (3) of this section;

Reasons for 1977 Change

Section 8-321(2) provides that security interests in securities created in accordance with its provisions are perfected. Since none of its provisions, including the provisions of Section 8-313(1) incorporated therein, require filing, security interests in securities are excepted from the normal filing requirements of Article 9 by the language added to subparagraph (1)(f) of this section. Note that most of the requirements of Section 8-313(1) involve either possession or its functional equivalent.

§ 9-304. Perfection of Security Interest in Instruments, Documents, and Goods Covered by Documents; Perfection by Permissive Filing; Temporary Perfection Without Filing or Transfer of Possession.

(1) A security interest in chattel paper or negotiable documents may be perfected by filing. A security interest in money or instruments (other than certificated securities or instruments which constitute part of chattel paper) can be perfected only by the secured party's taking possession, except as provided in subsections (4) and (5) of this section and subsections (2) and (3) of Section 9-306 on proceeds.

(4) A security interest in instruments (other than certificated securities) or negotiable documents is perfected without filing or the taking of possession for a period of 21 days from the time it attaches to the extent that it arises for new value given under a written security agreement.

(5) A security interest remains perfected for a period of 21 days without filing where a secured party having a perfected security interest in an instrument (other than a certificated security), a negotiable document or goods in possession of a bailee other than one who has issued a negotiable document therefor:

(b) delivers the instrument to the debtor for the purpose of ultimate sale or exchange or of presentation, collection, renewal, or registration of transfer.

(6) After the 21 day period in subsections (4) and (5) perfection depends upon compliance with applicable provisions of this Article.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The definition of "instrument" in Section 9-105(1)(i) includes a certificated security and the perfection of security interests in all securities is governed by Section 8-321. Hence, certificated securities are expressly excluded from this section.

Note that a perfected security interest under Section 8-321 must be created by a transfer under Section 8-313(1) which, when certificated securities are involved, requires possession or a functional equivalent thereof. The 21 day initial grace period of subsection (4) is reflected in Section 8-313(1)(i) and the reference thereto in Section 8-321(2). The 21 day grace period of subsection (5) is reflected in Section 8-321(4).

§ 9-305. When Possession by Secured Party Perfects Security Interest Without Filing.

A security interest in letters of credit and advices of credit (subsection (2)(a) of Section 5-116), goods, instruments (other than certificated securities), money, negotiable documents, or chattel paper may be perfected by the secured party's taking possession of the collateral. If such collateral other than goods covered by a negotiable document is held by a bailee, the secured party is deemed to have possession from the time the bailee receives notification of the secured party's interest. A security interest is perfected by possession from the time possession is taken without relation back and continues only so long as possession is retained, unless otherwise specified in this Article. The security interest may be otherwise perfected as provided in this Article before or after the period of possession by the secured party.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The definition of "instrument" in Section 9-105(1)(i) includes a certificated security and the perfection of security interests in all securities is governed by Section 8-321. Hence, certificated securities are expressly excluded from this section.

The typical pledge of a certificated security is unaffected by this change since Section 8-313(1)(a) provides for transfer by delivery and Section 8-321(2) provides that a security interest thus transferred is perfected. Section 9-305 has been relied on to perfect security interests in securities in the hands of third parties (first pledgees, brokers, custodian banks, etc.) by notifying such third parties and assuming that they are bailees of certificated securities. When certificated securities have been repledged, held in nominee name or deposited in a securities depository, there is some doubt as to the identity of the bailee or, indeed, whether there is even an instrument that can be identified as the subject matter of the security interest.

The transfer rules of Section 8-313(1), which are incorporated in Section 8-321, are intended to settle such questions with respect to both certificated securities and uncertificated securities, which, by definition, cannot be "possessed." Note that Section 8-313(1)(h) deals explicitly with the problem of perfection by notice, provides that the notice be signed by the debtor-transferor and identifies the proper party to be notified.

§ 9-309. Protection of Purchasers of Instruments [and], Documents and Securities.

Nothing in this Article limits the rights of a holder in due course of a negotiable instrument (Section 3-302) or a holder to whom negotiable document of title has been duly negotiated (Section 7-501) or a bona fide purchaser of a security (Section [8-301] 8-302) and such holders or purchasers take priority over an earlier security interest even though perfected. Filing under this Article does not constitute notice of the security interest to such holders or purchasers.

Reasons for 1977 Change

This section presently resolves the conflict which may result when a financial intermediary or secured party wrongfully transfers a certificated security he controls. Since the term "security" now includes, under revised Section 8-102, uncertificated securities, this section will also cover the situation where a financial intermediary or secured party who is the registered owner or registered pledgee of an uncertificated security wrongfully causes the registration of transfer or pledge. In either case, a bona fide purchaser (including a pledgee) from the financial intermediary or secured party will prevail over a secured creditor of the beneficial owner who has created and perfected his security interest by notice to or acknowledgment from the wrongful transferor under Section 8-321.

§ 9-312. Priorities Among Conflicting Security Interests in the Same Collateral.

(7) If future advances are made while a security interest is perfected by filing [or], the taking of possession, or under Section 8-321 on securities, the security interest has the same priority for the purposes of subsection (5) with respect to the future advances as it does with respect to the first advance. If a commitment is made before or while the security interest is so perfected, the security interest has the same priority with respect to advances made pursuant thereto. In other cases a perfected security interest has priority from the date the advance is made.

Reasons for 1977 Change

The insertion in subsection (7) protects the future advances of a secured party who has perfected his security interest in securities under Section 8-321 even if the method did not involve his taking possession of the collateral.

Changes in Articles 1 and 5

§ 1-201. General Definitions.

Subject to additional definitions contained in the subsequent Articles of this Act which are applicable to specific Articles or Parts thereof, and unless the context otherwise requires, in this Act:

(5) "Bearer" means the person in possession of an instrument, document of title, or certificated security payable to bearer or indorsed in blank.

(14) "Delivery" with respect to instruments, documents of title, chattel paper, or certificated securities means voluntary transfer of possession.

(20) "Holder" means a person who is in possession of a document of title or an instrument or [an] a certificated investment security drawn, issued, or indorsed to him or his order or to bearer or in blank.

§ 5-114. Issuer's Duty and Privilege to Honor; Right to Reimbursement.

(2) Unless otherwise agreed when documents appear on their face to comply with the terms of a credit but a required document does not in fact conform to the warranties made on negotiation or transfer of a document of title (Section 7-507) or of a certificated security (Section 8-306) or is forged or fraudulent or there is fraud in the transaction:

(a) the issuer must honor the draft on demand for payment if honor is demanded by a negotiating bank or other holder of the draft or demand which has taken the draft or demand under the credit and under circumstances which would make it a holder in due course (Section 3-302) and in an appropriate case would make it a person to whom a document of title has been duly negotiated (Section 7-502) or a bona fide purchaser of a certificated security (Section 8-302); and

Reasons for 1977 Change

The foregoing insertions of the word "certificated" in two sections of Articles other than Article 8 and 9 are made in order to conform to the new definitions in Section 8-102. Without modification, the term "security" would include uncertificated securities as well as certificated securities.

APPENDIX D

Article 1 and Article 9: 1987 Conforming Amendments [Conforming to Article 2A]

§ 1-105. Territorial Application of the Act; Parties' Power to Choose Applicable Law.

(1) Except as provided hereafter in this section, when a transaction bears a reasonable relation to this state and also to another state or nation the parties may agree that the law either of this state or of such other state or nation shall govern their rights and duties. Failing such agreement this Act applies to transactions bearing an appropriate relation to this state.

(2) Where one of the following provisions of this Act specifies the applicable law, that provision governs and a contrary agreement is effective only to the extent permitted by the law (including the conflict of laws rules) so specified:

Rights of creditors against sold goods. Section 2-402.

Applicability of the Article on Leases. Sections 2A-105 and 2A-106.

Applicability of the Article on Bank Deposits and Collections. Section 4-102.

Bulk transfers subject to the Article on Bulk Transfers. Section 6-102.

Applicability of the Article on Investment Securities. Section 8-106.

Perfection provisions of the Article on Secured Transactions. Section 9-103.

Changes: Subsection (2) is amended to reference two sections of the Article on Leases (Article 2A), which is being promulgated at the same time as this amendment.

§ 1-201(37). General Definitions: "Security Interest".

(37) "Security interest" means an interest in personal property or fixtures which secures payment or performance of an obligation. The retention or reservation of title by a seller of goods notwithstanding shipment or delivery to the buyer (Section 2-401) is limited in effect to a reservation of a "security interest". The term also includes any interest of a buyer of accounts or chattel paper which is subject to Article 9. The special property interest of a buyer of goods on identification of ~~such~~ those goods to a contract for sale under Section 2-401 is not a "security interest", but a buyer may also acquire a "security interest" by complying with Article 9. Unless a ~~lease or~~ consignment is intended as security, reservation of title thereunder is not a "security interest", but a consignment ~~is~~ in any event is subject to the provisions on consignment sales (Section 2-326). ~~Whether a lease is intended as security is to be determined by the facts of each case; however, (a) the inclusion of an option to purchase does not of itself~~

~~make the lease one intended for security, and (b) an agreement that upon compliance with the terms of the lease the lessee shall become or has the option to become the owner of the property for no additional consideration or for a nominal consideration does make the lease one intended for security.~~

Whether a transaction creates a lease or security interest is determined by the facts of each case; however, a transaction creates a security interest if the consideration the lessee is to pay the lessor for the right to possession and use of the goods is an obligation for the term of the lease not subject to termination by the lessee, and

(a) the original term of the lease is equal to or greater than the remaining economic life of the goods,

(b) the lessee is bound to renew the lease for the remaining economic life of the goods or is bound to become the owner of the goods,

(c) the lessee has an option to renew the lease for the remaining economic life of the goods for no additional consideration or nominal additional consideration upon compliance with the lease agreement, or

(d) the lessee has an option to become the owner of the goods for no additional consideration or nominal additional consideration upon compliance with the lease agreement.

A transaction does not create a security interest merely because it provides that

(a) the present value of the consideration the lessee is obligated to pay the lessor for the right to possession and use of the goods is substantially equal to or is greater than the fair market value of the goods at the time the lease is entered into,

(b) the lessee assumes risk of loss of the goods, or agrees to pay taxes, insurance, filing, recording, or registration fees, or service or maintenance costs with respect to the goods,

(c) the lessee has an option to renew the lease or to become the owner of the goods,

(d) the lessee has an option to renew the lease for a fixed rent that is equal to or greater than the reasonably predictable fair market rent for the use of the goods for the term of the renewal at the time the option is to be performed, or

(e) the lessee has an option to become the owner of the goods for a fixed price that is equal to or greater than the reasonably predictable fair market value of the goods at the time the option is to be performed.

For purposes of this subsection (37):

(x) Additional consideration is not nominal if (i) when the option to renew the lease is granted to the lessee the rent is stated to be the fair market rent for the use of the goods for the term of the renewal determined at the time the option is to be performed, or (ii) when the option to become the owner of the goods is granted to the lessee the price is stated to be the fair market value of the goods determined at the time the option is to be performed. Additional consideration is nominal if it is less than the lessee's reasonably predictable cost of performing under the lease agreement if the option is not exercised;

(y) "Reasonably predictable" and "remaining economic life of the goods" are to be determined with reference to the facts and circumstances at the time the transaction is entered into; and

(z) "Present value" means the amount as of a date certain of one or more sums payable in the future, discounted to the date certain. The discount is determined by the interest rate specified by the parties if the rate is not manifestly unreasonable at the time the transaction is entered into; otherwise, the discount is determined by a commercially reasonable rate that takes into account the facts and circumstances of each case at the time the transaction was entered into.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 1-201(37), 1978 Official Text of the Act.

Changes: Substantially revised.

Purpose: This amendment to Section 1-201(37) is being promulgated at the same time that the Article on Leases (Article 2A) is being promulgated as an amendment to this Act.

One of the reasons it was decided to codify the law with respect to leases was to resolve an issue that has created considerable confusion in the courts: what is a lease? The confusion exists, in part, due to the last two sentences of the definition of security interest in the 1978 Official Text of the Act. Section 1-201(37). The confusion is compounded by the rather considerable change in the federal, state and local tax laws and accounting rules as they relate to leases of goods. The answer is important because the definition of lease determines not only the rights and remedies of the parties to the lease but also those of third parties. If a transaction creates a lease and not a security interest, the lessee's interest in the goods is limited to its leasehold estate; the residual interest in the goods belongs to the lessor. This has significant implications to the lessee's creditors. "On common law theory, the lessor, since he has not parted with title, is entitled to full protection against the lessee's creditors and trustee in bankruptcy . . .." 1 G. Gilmore, Security Interests in Personal Property § 3.6, at 76 (1965).

Under pre-Act chattel security law there was generally no requirement that the lessor file the lease, a financing statement, or the like, to enforce the lease agreement against the lessee or any third party; the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9) did not change the common law in that respect. Coogan, Leasing and the Uniform Commercial Code, in Equipment Leasing—Leveraged Leasing 681, 700 n. 25, 729 n. 80 (2d ed.1980). The Article on Leases (Article 2A) has not changed the law in that respect, except for leases of fixtures. Section 2A-309. An examination of the common law will not provide an adequate answer to the question of what is a lease. The definition of security interest in Section 1-201(37) of the 1978 Official Text of the Act provides that the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9) governs security interests disguised as leases, i.e., leases intended as security; however, the definition is vague and outmoded.

Lease is defined in Article 2A as a transfer of the right to possession and use of goods for a term, in return for consideration. Section 2A-103(1)(j). The definition continues by stating that the retention or creation of a security interest is not a lease. Thus, the task of sharpening the line between true leases and security interests disguised as leases continues to be a function of this section.

The first paragraph of this definition is a revised version of the first five sentences of the 1978 Official Text of Section 1-201(37). The changes are modest in that they make a style change in the fourth sentence and delete the reference to lease in the fifth sentence. The balance of this definition is new, although it preserves elements of the last two sentences of the prior definition. The focus of the changes was to draw a sharper line between leases and security interests disguised as leases to create greater certainty in commercial transactions.

Prior to this amendment, Section 1-201(37) provided that whether a lease was intended as security (i.e., a security interest disguised as a lease) was to be determined from the facts of each cases; however, (a) the inclusion of an option to purchase did not itself make the lease one intended for security, and (b) an agreement that upon compliance with the terms of the lease the lessee would become, or had the option to become, the owner of the property for no additional consideration, or for a nominal consideration, did make the lease one intended for security.

Reference to the intent of the parties to create a lease or security interest has led to unfortunate results. In discovering intent, courts have relied upon factors that were thought to be more consistent with sales or loans than leases. Most of these criteria, however, are as applicable to true leases as to security interests. Examples include the typical net lease provisions, a purported lessor's lack of storage facilities or its character as a financing party rather than a dealer in goods. Accordingly, amended Section 1-201(37) deletes all reference to the parties' intent.

The second paragraph of the new definition is taken from Section 1(2) of the Uniform Conditional Sales Act (act withdrawn 1943), modified to reflect current leasing practice. Thus, reference to the case law prior to this Act will provide a useful source of precedent. Gilmore, Security Law, Formalism and Article 9, 47 Neb. L. Rev. 659, 671 (1968). Whether a transaction creates a lease or a security interest continues to be determined by the facts of each case. The second paragraph further provides that a transaction creates a security interest if the lessee has an obligation to continue paying consideration for the term of the lease, if the obligation is not terminable by the lessee (thus correcting early statutory gloss, e.g. In re Royer's Bakery, Inc., 1 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. (Callaghan) 342 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1963)) and if one of four additional tests is met. The first of these four tests, subparagraph (a), is that the original lease term is equal to or greater than the remaining economic life of the goods. The second of these tests, subparagraph (b), is that the lessee is either bound to renew the lease for the remaining economic life of the goods or to become the owner of the goods. In re Gehrke Enters., 1 Bankr. 647, 651–52 (Bankr.W.D.Wis.1979). The third of these tests, subparagraph (c), is whether the lessee has an option to renew the lease for the remaining economic life of the goods for no additional consideration or for nominal additional consideration, which is defined later in this section. In re Celeryvale Transp., 44 Bankr. 1007, 1014–15 (Bankr. E.D. Tenn. 1984). The fourth of these tests, subparagraph (d), is whether the lessee has an option to become the owner of the goods for no additional consideration or for nominal additional consideration. All of these tests focus on economics, not the intent of the parties. In re Berge, 32 Bankr. 370, 371–73 (Bankr.W.D.Wis.1983).

The focus on economics is reinforced by the next paragraph, which is new. It states that a transaction does not create a security interest merely because the transaction has certain characteristics listed therein. Subparagraph (a) has no statutory derivative; it states that a full payout lease does not per se create a security interest. Rushton v. Shea, 419 F.Supp. 1349, 1365 (D. Del. 1976). Subparagraph (b) provides the same regarding the provisions of the typical net lease. Compare All-States Leasing Co. v. Ochs, 42 Or. App. 319, 600 P.2d 899 (Ct. App. 1979) with In re Tillery, 571 F.2d 1361 (5th Cir.1978). Subparagraph (c) restates and expands the provisions of former Section 1-201(37) to make clear that the option can be to buy or renew. Subparagraphs (d) and (e) treat fixed price options and provide that fair market value must be determined at the time the transaction is entered into. Compare Arnold Mach. Co. v. Balls, 624 P.2d 678 (Utah 1981) with Aoki v. Shepherd Mach. Co., 665 F.2d 941 (9th Cir. 1982).

The relationship of the second paragraph of this subsection to the third paragraph of this subsection deserves to be explored. The fixed price purchase option provides a useful example. A fixed price purchase option in a lease does not of itself create a security interest. This is particularly true if the fixed price is equal to or greater than the reasonably predictable fair market value of the goods at the time the option is to be performed. A security interest is created only if the option price is nominal and the conditions stated in the introduction to the second paragraph of this subsection are met. There is a set of purchase options whose fixed price is less than fair market value but greater than nominal that must be determined on the facts of each case to ascertain whether the transaction in which the option is included creates a lease or a security interest.

It was possible to provide for various other permutations and combinations with respect to options to purchase and renew. For example, this section could have stated a rule to govern the facts of In re Marhoefer Packing Co., 674 F.2d 1139 (7th Cir. 1982). This was not done because it would unnecessarily complicate the definition. Further development of this rule is left to the courts.

The fourth paragraph provides definitions and rules of construction.

§ 9-113. Security Interests Arising Under Article on Sales or Under Article on Leases.

A security interest arising solely under the Article on Sales (Article 2) or the Article on Leases (Article 2A) is subject to the provisions of this Article except that to the extent that and so long as the debtor does not have or does not lawfully obtain possession of the goods

(a) no security agreement is necessary to make the security interest enforceable; and

(b) no filing is required to perfect the security interest; and

(c) the rights of the secured party on default by the debtor are governed (i) by the Article on Sales (Article 2) in the case of a security interest arising solely under such Article or (ii) by the Article on Leases (Article 2A) in the case of a security interest arising solely under such Article.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. This Article attempts to simplify and make uniform the bulk sales laws of the states that adopt this Act.

2. Many states have bulk sales laws, of varying type and coverage. Their central purpose is to deal with two common forms of commercial fraud, namely:

(a) The merchant, owing debts, who sells out his stock in trade to a friend for less than it is worth, pays his creditors less than he owes them, and hopes to come back into the business through the back door some time in the future.

(b) The merchant, owing debts, who sells out his stock in trade to anyone for any price, pockets the proceeds, and disappears leaving his creditors unpaid.

3. The first is one form of fraudulent conveyance. The substantive law concerning it has been codified by the Commissioners in the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act. No change in that Act is proposed. The contribution of the bulk sales laws to the problem is in the requirement that creditors receive advance notice of bulk sales. Having such notice, they can investigate the price and other circumstances of the sale before it occurs, and determine then instead of later whether they should try to stop it. This is a valuable policing measure, and is continued. To be effective, it requires a longer notice than five days. This Article therefore follows in this respect those laws which require a longer notice (Sections 6-105, 6-108).

4. The second form of fraud suggested above represents the major bulk sales risk, and its prevention is the central purpose of the existing bulk sales laws and of this Article. Advance notice to the seller's creditors of the impending sale is an important protection against it, since with notice the creditors can take steps to impound the proceeds if they think it necessary. In many states, typified for instance by New York, such notice is substantially the only protection which bulk sales statutes give. Other states, typified for instance by Pennsylvania, give additional protection by imposing on the buyer an obligation to ensure that the money that he pays to his indebted seller is in fact applied to pay the seller's debts. This Article requires notice to creditors (Section 6-105) and if bracketed Section

6-106 is enacted it imposes the other obligation also.

5. These are the affirmative reasons for a law such as this Article. The objections are chiefly delay and red tape on legitimate transactions, and the possibility of a trap for the unwary buyer. It is hard to avoid the latter danger. But to minimize both it and the former the transactions subject to the Article are identified as clearly as possible and are limited to those which carry the dangers to be guarded against (Sections 6-102 and 6-103), and the sanctions are such as to permit honest and solvent buyers and sellers to put through transactions promptly without undue risk. Sections 6-104 through 6-108.

§ 6-102. "Bulk Transfers"; Transfers of Equipment; Enterprises Subject to This Article; Bulk Transfers Subject to This Article.

(1) A "bulk transfer" is any transfer in bulk and not in the ordinary course of the transferor's business of a major part of the materials, supplies, merchandise or other inventory (Section 9-109) of an enterprise subject to this Article.

(2) A transfer of a substantial part of the equipment (Section 9-109) of such an enterprise is a bulk transfer if it is made in connection with a bulk transfer of inventory, but not otherwise.

(3) The enterprises subject to this Article are all those whose principal business is the sale of merchandise from stock, including those who manufacture what they sell.

(4) Except as limited by the following section all bulk transfers of goods located within this state are subject to this Article.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. Much of the litigation under the existing laws has dealt with the kinds of businesses and the kinds of transfers covered. This section defines these matters.

2. The businesses covered are defined in subsection (3). Notice that they do not include farming nor contracting nor professional services, nor such things as cleaning shops, barber shops, pool halls, hotels, restaurants, and the like whose principal business is the sale not of merchandise but of services. While some bulk sales risk exists in the excluded businesses, they have in common the fact that unsecured credit is not commonly extended on the faith of a stock of merchandise.

3. The transfers included are of "materials, supplies, merchandise or other inventory" that is, of goods. Transfers of investment securities are not covered by the Article, nor are transfers of money, accounts receivable, chattel paper, contract rights, negotiable instruments, nor things in action generally. Such transfers are dealt with in other Articles, and are not believed to carry any major bulk sales risk.

4. The kinds of transfers covered are identified in paragraph (1). They are believed to be those that carry the major bulk sales risks. They are further limited by the section following.

§ 6-103. Transfers Excepted From This Article.

The following transfers are not subject to this Article:

(1) Those made to give security for the performance of an obligation;

(2) General assignments for the benefit of all the creditors of the transferor, and subsequent transfers by the assignee thereunder;

(3) Transfers in settlement or realization of a lien or other security interests;

(4) Sales by executors, administrators, receivers, trustees in bankruptcy, or any public officer under judicial process;

(5) Sales made in the course of judicial or administrative proceedings for the dissolution or reorganization of a corporation and of which notice is sent to the creditors of the corporation pursuant to order of the court or administrative agency;

(6) Transfers to a person maintaining a known place of business in this State who becomes bound to pay the debts of the transferor in full and gives public notice of that fact, and who is solvent after becoming so bound;

(7) A transfer to a new business enterprise organized to take over and continue the business, if public notice of the transaction is given and the new enterprise assumes the debts of the transferor and he receives nothing from the transaction except an interest in the new enterprise junior to the claims of creditors;

(8) Transfers of property which is exempt from execution.

Public notice under subsection (6) or subsection (7) may be given by publishing once a week for two consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation where the transferor had its principal place of business in this state an advertisement including the names and addresses of the transferor and transferee and the effective date of the transfer.

As amended in 1962.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. The section defines the transfers which although within the general definition of the previous section ought not to be subjected to the requirements of this Article.

2. Some of the existing Bulk Sales laws cover "bulk mortgages" as well as outright sales. In this Code security interests of all kinds in personal property are regulated by Article 9, Secured Transactions. Subsection (1) of this section therefore excludes all transfers for security from the operation of this Article. See also Sec. 9-111.

3. The exclusions described in subsections (2), (3), (4), (5) and (8) are believed to explain themselves.

4. Subsection (6) will exclude a great many transactions from the requirements of this Article. It is believed the exclusion is justified, and that it removes many of the objections to a law of this character. The transactions excluded are outright sales, since that is the only kind of a transaction in which the transferee is likely to bind himself to pay the transferor's debts. The purpose of this Article on outright sales is to give the seller's creditors a reasonable chance to collect their debts. (See Sections 6-104 through 6-108). If the buyer is willing to assume personal liability for those debts, and is himself solvent after such assumption, there is no reason to subject the transaction to the delay and red tape which this Article imposes.

5. Subsection (7) deals with certain changes in the ownership of a business, as by incorporation, change of membership of a firm, or transfer from a sole proprietor to a firm. The exclusion is believed to be justified within the limits stated in the subsection. Notice that in all the transactions to which the subsection applies (a) both the original debtor and the new enterprise are personally bound to pay the debts, (b) the property subject to the debts before the transfer is still subject to them, and (c) the original debtor has taken nothing out of the transaction except an interest (shares in a corporation, an interest in a firm, or a subordinated obligation) which is junior to the debts.

§ 6-104. Schedule of Property, List of Creditors.

(1) Except as provided with respect to auction sales (Section 6-108), a bulk transfer subject to this Article is ineffective against any creditor of the transferor unless:

(a) The transferee requires the transferor to furnish a list of his existing creditors prepared as stated in this section; and

(b) The parties prepare a schedule of the property transferred sufficient to identify it; and

(c) The transferee preserves the list and schedule for six months next following the transfer and permits inspection of either or both and copying therefrom at all reasonable hours by any creditor of the transferor, or files the list and schedule in (a public office to be here identified).

(2) The list of creditors must be signed and sworn to or affirmed by the transferor or his agent. It must contain the names and business addresses of all creditors of the transferor, with the amounts when known, and also the names of all persons who are known to the transferor to assert claims against him even though such claims are disputed. If the transferor is the obligor of an outstanding issue of bonds, debentures or the like as to which there is an indenture trustee, the list of creditors need include only the name and address of the indenture trustee and the aggregate outstanding principal amount of the issue.

(3) Responsibility for the completeness and accuracy of the list of creditors rests on the transferor, and the transfer is not rendered ineffective by errors or omissions therein unless the transferee is shown to have had knowledge.

As amended in 1962.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. The section describes the information that must be compiled and kept available to creditors on all bulk transfers subject to this Article except those made by sale at auction. Additional requirements for particular kinds of transfers are stated in the succeeding Sections (6-105 through 6-107). The section on auction sales (Section 6-108) imposes similar requirements, but on different people and with a different sanction.

2. Except for the accuracy of the list of creditors, the sanction for non-compliance with the present section is that the transfer is ineffective against creditors of the transferor. The creditors referred to are those holding claims based on transactions or events occurring before the transfer (Section 6-109). Any such creditor or creditors may therefore disregard the transfer and levy on the goods as still belonging to the transferor, or a receiver representing them can take them by whatever procedure the local law provides. But it follows also that if the debts of the transferor are paid as they mature disregard of the requirements of the section creates no liability. And a defect can always be cured by paying off the unpaid creditors.

3. The sanction for the accuracy of the list of creditors is the criminal law of the state relative to false swearing, made applicable by subsection (2).

§ 6-105. Notice to Creditors.

In addition to the requirements of the preceding section, any bulk transfer subject to this Article except one made by auction sale (Section 6-108) is ineffective against any creditor of the transferor unless at least ten days before he takes possession of the goods or pays for them, whichever happens first, the transferee gives notice of the transfer in the manner and to the persons hereafter provided (Section 6-107).

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. This section is the heart of the Article. It requires notice to creditors of all bulk transfers subject to the Article, except those made by auction sale. The contents of the notice, the persons to whom it must be given, and the manner of giving it are stated in Section 6-107. The section on auction sales (6-108) also calls for notice, but by a different person and with a different sanction.

2. The notice in all cases must be given ten days in advance. See Points 3 and 4 to Section 6-101.

3. The sanction for noncompliance with the section is that the transfer is ineffective against creditors. Comment 2 to Section 6-104 applies.

[§ 6-106. Application of the Proceeds].

In addition to the requirements of the two preceding sections:

(1) Upon every bulk transfer subject to this Article for which new consideration becomes payable except those made by sale at auction it is the duty of the transferee to assure that such consideration is applied so far as necessary to pay those debts of the transferor which are either shown on the list furnished by the transferor (Section 6-104) or filed in writing in the place stated in the notice (Section 6-107) within thirty days after the mailing of such notice. This duty of the transferee runs to all the holders of such debts, and may be enforced by any of them for the benefit of all.

(2) If any of said debts are in dispute the necessary sum may be withheld from distribution until the dispute is settled or adjudicated.

(3) If the consideration payable is not enough to pay all of the said debts in full distribution shall be made pro rata.]

Note: This section is bracketed to indicate division of opinion as to whether or not it is a wise provision, and to suggest that this is a point on which State enactments may differ without serious damage to the principle of uniformity.

In any State where this section is omitted, the following parts of sections, also bracketed in the text, should also be omitted, namely:

Section 6-107(2)(e).
6-108(3)(c).
6-109(2).

In any State where this section is enacted, these other provisions should be also.

Optional Subsection (4)

[(4) The transferee may within ten days after he takes possession of the goods pay the consideration into the (specify court) in the county where the transferor had its principal place of business in this state and thereafter may discharge his duty under this section by giving notice by registered or certified mail to all the persons to whom the duty runs that the consideration has been paid into that court and that they should file their claims there. On motion of any interested party, the court may order the distribution of the consideration to the persons entitled to it.]

Note: Optional subsection (4) is recommended for those states which do not have a general statute providing for payment of money into court.

As amended in 1962.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. This section applies only to transfers "for which new consideration becomes payable". It applies only if something, which of course need not be money, becomes payable in consideration of the transfer. The purpose of the section is to give the transferor's creditors direct protection against improper dissipation by the transferor of the consideration which he receives for the transfer. See Comment 4 to Section 6-101.

2. Subsections (6) and (7) of Section 6-103 remove many outright transfers from the operation of this Article and therefore of course of this section. In addition it is clear from the section itself that in any case in which the seller's debts are to be paid as they mature the buyer can disregard the section without danger of added liability except that his seller will disappoint him. And in case of trouble the buyer is entitled under Section 6-109(2) to credit for sums honestly paid to particular creditors.

3. The methods by which the buyer may perform the duty stated in the section are various. He may, for instance, by agreement with the seller hold the consideration in his own hands until the debts are ascertained, or deposit it in an account subject to checks bearing his counter-signature, or deposit it in escrow with an independent agency. If the affairs of the seller are so involved that nothing else is practical the buyer will no doubt pay the consideration into the registry of an appropriate court and interplead the seller's creditors. If optional subsection (4) is enacted, specific provision is made for such a procedure. But notice that the transferee's obligation runs, not to all possible creditors of the transferor who may appear at any time in the future, but only to existing creditors whom the transferee has a chance to identify in one of the ways provided in subsection (1). [This paragraph was amended in 1962].

§ 6-107. The Notice.

(1) The notice to creditors (Section 6-105) shall state:

(a) that a bulk transfer is about to be made; and

(b) the names and business addresses of the transferor and transferee, and all other business names and addresses used by the transferor within three years last past so far as known to the transferee; and

(c) whether or not all the debts of the transferor are to be paid in full as they fall due as a result of the transaction, and if so, the address to which creditors should send their bills.

(2) If the debts of the transferor are not to be paid in full as they fall due or if the transferee is in doubt on that point then the notice shall state further:

(a) the location and general description of the property to be transferred and the estimated total of the transferor's debts;

(b) the address where the schedule of property and list of creditors (Section 6-104) may be inspected;

(c) whether the transfer is to pay existing debts and if so the amount of such debts and to whom owing;

(d) whether the transfer is for new consideration and if so the amount of such consideration and the time and place of payment; [and]

[(e) if for new consideration the time and place where creditors of the transferor are to file their claims.]

(3) The notice in any case shall be delivered personally or sent by registered or certified mail to all the persons shown on the list of creditors furnished by the transferor (Section 6-104) and to all other persons who are known to the transferee to hold or assert claims against the transferor.

Note: The words in brackets are optional. See Note under § 6-106.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. This section specifies the contents of the notice to be given on all the transfers covered by Section 6-105 (that is, all transfers subject to the Article except those made by auction sale) and the manner in which it is to be given.

2. Under the section, if the debts of the transferor are to be paid in full as they fall due, a short form of notice is provided. This facilitates honest and solvent transactions.

3. If the transfer is by auction sale Section 6-108 applies.

4. Subsection (2)(e) is a corollary of Section 6-106 and should be omitted if that section is. See note to Section 6-106.

§ 6-108. Auction Sales; "Auctioneer".

(1) A bulk transfer is subject to this Article even though it is by sale at auction, but only in the manner and with the results stated in this section.

(2) The transferor shall furnish a list of his creditors and assist in the preparation of a schedule of the property to be sold, both prepared as before stated (Section 6-104).

(3) The person or persons other than the transferor who direct, control or are responsible for the auction are collectively called the "auctioneer". The auctioneer shall:

(a) receive and retain the list of creditors and prepare and retain the schedule of property for the period stated in this Article (Section 6-104);

(b) give notice of the auction personally or by registered or certified mail at least ten days before it occurs to all persons shown on the list of creditors and to all other persons who are known to him to hold or assert claims against the transferor; [and]

[(c) assure that the net proceeds of the auction are applied as provided in this Article (Section 6-106).]

(4) Failure of the auctioneer to perform any of these duties does not affect the validity of the sale or the title of the purchasers, but if the auctioneer knows that the auction constitutes a bulk transfer such failure renders the auctioneer liable to the creditors of the transferor as a class for the sums owing to them from the transferor up to but not exceeding the net proceeds of the auction. If the auctioneer consists of several persons their liability is joint and several.

Note: The words in brackets are optional. See Note under § 6-106.

As amended in 1962.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. The section is intended to make appropriate application of the requirements of this Article to auction sales. It is clear that the provisions of the four previous sections in their literal form cannot be applied directly to an auction, since neither the price nor the identity of the purchaser or purchasers can be known until the sale occurs. But it is equally clear that if auctions were excluded entirely from the transfers covered by this Article the way would be open to a debtor to carry out a bulk transfer of his property without notice to his creditors and without any duty upon anyone to see to the application of the proceeds. The section attempts to meet this situation by imposing the obligations stated in the section upon the persons there described.

2. Since the obligation to give advance notice, etc., cannot rest upon bidders at an auction it is clear that the sale must be effective so far as they are concerned whether or not the section is complied with. Subsection (4) therefore states a sanction which does not affect the purchasers. Notice that the sanction applies only "if the auctioneer knows that the auction constitutes a bulk transfer." No doubt in some cases, as for instance when goods are simply received on consignment for sale, he may not know.

3. Subsection (3)(c) is a corollary of Section 6-106 and should be omitted if that section is. See note to that section.

(1) The creditors of the transferor mentioned in this Article are those holding claims based on transactions or events occurring before the bulk transfer, but creditors who become such after notice to creditors is given (Sections 6-105 and 6-107) are not entitled to notice.

[(2) Against the aggregate obligation imposed by the provisions of this Article concerning the application of the proceeds (Section 6-106 and subsection (3)(c) of 6-108) the transferee or auctioneer is entitled to credit for sums paid to particular creditors of the transferor, not exceeding the sums believed in good faith at the time of the payment to be properly payable to such creditors.]

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. Subsection (1) identifies the creditors who may have rights under the various provisions of this Article. The claims referred to of course include unliquidated claims.

2. Subsection (2) gives the transferee or auctioneer appropriate credit for honest payments to particular creditors. If Section 6-106 is omitted this subsection should be also. See note to that section.

When the title of a transferee to property is subject to a defect by reason of his non-compliance with the requirements of this Article, then:

(1) a purchaser of any of such property from such transferee who pays no value or who takes with notice of such non-compliance takes subject to such defect, but

(2) a purchaser for value in good faith and without such notice takes free of such defect.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. The section deals with subsequent transfers by the transferee.

2. The second transfer may of course itself be a "bulk transfer" subject to this Article. Whether it is or not will depend on its own character under Sections 6-102 and 6-103.

§ 6-111. Limitation of Actions and Levies.

No action under this Article shall be brought nor levy made more than six months after the date on which the transferee took possession of the goods unless the transfer has been concealed. If the transfer has been concealed, actions may be brought or levies made within six months after its discovery.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. This Article imposes unusual obligations on buyers of property. A short statute of limitations is therefore appropriate.

2. The main sanction for non-compliance with the Article is that the transfer "is ineffective against any creditor of the transferor." Sections 6-104, 6-105. This means, e.g., that a judgment creditor of the transferor may levy execution on the property. See Comment 2 to Section 6-104.

In such a case, which may be expected to be frequent, no "action under this Article" will be necessary. The action will have been brought and prosecuted to judgment on whatever the claim was. The only thing done "under this Article" will be the levy and resulting sale.

The short statute of limitations is therefore made applicable to levies as well as actions. "Levy", which is not a defined term in the Code, should be read broadly as including not only levies of execution proper but also attachment, garnishment, trustee process, receivership, or whatever proceeding, under the state's practice, is used to apply a debtor's property to payment of his debts.

"Action". Section 1-201.

Note to Article 6: Section 6-106 is bracketed to indicate division of opinion as to whether or not it is a wise provision, and to suggest that this is a point on which State enactments may differ without serious damage to the principle of uniformity.

In any State where Section 6-106 is not enacted, the following parts of sections, also bracketed in the text, should also be omitted, namely:

Sec. 6-107(2)(e).
6-108(3)(c).
6-109(2).

In any State where Section 6-106 is enacted, these other provisions should be also.

APPENDIX F

1990 Amendments to Article 2A

Note that following Amendment 24 there are three sections which do not have any text changes, but which have changes in their Official Comments in order to conform them to the various 1990 amendments to Article 2A.

Amendment 1

Section 2A-103 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-103. Definitions and Index of Definitions.

(1) In this Article unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) "Buyer in ordinary course of business" means a person who in good faith and without knowledge that the sale to him [or her] is in violation of the ownership rights or security interest or leasehold interest of a third party in the goods*,* buys in ordinary course from a person in the business of selling goods of that kind but does not include a pawnbroker. "Buying" may be for cash or by exchange of other property or on secured or unsecured credit and includes receiving goods or documents of title under a pre-existing contract for sale but does not include a transfer in bulk or as security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a money debt.

(b) "Cancellation" occurs when either party puts an end to the lease contract for default by the other party.

(c) "Commercial unit" means such a unit of goods as by commercial usage is a single whole for purposes of lease and division of which materially impairs its character or value on the market or in use. A commercial unit may be a single article, as a machine, or a set of articles, as a suite of furniture or a line of machinery, or a quantity, as a gross or carload, or any other unit treated in use or in the relevant market as a single whole.

(d) "Conforming" goods or performance under a lease contract means goods or performance that are in accordance with the obligations under the lease contract.

(e) "Consumer lease" means a lease that a lessor regularly engaged in the business of leasing or selling makes to a lessee~~, except an organization,~~ who is an individual and who takes under the lease primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose*[*, if the total payments to be made under the lease contract, excluding payments for options to renew or buy, do not exceed ~~$25,000~~ $ _____].

(f) "Fault" means wrongful act, omission, breach, or default.

(g) "Finance lease" means a lease ~~in~~ with respect to which*:*

(i) the lessor does not select, manufacture*,* or supply the goods~~,~~;

(ii) the lessor acquires the goods or the right to possession and use of the goods in connection with the lease~~,~~; and

(iii) ~~either~~ one of the following occurs:

(A) the lessee receives a copy of the contract ~~evidencing the lessor's purchase~~ by which the lessor acquired the goods or the right to possession and use of the goods ~~on or~~ before signing the lease contract~~, or~~;

(B) the lessee's approval of the contract ~~evidencing the lessor's purchase~~ by which the lessor acquired the goods or the right to possession and use of the goods is a condition to effectiveness of the lease contract*;*

(C) the lessee, before signing the lease contract, receives an accurate and complete statement designating the promises and warranties, and any disclaimers of warranties, limitations or modifications of remedies, or liquidated damages, including those of a third party, such as the manufacturer of the goods, provided to the lessor by the person supplying the goods in connection with or as part of the contract by which the lessor acquired the goods or the right to possession and use of the goods; or

(D) if the lease is not a consumer lease, the lessor, before the lessee signs the lease contract, informs the lessee in writing (a) of the identity of the person supplying the goods to the lessor, unless the lessee has selected that person and directed the lessor to acquire the goods or the right to possession and use of the goods from that person, (b) that the lessee is entitled under this Article to the promises and warranties, including those of any third party, provided to the lessor by the person supplying the goods in connection with or as part of the contract by which the lessor acquired the goods or the right to possession and use of the goods, and (c) that the lessee may communicate with the person supplying the goods to the lessor and receive an accurate and complete statement of those promises and warranties, including any disclaimers and limitations of them or of remedies.

(h) "Goods" means all things that are movable at the time of identification to the lease contract, or are fixtures (Section 2A-309), but the term does not include money, documents, instruments, accounts, chattel paper, general intangibles, or minerals or the like, including oil and gas, before extraction. The term also includes the unborn young of animals.

(i) "Installment lease contract" means a lease contract that authorizes or requires the delivery of goods in separate lots to be separately accepted, even though the lease contract contains a clause "each delivery is a separate lease" or its equivalent.

(j) "Lease" means a transfer of the right to possession and use of goods for a term in return for consideration, but a sale, including a sale on approval or a sale or return, or retention or creation of a security interest is not a lease. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublease.

(k) "Lease agreement" means the bargain, with respect to the lease, of the lessor and the lessee in fact as found in their language or by implication from other circumstances including course of dealing or usage of trade or course of performance as provided in this Article. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublease agreement.

(l) "Lease contract" means the total legal obligation that results from the lease agreement as affected by this Article and any other applicable rules of law. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublease contract.

(m) "Leasehold interest" means the interest of the lessor or the lessee under a lease contract.

(n) "Lessee" means a person who acquires the right to possession and use of goods under a lease. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublessee.

(o) "Lessee in ordinary course of business" means a person who in good faith and without knowledge that the lease to him [or her] is in violation of the ownership rights or security interest or leasehold interest of a third party in the goods leases in ordinary course from a person in the business of selling or leasing goods of that kind but does not include a pawnbroker. "Leasing" may be for cash or by exchange of other property or on secured or unsecured credit and includes receiving goods or documents of title under a pre-existing lease contract but does not include a transfer in bulk or as security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a money debt.

(p) "Lessor" means a person who transfers the right to possession and use of goods under a lease. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublessor.

(q) "Lessor's residual interest" means the lessor's interest in the goods after expiration, termination, or cancellation of the lease contract.

(r) "Lien" means a charge against or interest in goods to secure payment of a debt or performance of an obligation, but the term does not include a security interest.

(s) "Lot" means a parcel or a single article that is the subject matter of a separate lease or delivery, whether or not it is sufficient to perform the lease contract.

(t) "Merchant lessee" means a lessee that is a merchant with respect to goods of the kind subject to the lease.

(u) "Present value" means the amount as of a date certain of one or more sums payable in the future, discounted to the date certain. The discount is determined by the interest rate specified by the parties if the rate was not manifestly unreasonable at the time the transaction was entered into; otherwise, the discount is determined by a commercially reasonable rate that takes into account the facts and circumstances of each case at the time the transaction was entered into.

(v) "Purchase" includes taking by sale, lease, mortgage, security interest, pledge, gift, or any other voluntary transaction creating an interest in goods.

(w) "Sublease" means a lease of goods the right to possession and use of which was acquired by the lessor as a lessee under an existing lease.

(x) "Supplier" means a person from whom a lessor buys or leases goods to be leased under a finance lease.

(y) "Supply contract" means a contract under which a lessor buys or leases goods to be leased.

(z) "Termination" occurs when either party pursuant to a power created by agreement or law puts an end to the lease contract otherwise than for default.

For a transaction to qualify as a consumer lease it must first qualify as a lease. Section 2A-103(1)(j). Note that this Article regulates the transactional elements of a lease, including a consumer lease; consumer protection statutes~~—~~, present and future—, and existing consumer protection decisions are unaffected by this Article. ~~Section 2A-104(1)(a) and (d)~~ Section 2A-104(1)(c) and (2). Of course, Article 2A as state law also is subject to federal consumer protection law.

This definition is modeled after the definition of consumer lease in the Consumer Leasing Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1667 (1982), and in the Unif.Consumer Credit Code § 1.301(14), 7A U.L.A. 43 (1974). However, this definition of consumer lease differs from its models in several respects: the lessor can be a person regularly engaged either in the business of leasing or of selling goods, the lease need not be for a term exceeding four months, a lease primarily for an agricultural purpose is not covered, and ~~the limitation of $25,000 is not subject to adjustment as the Consumer Price Index changes~~ whether there should be a limitation by dollar amount and its amount is left up to the individual states.

This definition focuses on the parties as well as the transaction. If a lease is within this definition, the lessor must be regularly engaged in the business of leasing or selling, and the lessee must be an individual not an organization; note that a lease to two or more individuals having a common interest through marriage or the like ~~should not be considered~~ is not excluded as a lease to an organization under Section 1-201(28). The lessee must take the interest primarily for a personal, family or household purpose. ~~Further~~ If required by the enacting state, total payments under the lease contract, excluding payments for options to renew or buy, cannot exceed ~~$25,000~~ the figure designated.

(f) "Fault". Section 1-201(16).

(g) "Finance Lease". New. This Article includes a subset of rules that applies only to finance leases. Sections 2A-209, 2A-211(2), 2A-212(1), 2A-213, 2A-219(1), 2A-220(1)(a), 2A-221, 2A-405(c), 2A-407, 2A-516(2) and 2A-517(1)(a) and (2).

For a transaction to qualify as a finance lease it must first qualify as a lease. Section 2A-103(1)(j). Unless the lessor is comfortable that the transaction will qualify as a finance lease, the lease agreement should include provisions giving the lessor the benefits created by the subset of rules applicable to the transaction that qualifies as a finance lease under this Article.

A finance lease is the product of a three party transaction. The supplier manufactures or supplies the goods pursuant to the lessee's specification, perhaps even pursuant to a purchase order, sales agreement or lease agreement between the supplier and the lessee. After the prospective finance lease is negotiated, a purchase order, sales agreement, or lease agreement is entered into by the lessor (as buyer or prime lessee) or an existing order, agreement or lease is assigned by the lessee to the lessor, and the lessor and the lessee then enter into a lease or sublease of the goods. Due to the limited function usually performed by the lessor, the lessee looks almost entirely to the supplier for representations, covenants and warranties. If a manufacturer's warranty carries through, the lessee may also look to that. Yet, this definition does not restrict the lessor's function solely to the supply of funds; if the lessor undertakes or performs other functions, express warranties, covenants and the common law will protect the lessee.

This definition focuses on the transaction, not the status of the parties; to avoid confusion it is important to note that in other contexts, e.g., tax and accounting, the term finance lease has been used to connote different types of lease transactions, including leases that are disguised secured transactions. M. Rice, Equipment Financing, 62–71 (1981). A lessor who is a merchant with respect to goods of the kind subject to the lease may be a lessor under a finance lease. Many leases that are leases back to the seller of goods (Section 2A-308(3)) will be finance leases. This conclusion is easily demonstrated by a hypothetical. Assume that B has bought goods from C pursuant to a sales contract. After delivery to and acceptance of the goods by B, B negotiates to sell the goods to A and simultaneously to lease the goods back from A, on terms and conditions that, we assume, will qualify the transaction as a lease. Section 2A-103(1)(j). In documenting the sale and lease back, B assigns the original sales contract between B, as buyer, and C, as seller, to A. A review of these facts leads to the conclusion that the lease from A to B qualifies as a finance lease, as all three conditions of the definition are satisfied. Subparagraph (i) is satisfied as A, the lessor, had nothing to do with the selection, manufacture, or supply of the equipment. Subparagraph (ii) is satisfied as A, the lessor, bought the equipment at the same time that A leased the equipment to B, which certainly is in connection with the lease. Finally, subparagraph (iii) (A) is satisfied as A entered into the sales contract with B at the same time that A leased the equipment back to B. B, the lessee, will have received a copy of the sales contract in a timely fashion.

Subsection (i) requires the lessor to remain outside the selection, manufacture and supply of the goods; that is the rationale for releasing the lessor from most of its traditional liability. The lessor is not prohibited from possession, maintenance or operation of the goods, as policy does not require such prohibition. To insure the lessee's reliance on the supplier, and not on the lessor, subsection (ii) requires that the goods (where the lessor is the buyer of the goods) or that the right to possession and use of the goods (where the lessor is the prime lessee and the sublessor of the goods) be acquired in connection with the lease (or sublease) to qualify as a finance lease. The scope of the phrase "in connection with" is to be developed by the courts, case by case. Finally, as the lessee generally relies almost entirely upon the supplier for representations~~,~~ and covenants*,* and upon the supplier or a manufacturer, or both, for warranties with respect to the goods, subsection (iii) requires that one of the following occur: (A) the lessee receive a copy of the supply contract ~~on or~~ before signing the lease contract ~~or that~~; (B) the lessee's approval of the supply contract is a condition to the effectiveness of the lease contract*; (C) the lessee receive a statement describing the promises and warranties and any limitations relevant to the lessee before signing the lease contract; or (D) before signing the lease contract and except in a consumer lease, the lessee receive a writing identifying the supplier (unless the supplier was selected and required by the lessee) and the rights of the lessee under Section 2A-209, and advising the lessee a statement of promises and warranties is available from the supplier*. Thus, even where oral supply orders or computer placed supply orders are compelled by custom and usage the transaction may still qualify as a finance lease if the lessee approves the supply contract before the lease contract is effective and such approval was a condition to the effectiveness of the lease contract. Moreover, where the lessor does not want the lessee to see the entire supply contract, including price information, the lessee may be provided with a separate statement of the terms of the supply contract relevant to the lessee; promises between the supplier and the lessor that do not affect the lessee need not be included. The statement can be a restatement of those terms or a copy of portions of the supply contract with the relevant terms clearly designated. Any implied warranties need not be designated, but a disclaimer or modification of remedy must be designated. A copy of any manufacturer's warranty is sufficient if that is the warranty provided. However, a copy of any Regulation M disclosure given pursuant to 12 C.F.R. § 213.4(g) concerning warranties in itself is not sufficient since those disclosures need only briefly identify express warranties and need not include any disclaimer of warranty.

If a transaction does not qualify as a finance lease, the parties may achieve the same result by agreement; no negative implications are to be drawn if the transaction does not qualify. Further, absent the application of special rules (fraud, duress, and the like), a lease that qualifies as a finance lease and is assigned by the lessor or the lessee to a third party does not lose its status as a finance lease under this Article. Finally, this Article creates no special rule where the lessor is an affiliate of the supplier; whether the transaction qualifies as a finance lease will be determined by the facts of each case.

(h) "Goods". Section 9-105(1)(h). See Section 2A-103(3) for reference to the definition of "~~Accounts~~ Account", "Chattel paper", "~~Documents~~ Document", "General intangibles" and "~~Instruments~~ Instrument". See Section 2A-217 for determination of the time and manner of identification.

(i) "Installment lease contract". Section 2-612(1).

(j) "Lease". New. There are several reasons to codify the law with respect to leases of goods. An analysis of the case law as it applies to leases of goods suggests at least several significant issues to be resolved by codification. First and foremost is the definition of a lease. It is necessary to define lease to determine whether a transaction creates a lease or a security interest disguised as a lease. If the transaction creates a security interest disguised as a lease, the transaction will be governed by the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9) and the lessor will be required to file a financing statement or take other action to perfect its interest in the goods against third parties. There is no such requirement with respect to leases under the common law and, except with respect to leases of fixtures (Section 2A-309), this Article imposes no such requirement. Yet the distinction between a lease and a security interest disguised as a lease is not clear from the case law at the time of the promulgation of this Article. DeKoven, Leases of Equipment: Puritan Leasing Company v. August, A Dangerous Decision, 12 U.S.F.L.Rev. 257 (1978).

At common law a lease of personal property is a bailment for hire. While there are several definitions of bailment for hire, all require a thing to be let and a price for the letting. Thus, in modern terms and as provided in this definition, a lease is created when the lessee agrees to furnish consideration for the right to the possession and use of goods over a specified period of time. Mooney, Personal Property Leasing: A Challenge, 36 Bus.Law. 1605, 1607 (1981). Further, a lease is neither a sale (Section 2-106(1)) nor a retention or creation of a security interest (Section 1-201(37)). Due to extensive litigation to distinguish true leases from security interests, an amendment to Section 1-201(37) has been promulgated with this Article to create a sharper distinction.

This section as well as Section 1-201(37) must be examined to determine whether the transaction in question creates a lease or a security interest. The following hypotheticals indicate the perimeters of the issue. Assume that A has purchased a number of copying machines, new, for $1,000 each; the machines have an estimated useful economic life of three years. A advertises that the machines are available to rent for a minimum of one month and that the monthly rental is $100.00. A intends to enter into leases where A provides all maintenance, without charge to the lessee. Further, the lessee will rent the machine, month to month, with no obligation to renew. At the end of the lease term the lessee will be obligated to return the machine to A's place of business. This transaction qualifies as a lease under the first half of the definition, for the transaction includes a transfer by A to a prospective lessee of possession and use of the machine for a stated term, month to month. The machines are goods (Section 2A-103(1)(h)). The lessee is obligated to pay consideration in return, $100.00 for each month of the term.

However, the second half of the definition provides that a sale or a security interest is not a lease. Since there is no passing of title, there is no sale. Sections 2A-103(3) and 2-106(1). Under pre-Act security law this transaction would have created a bailment for hire or a true lease and not a conditional sale. Da Rocha v. Macomber, 330 Mass. 611, 614–15, 116 N.E.2d 139, 142 (1953). Under Section 1-201(37), as amended with the promulgation of this Article, the same result would follow. While the lessee is obligated to pay rent for the one month term of the lease, one of the other four conditions of the second paragraph of Section 1-201(37) must be met and none is. The term of the lease is one month and the economic life of the machine is 36 months; thus, subparagraph (a) of Section 1-201(37) is not now satisfied. Considering the amount of the monthly rent, absent economic duress or coercion, the lessee is not bound either to renew the lease for the remaining economic life of the goods or to become the owner. If the lessee did lease the machine for 36 months, the lessee would have paid the lessor $3,600 for a machine that could have been purchased for $1,000; thus, subparagraph (b) of Section 1-201(37) is not satisfied. Finally, there are no options; thus, subparagraphs (c) and (d) of Section 1-201(37) are not satisfied. This transaction creates a lease, not a security interest. However, with each renewal of the lease the facts and circumstances at the time of each renewal must be examined to determine if that conclusion remains accurate, as it is possible that a transaction that first creates a lease, later creates a security interest.

Assume that the facts are changed and that A requires each lessee to lease the goods for 36 months, with no right to terminate. Under pre-Act security law this transaction would have created a conditional sale, and not a bailment for hire or true lease. Hervey v. Rhode Island Locomotive Works, 93 U.S. (3 Otto) 664, 672–73, 23 L.Ed. 1003 (1876). Under this subsection, and Section 1-201(37), as amended with the inclusion of this Article in the Act, the same result would follow. The lessee's obligation for the term is not subject to termination by the lessee and the term is equal to the economic life of the machine.

Between these extremes there are many transactions that can be created. Some of the transactions have not been properly categorized by the courts in applying the 1978 and earlier Official Texts of Section 1-201(37). This subsection, together with Section 1-201(37), as amended with the promulgation of this Article, draws a brighter line, which should create a clearer signal to the professional lessor and lessee.

(k) "Lease agreement". This definition is derived from the first sentence of Section 1-201(3). Because the definition of lease is broad enough to cover future transfers, lease agreement includes an agreement contemplating a current or subsequent transfer. Thus it was not necessary to make an express reference to an agreement for the future lease of goods (Section 2-106(1)). This concept is also incorporated in the definition of lease contract. Note that the definition of lease does not include transactions in ordinary building materials that are incorporated into an improvement on land. Section 2A-309(2).

The provisions of this Article, if applicable, determine whether a lease agreement has legal consequences; otherwise the law of bailments and other applicable law determine the same. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-103.

(l) "Lease contract". This definition is derived from the definition of contract in Section

1-201(11). Note that a lease contract may be for the future lease of goods, since this notion is included in the definition of lease.

(m) "Leasehold interest". New.

(n) "Lessee". New.

(o) "Lessee in ordinary course of business". Section 1-201(9).

(p) "Lessor". New.

(q) "Lessor's residual interest". New.

(r) "Lien". New. This term is used in Section 2A-307 (Priority of Liens Arising by Attachment or Levy on, Security Interests in, and Other Claims to Goods).

(s) "Lot". Section 2-105(5).

(t) "Merchant lessee". New. This term is used in Section 2A-511 (Merchant Lessee's Duties as to Rightfully Rejected Goods). A person may satisfy the requirement of dealing in goods of the kind subject to the lease as lessor, lessee, seller, or buyer.

(u) "Present value". New. Authorities agree that present value should be used to determine fairly the damages payable by the lessor or the lessee on default. E.g., Taylor v. Commercial Credit Equip. Corp., 170 Ga.App. 322, 316 S.E.2d 788 (1984). Present value is defined to mean an amount that represents the discounted value as of a date certain of one or more sums payable in the future. This is a function of the economic principle that a dollar today is more valuable to the holder than a dollar payable in two years. While there is no question as to the principle, reasonable people would differ as to the rate of discount to apply in determining the value of that future dollar today. To minimize litigation, this Article allows the parties to specify the discount or interest rate, if the rate was not manifestly unreasonable at the time the transaction was entered into. In all other cases, the interest rate will be a commercially reasonable rate that takes into account the facts and circumstances of each case, as of the time the transaction was entered into.

(v) "Purchase". Section 1-201(32). This definition omits the reference to lien contained in the definition of purchase in Article 1 (Section 1-201(32)). This should not be construed to exclude consensual liens from the definition of purchase in this Article; the exclusion was mandated by the scope of the definition of lien in Section 2A-103(1)(r). Further, the definition of purchaser in this Article adds a reference to lease; as purchase is defined in Section 1-201(32) to include any other voluntary transaction creating an interest in property, this addition is not substantive.

(w) "Sublease". New.

(x) "Supplier". New.

(y) "Supply contract". New.

(z) "Termination". Section 2-106(3). The effect of a termination is provided in Section 2A-505(2).

Amendment 2

Section 2A-104 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-104. Leases Subject to Other ~~Statutes~~ Law.

(1) A lease, although subject to this Article, is also subject to any applicable:

(a) ~~statute of the United States;~~

~~(b)~~ certificate of title statute of this State:

(list any certificate of title statutes covering automobiles, trailers, mobile homes, boats, farm tractors, and the like);

~~(c)~~(b) certificate of title statute of another jurisdiction (Section 2A-105); or ~~(d)~~(c) consumer protection statute of this State*, or final consumer protection decision of a court of this State existing on the effective date of this Article*.

(2) In case of conflict between ~~the provisions of~~ this Article, other than Sections 2A-105, 2A-304(3), and 2A-305(3), and ~~any~~ a statute or decision referred to in subsection (1), the ~~provisions of that~~ statute or decision ~~control~~ controls.

(3) Failure to comply with ~~any~~ an applicable ~~statute~~ law has only the effect specified therein.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Sections 9-203(4) and 9-302(3)(b) and (c).
Changes: Substantially revised.
Purposes:

1. This Article creates a comprehensive scheme for the regulation of transactions that create leases. Section 2A-102. Thus, the Article supersedes all prior legislation dealing with leases, except to the extent set forth in this Section.

2. Subsection (1) states the general rule that a lease, although governed by the scheme of this Article, ~~is~~ also may be governed by certain other applicable ~~statutes~~ laws. This may occur in the case of a consumer lease. Section 2A-103(1)(e). Those laws may be state statutes existing prior to enactment of Article 2A or passed afterward. In this case, it is desirable for this Article to specify which statute controls. Or the law may be a pre-existing consumer protection decision. This Article preserves such decisions. Or the law may be a statute of the United States. Such a law controls without any statement in this Article under applicable principles of preemption.

An illustration of a statute of the United States that governs consumer leases is the Consumer Leasing Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1667-1667(e) (1982) and its implementing regulation, Regulation M, 12 C.F.R. § 213 (1986); the statute mandates disclosures of certain lease terms, delimits the liability of a lessee in leasing personal property, and regulates the advertising of lease terms. An illustration of a state statute that governs consumer leases and which if adopted in the enacting state prevails over this Article is the Unif. Consumer Credit Code, which includes many provisions similar to those of the Consumer Leasing Act, e.g., Unif. Consumer Credit Code §§ 3.202, 3.209, 3.401, 7A U.L.A. 108–09, 115, 125 (1974), as well as provisions in addition to those of the Consumer Leasing Act, e.g., Unif. Consumer Credit Code §§ 5.109–.111, 7A U.L.A. 171–76 (1974) (the right to cure a default). Such statutes may define consumer lease so as to govern transactions within and without the definition of consumer lease under this Article.

3. Under subsection (2), subject to certain limited exclusions, in case of conflict ~~the provisions of such~~ a statute ~~prevail~~ or a decision described in subsection (1) prevails over ~~the provisions of~~ this Article. For example, a provision like Unif. Consumer Credit Code § 5.112, 7A U.L.A. 176 (1974), limiting self-help repossession, prevails over Section 2A-525(3). A consumer protection decision rendered after the effective date of this Article may supplement its provisions. For example, in relation to Article 9 a court might conclude that an acceleration clause may not be enforced against an individual debtor after late payments have been accepted unless a prior notice of default is given. To the extent the decision establishes a general principle applicable to transactions other than secured transactions, it may supplement Section 2A-502.

4. Consumer protection in lease transactions is primarily left to other law. However, several provisions of this Article do contain special rules that may not be varied by agreement in the case of a consumer lease. E.g., Sections 2A-106, 2A-108, and 2A-109(2). Were that not so, the ability of the parties to govern their relationship by agreement together with the position of the lessor in a consumer lease too often could result in a one-sided lease agreement.

5. In construing this provision the reference to statute should be deemed to include applicable regulations. A consumer protection decision is "final" on the effective date of this Article if it is not subject to appeal on that date or, if subject to appeal, is not later reversed on appeal. Of course, such a decision can be overruled by a later decision or superseded by a later statute.

Amendment 3

Section 2A-209 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-209. Lessee Under Finance Lease as Beneficiary of Supply Contract.

(1) The benefit of ~~the~~ a supplier's promises to the lessor under the supply contract and of all warranties, whether express or implied, ~~under~~ including those of any third party provided in connection with or as part of the supply contract, extends to the lessee to the extent of the lessee's leasehold interest under a finance lease related to the supply contract, but is subject to the terms of the warranty and of the supply contract and all ~~of the supplier's~~ defenses or claims arising therefrom.

(2) The extension of the benefit of ~~the~~ a supplier's promises and of warranties to the lessee (Section 2A-209(1)) does not: ~~(a)~~ (i) modify the rights and obligations of the parties to the supply contract, whether arising therefrom or otherwise, or ~~(b)~~ (ii) impose any duty or liability under the supply contract on the lessee.

(3) Any modification or rescission of the supply contract by the supplier and the lessor is effective ~~against~~ between the supplier and the lessee unless, ~~prior to~~ before the modification or rescission, the supplier has received notice that the lessee has entered into a finance lease related to the supply contract. ~~If the supply contract is modified or rescinded after the lessee enters the finance lease, the lessee has a cause of action against the lessor, and against the supplier if the supplier has notice of the lessee's entering the finance lease when the supply contract is modified or rescinded. The lessee's recovery from such action shall put the lessee in as good a position as if the modification or rescission had not occurred.~~ If the modification or rescission is effective between the supplier and the lessee, the lessor is deemed to have assumed, in addition to the obligations of the lessor to the lessee under the lease contract, promises of the supplier to the lessor and warranties that were so modified or rescinded as they existed and were available to the lessee before modification or rescission.

(4) In addition to the extension of the benefit of the supplier's promises and of warranties to the lessee under subsection (1), the lessee retains all rights that the lessee may have against the supplier which arise from an agreement between the lessee and the supplier or under other law.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: None.

Changes: This section is modeled on Section 9-318, the Restatement (Second) of Contracts §§ 302–315 (1981), and leasing practices. See Earman Oil Co. v. Burroughs Corp., 625 F.2d 1291, 1296–97 (5th Cir.1980).

Purposes:

1. The function performed by the lessor in a finance lease is extremely limited. Section 2A-103(1)(g). The lessee looks to the supplier of the goods for warranties and the like or, in some cases as to warranties, to the manufacturer if a warranty made by that person is passed on. That expectation is reflected in subsection (1), which is self-executing. As a matter of policy, the operation of this provision may not be excluded, modified or limited; however, an exclusion, modification, or limitation of any term of the supply contract or warranty, including any with respect to rights and remedies, and any defense or claim such as a statute of limitations, effective against the lessor as ~~buyer~~ the acquiring party under the supply contract, is also effective against the lessee as the beneficiary designated under this provision. ~~The~~ For example, the supplier is not precluded from excluding or modifying an express or implied warranty under a supply contract. Sections 2-312(2) and 2-316*, or Section 2A-214*. Further, the supplier is not precluded from limiting the rights and remedies of the lessor~~, as buyer,~~ and from liquidating damages. Sections 2-718 and 2-719 or Sections 2A-503 and 2A-504. If the supply contract excludes or modifies warranties, limits remedies ~~for breach~~, or liquidates damages with respect to the lessor, such provisions are enforceable against the lessee as beneficiary. Thus, only selective discrimination against the beneficiaries designated under this section is precluded, i.e., exclusion of the supplier's liability to the lessee with respect to warranties made to the lessor. This section does not affect the development of other law with respect to products liability.

2. Enforcement of this benefit is by action. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-106(2).

3. The benefit extended by these provisions is not without a price, as this Article also provides in the case of a finance lease that is not a consumer lease that the lessee's promises to the lessor under the lease contract become irrevocable and independent upon the lessee's acceptance of the goods. Section 2A-407.

4. Subsection (2) limits the effect of subsection (1) on the supplier and the lessor by preserving, notwithstanding the transfer of the benefits of the supply contract to the lessee, all of the supplier's and the lessor's rights and obligations with respect to each other and others; it further absolves the lessee of any duties with respect to the supply contract that might have been inferred from the extension of the benefits thereof.

5. Subsections (2) and (3) also deal with difficult issues related to modification or rescission of the supply contract. Subsection (2) states a rule that determines the impact of the statutory extension of benefit contained in subsection (1) upon the relationship of the parties to the supply contract and, in a limited respect, upon the lessee. This statutory extension of benefit, like that contained in Sections 2A-216 and 2-318, is not a modification of the supply contract by the parties. Thus, subsection (3) states the rules that apply to a modification or rescission of the supply contract by the parties. Subsection (3) ~~recognizes the lessee's potential causes of action against the lessor and the supplier arising from modification or rescission of the supply contract. The existence and extent of a cause of action by the supplier against the lessor is left to resolution by the courts based on the facts of each case.~~ provides that a modification or rescission is not effective between the supplier and the lessee if, before the modification or rescission occurs, the supplier received notice that the lessee has entered into the finance lease. On the other hand, if the modification or rescission is effective, then to the extent of the modification or rescission of the benefit or warranty, the lessor by statutory dictate assumes an obligation to provide to the lessee that which the lessee would otherwise lose. For example, assume a reduction in an express warranty from four years to one year. No prejudice to the lessee may occur if the goods perform as agreed. If, however, there is a breach of the express warranty after one year and before four years pass, the lessor is liable. A remedy for any prejudice to the lessee because of the bifurcation of the lessee's recourse resulting from the action of the supplier and the lessor is left to resolution by the courts based on the facts of each case.

6. Subsection (4) makes it clear that the rights granted to the lessee by this section do not displace any rights the lessee otherwise may have against the supplier.

Amendment 4

Section 2A-303 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-303. Alienability of Party's Interest Under Lease Contract or of Lessor's Residual Interest in Goods; Delegation of Performance; ~~Assignment~~ Transfer of Rights.

~~(1) Any interest of a party under a lease contract and the lessor's residual interest in the goods may be transferred unless~~

~~(a) the transfer is voluntary and the lease contract prohibits the transfer; or~~

~~(b) the transfer materially changes the duty of or materially increases the burden or risk imposed on the other party to the lease contract, and within a reasonable time after notice of the transfer the other party demands that the transferee comply with subsection (2) and the transferee fails to comply.~~

~~(2) Within a reasonable time after demand pursuant to subsection (1)(b), the transferee shall:~~

~~(a) cure or provide adequate assurance that he [or she] will promptly cure any default other than one arising from the transfer;~~

~~(b) compensate or provide adequate assurance that he [or she] will promptly compensate the other party to the lease contract and any other person holding an interest in the lease contract, except the party whose interest is being transferred, for any loss to that party resulting from the transfer;~~

~~(c) provide adequate assurance of future due performance under the lease contract; and~~

~~(d) assume the lease contract.~~

~~(3) Demand pursuant to subsection (1)(b) is without prejudice to the other party's rights against the transferee and the party whose interest is transferred.~~

(1) As used in this section, "creation of a security interest" includes the sale of a lease contract that is subject to Article 9, Secured Transactions, by reason of Section 9-102(1)(b).

(2) Except as provided in subsections (3) and (4), a provision in a lease agreement which (i) prohibits the voluntary or involuntary transfer, including a transfer by sale, sublease, creation or enforcement of a security interest, or attachment, levy, or other judicial process, of an interest of a party under the lease contract or of the lessor's residual interest in the goods, or (ii) makes such a transfer an event of default, gives rise to the rights and remedies provided in subsection (5), but a transfer that is prohibited or is an event of default under the lease agreement is otherwise effective.

(3) A provision in a lease agreement which (i) prohibits the creation or enforcement of a security interest in an interest of a party under the lease contract or in the lessor's residual interest in the goods, or (ii) makes such a transfer an event of default, is not enforceable unless, and then only to the extent that, there is an actual transfer by the lessee of the lessee's right of possession or use of the goods in violation of the provision or an actual delegation of a material performance of either party to the lease contract in violation of the provision. Neither the granting nor the enforcement of a security interest in (i) the lessor's interest under the lease contract or (ii) the lessor's residual interest in the goods is a transfer that materially impairs the prospect of obtaining return performance by, materially changes the duty of, or materially increases the burden or risk imposed on, the lessee within the purview of subsection (5) unless, and then only to the extent that, there is an actual delegation of a material performance of the lessor.

~~(6)~~ (4) A provision in a lease agreement which (i) prohibits a transfer of a right to damages for default with respect to the whole lease contract or of a right to payment arising out of the ~~assignor's~~ transferor's due performance of ~~his [or her]~~ the transferor's entire obligation ~~can be assigned despite agreement otherwise~~, or (ii) makes such a transfer an event of default, is not enforceable, and such a transfer is not a transfer that materially impairs the prospect of obtaining return performance by, materially changes the duty of, or materially increases the burden or risk imposed on, the other party to the lease contract within the purview of subsection (5).

(5) Subject to subsections (3) and (4):

(a) if a transfer is made which is made an event of default under a lease agreement, the party to the lease contract not making the transfer, unless that party waives the default or otherwise agrees, has the rights and remedies described in Section 2A-501(2);

(b) if paragraph (a) is not applicable and if a transfer is made that (i) is prohibited under a lease agreement or (ii) materially impairs the prospect of obtaining return performance by, materially changes the duty of, or materially increases the burden or risk imposed on, the other party to the lease contract, unless the party not making the transfer agrees at any time to the transfer in the lease contract or otherwise, then, except as limited by contract, (i) the transferor is liable to the party not making the transfer for damages caused by the transfer to the extent that the damages could not reasonably be prevented by the party not making the transfer and (ii) a court having jurisdiction may grant other appropriate relief, including cancellation of the lease contract or an injunction against the transfer.

~~(4)~~ (6) ~~An assignment~~ A transfer of "the lease" or of "all my rights under the lease", or ~~an assignment~~ a transfer in similar general terms, is a transfer of rights~~,~~ and, unless the language or the circumstances, as in ~~an assignment~~ a transfer for security, indicate the contrary, the ~~assignment~~ transfer is a delegation of duties by the ~~assignor to the assignee and acceptance~~ transferor to the transferee. Acceptance by the ~~assignee~~ transferee constitutes a promise by ~~him [or her]~~ the transferee to perform those duties. ~~This~~ The promise is enforceable by either the ~~assignor~~ transferor or the other party to the lease contract.

~~(5)~~ (7) Unless otherwise agreed by the lessor and the lessee, ~~no~~ a delegation of performance ~~relieves~~ does not relieve the ~~assignor~~ transferor as against the other party of any duty to perform or of any liability for default.

~~(7)~~ (8) ~~To~~ In a consumer lease, to prohibit the transfer of an interest of a party under ~~a~~ the lease contract or to make a transfer an event of default, the language ~~of prohibition~~ must be specific, by a writing, and conspicuous.

Uniform Statutory Source: ~~Section~~ Sections 2-210 and 9-311.

Changes: ~~The provisions of Section 2-210 were incorporated in this Article, with substantial modifications to reflect leasing terminology and practice, as well as certain developments of the law with respect to creditors' rights.~~ The provisions of Sections 2-210 and 9-311 were incorporated in this section, with substantial modifications to reflect leasing terminology and practice and to harmonize the principles of the respective provisions, i.e. limitations on delegation of performance on the one hand and alienability of rights on the other. In addition, unlike Section 2-210 which deals only with voluntary transfers, this section deals with involuntary as well as voluntary transfers. Moreover, the principle of Section 9-318(4) denying effectiveness to contractual terms prohibiting assignments of receivables due and to become due also is implemented.

Purposes: ~~Unlike Section 2-210, which deals with voluntary transfers of rights and duties under a sales contract, this section deals with involuntary as well as voluntary transfers of rights and duties under a lease contract. Voluntary transfers are permitted unless prohibited by the lease contract or, as is also the case for involuntary transfers, there is a material change in the duty of, or a material increase in the burden or risk to, the other party to the lease contract and the transferee fails to comply with the conditions in subsection (2) within a reasonable time after a demand, which need not be in writing, has been made for such compliance.~~

~~Subsection (2) establishes four criteria that must be satisfied by the transferee after a demand has been made. These criteria are modeled on the requirements contained in the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, as amended, 11 U.S.C. § 365 (1982 & Supp. II 1984), governing the assumption and assignment of an unexpired lease or executory contract by a trustee in bankruptcy. Section 2-210(5) resolves this issue for sales by allowing the other party to demand assurances from the transferee (Section 2-609). Section 365 of the Bankruptcy Code, a modern version of the provisions of Section 2-609, provided a better model for resolving this issue for leases.~~

~~Sections 9-206 and 9-318 are also relevant in this context. Section 9-206 sanctions an agreement by a lessee not to assert certain types of claims or defenses against the lessor's assignee. Section 9-318 deals with, among other things, the other party's rights against the assignee where Section 9-206(1) does not apply. Since the definition of contract under Section 1-201(11) includes a lease agreement, the definition of account debtor under Section 9-105(1)(a) includes a lessee of goods and Section 9-206 applies to lease agreements; thus, there is no need to restate those sections in this Article. However, the reference to "defenses or claims arising out of a sale" in Section 9-318(1) should be interpreted broadly to include defenses or claims arising out of a lease. This should follow as Section 9-318(1) codifies the common law rule with respect to contracts, including contracts of sale and contracts of lease. Further, Section 9-318(4) should be interpreted to allow the rule of this section to control with respect to transfers of leases.~~

1. Subsection (2) states a rule, consistent with Section 9-311, that voluntary and involuntary transfers of an interest of a party under the lease contract or of the lessor's residual interest, including by way of the creation or enforcement of a security interest, are effective, notwithstanding a provision in the lease agreement prohibiting the transfer or making the transfer an event of default. Although the transfers are effective, the provision in the lease agreement is nevertheless enforceable, but only as provided in subsection (5). Under subsection (5) the prejudiced party is limited to the remedies on "default under the lease contract" in this Article and, except as limited by this Article, as provided in the lease agreement, if the transfer has been made an event of default. Section 2A-501(2). Usually, there will be a specific provision to this effect or a general provision making a breach of a covenant an event of default. In those cases where the transfer is prohibited, but not made an event of default, the prejudiced party may recover damages; or, if the damage remedy would be ineffective adequately to protect that party, the court can order cancellation of the lease contract or enjoin the transfer. This rule that such provisions generally are enforceable is subject to subsections (3) and (4), which make such provisions unenforceable in certain instances.

2. The first such instance is described in subsection (3). A provision in a lease agreement which prohibits the creation or enforcement of a security interest, including sales of lease contracts subject to Article 9 (Sections 9-102(1)(b) and 9-104(f)), or makes it an event of default is generally not enforceable, reflecting the policy of Section 9-318(4). However, that policy gives way to the doctrine stated in Section 2-210(2), which gives one party to a contract the right to protect itself against an actual delegation (but not just a provision under which delegation might later occur) of a material performance by the other party. Accordingly, such a provision in a lease agreement is enforceable when the transfer delegates a material performance. Generally, as expressly provided in subsection (6), a transfer for security is not a delegation of duties. However, inasmuch as the creation of a security interest includes the sale of a lease contract, if there are then unperformed duties on the part of the lessor/seller, there could be a delegation of duties in the sale, and, if such a delegation actually takes place and is of a material performance, a provision in a lease agreement prohibiting it or making it an event of default would be enforceable, giving rise to the rights and remedies stated in subsection (5). The statute does not define "material." The parties may set standards to determine its meaning. The term is intended to exclude delegations of matters such as accounting to a professional accountant and the performance of, as opposed to the responsibility for, maintenance duties to a person in the maintenance service industry.

3. For similar reasons, the lessor is entitled to protect its residual interest in the goods by prohibiting anyone but the lessee from possessing or using them. Accordingly, under subsection (3) if there is an actual transfer by the lessee of its right of possession or use of the goods in violation of a provision in the lease agreement, such a provision likewise is enforceable, giving rise to the rights and remedies stated in subsection (5). A transfer of the lessee's right of possession or use of the goods resulting from the enforcement of a security interest granted by the lessee in its leasehold interest is a "transfer by the lessee" under this subsection.

4. Finally, subsection (3) protects against a claim that the creation or enforcement of a security interest in the lessor's interest under the lease contract or in the residual interest is a transfer that materially impairs the prospect of obtaining return performance by, materially changes the duty of, or materially increases the burden or risk imposed on the lessee so as to give rise to the rights and remedies stated in subsection (5), unless the transfer involves an actual delegation of a material performance of the lessor.

5. While it is not likely that a transfer by the lessor of its right to payment under the lease contract would impair at a future time the ability of the lessee to obtain the performance due the lessee under the lease contract from the lessor, if under the circumstances reasonable grounds for insecurity as to receiving that performance arise, the lessee may employ the provision of this Article for demanding adequate assurance of due performance and has the remedy provided in that circumstance. Section 2A-401.

6. Sections 9-206 and 9-318(1) through (3) also are relevant. Section 9-206 sanctions an agreement by a lessee not to assert certain types of claims or defenses against the lessor's assignee. Section 9-318(1) through (3) deal with, among other things, the other party's rights against the assignee where Section 9-206(1) does not apply. Since the definition of contract under Section 1-201(11) includes a lease agreement, the definition of account debtor under Section 9-105(1)(a) includes a lessee of goods. As a result, Section 9-206 applies to lease agreements, and there is no need to restate those sections in this Article. The reference to "defenses or claims arising out of a sale" in Section 9-318(1) should be interpreted broadly to include defenses or claims arising out of a lease inasmuch as that section codifies the common law rule with respect to contracts, including lease contracts.

7. Subsection (4) is based upon Section 2-210(2) and Section 9-318(4). It makes unenforceable a prohibition against transfers of certain rights to payment or a provision making the transfer an event of default. It also provides that such transfers do not materially impair the prospect of obtaining return performance by, materially change the duty of, or materially increase the burden or risk imposed on, the other party to the lease contract so as to give rise to the rights and remedies stated in subsection (5). Accordingly, a transfer of a right to payment cannot be prohibited or made an event of default, or be one that materially impairs performance, changes duties or increases risk, if the right is already due or will become due without further performance being required by the party to receive payment. Thus, a lessor can transfer the right to future payments under the lease contract, including by way of a grant of a security interest, and the transfer will not give rise to the rights and remedies stated in subsection (5) if the lessor has no remaining performance under the lease contract. The mere fact that the lessor is obligated to allow the lessee to remain in possession and to use the goods as long as the lessee is not in default does not mean that there is "remaining performance" on the part of the lessor. Likewise, the fact that the lessor has potential liability under a "non-operating" lease contract for breaches of warranty does not mean that there is "remaining performance." In contrast, the lessor would have "remaining performance" under a lease contract requiring the lessor to regularly maintain and service the goods or to provide "upgrades" of the equipment on a periodic basis in order to avoid obsolescence. The basic distinction is between a mere potential duty to respond which is not "remaining performance," and an affirmative duty to render stipulated performance. Although the distinction may be difficult to draw in some cases, it is instructive to focus on the difference between "operating" and "non-operating" leases as generally understood in the marketplace. Even if there is "remaining performance" under a lease contract, a transfer for security of a right to payment that is made an event of default or that is in violation of a prohibition against transfer does not give rise to the rights and remedies under subsection (5) if it does not constitute an actual delegation of a material performance under subsection (3).

8. The application of either the rule of subsection (3) or the rule of subsection (4) to the grant by the lessor of a security interest in the lessor's right to future payment under the lease contract may produce the same result. Both subsections generally protect security transfers by the lessor in particular because the creation by the lessor of a security interest or the enforcement of that interest generally will not prejudice the lessee's rights if it does not result in a delegation of the lessor's duties. To the contrary, the receipt of loan proceeds or relief from the enforcement of an antecedent debt normally should enhance the lessor's ability to perform its duties under the lease contract. Nevertheless, there are circumstances where relief might be justified. For example, if ownership of the goods is transferred pursuant to enforcement of a security interest to a party whose ownership would prevent the lessee from continuing to possess the goods, relief might be warranted. See 49 U.S.C.A. § 1401(a) and (b) which places limitations on the operation of aircraft in the United States based on the citizenship or corporate qualification of the registrant.

9. Relief on the ground of material prejudice when the lease agreement does not prohibit the transfer or make it an event of default should be afforded only in extreme circumstances, considering the fact that the party asserting material prejudice did not insist upon a provision in the lease agreement that would protect against such a transfer.

10. Subsection (5) implements the rule of subsection (2). Subsection (2) provides that, even though a transfer is effective, a provision in the lease agreement prohibiting it or making it an event of default may be enforceable as provided in subsection (5). See Brummond v. First National Bank of Clovis, 99 N.M. 221, 656 P.2d 884, 35 U.C.C.Rep.Serv. (Callaghan) 1311 (1983), stating the analogous rule for Section 9-311. If the transfer prohibited by the lease agreement is made an event of default, then, under subsection 5(a), unless the default is waived or there is an agreement otherwise, the aggrieved party has the rights and remedies referred to in Section 2A-501(2), viz. those in this Article and, except as limited in the Article, those provided in the lease agreement. In the unlikely circumstance that the lease agreement prohibits the transfer without making a violation of the prohibition an event of default or, even if there is no prohibition against the transfer, and the transfer is one that materially impairs performance, changes duties, or increases risk (for example, a sublease or assignment to a party using the goods improperly or for an illegal purpose), then subsection 5(b) is applicable. In that circumstance, unless the party aggrieved by the transfer has otherwise agreed in the lease contract, such as by assenting to a particular transfer or to transfers in general, or agrees in some other manner, the aggrieved party has the right to recover damages from the transferor and a court may, in appropriate circumstances, grant other relief, such as cancellation of the lease contract or an injunction against the transfer.

11. If a transfer gives rise to the rights and remedies provided in subsection (5), the transferee as an alternative may propose, and the other party may accept, adequate cure or compensation for past defaults and adequate assurance of future due performance under the lease contract. Subsection (5) does not preclude any other relief that may be available to a party to the lease contract aggrieved by a transfer subject to an enforceable prohibition, such as an action for interference with contractual relations.

12. Subsection (8) requires that a provision in a consumer lease prohibiting a transfer, or making it an event of default, must be specific, written and conspicuous. See Section 1-201(10). This assists in protecting a consumer lessee against surprise assertions of default.

13. Subsection ~~(4)~~ (6) is taken almost verbatim from the provisions of Section 2-210(4). The subsection states a rule of construction that distinguishes a commercial assignment, which substitutes the assignee for the assignor as to rights and duties, and an assignment for security or financing assignment, which substitutes the assignee for the assignor only as to rights. Note that the assignment for security or financing assignment is a subset of all security interests. Security interest is defined to include "any interest of a buyer of . . . chattel paper". Section 1-201(37). Chattel paper is defined to include a lease. Section 9-105(1)(b). Thus, a buyer of leases is the holder of a security interest in the leases. That conclusion should not influence this issue, as the policy is quite different. Whether a buyer of leases is the holder of a commercial assignment, or an assignment for security or financing assignment should be determined by the language of the assignment or the circumstances of the assignment.

~~While it is recognized that a lease contract may impose restrictions on the transfer of an interest of a party under a lease, such restrictions are not generally favored in law. Subsection (7) balances these competing interests and ensures that both parties knowingly impose prohibitions on transfer, by providing that the language of prohibition be specific, by a writing, and conspicuous.~~

Section 2A-304 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-304. Subsequent Lease of Goods by Lessor.

(1) Subject to ~~the provisions of~~ Section 2A-303, a subsequent lessee from a lessor of goods under an existing lease contract obtains, to the extent of the leasehold interest transferred, the leasehold interest in the goods that the lessor had or had power to transfer, and except as provided in subsection (2) and Section 2A-527(4), takes subject to the existing lease contract. A lessor with voidable title has power to transfer a good leasehold interest to a good faith subsequent lessee for value, but only to the extent set forth in the preceding sentence. ~~When~~ If goods have been delivered under a transaction of purchase*,* the lessor has that power even though:

(a) the lessor's transferor was deceived as to the identity of the lessor;

(b) the delivery was in exchange for a check which is later dishonored;

(c) it was agreed that the transaction was to be a "cash sale"; or

(d) the delivery was procured through fraud punishable as larcenous under the criminal law.

(2) A subsequent lessee in the ordinary course of business from a lessor who is a merchant dealing in goods of that kind to whom the goods were entrusted by the existing lessee of that lessor before the interest of the subsequent lessee became enforceable against ~~the~~ that lessor obtains, to the extent of the leasehold interest transferred, all of ~~the~~ that lessor's and the existing lessee's rights to the goods, and takes free of the existing lease contract.

(3) A subsequent lessee from the lessor of goods that are subject to an existing lease contract and are covered by a certificate of title issued under a statute of this State or of another jurisdiction takes no greater rights than those provided both by this section and by the certificate of title statute.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 2-403.

Changes: While Section 2-403 was used as a model for this section, the provisions of Section 2-403 were significantly revised to reflect leasing practices and to integrate this Article with certificate of title statutes.

Purposes:

1. This section must be read in conjunction with, as it is subject to, the provisions of Section 2A-303, which govern voluntary and involuntary transfers of rights and duties under a lease contract, including the lessor's residual interest in the goods.

2. This section must also be read in conjunction with Section 2-403. This section and Section 2A-305 are derived from Section 2-403, which states a unified policy on good faith purchases of goods. Given the scope of the definition of purchaser (Section 1-201(33)), a person who bought goods to lease as well as a person who bought goods subject to an existing lease from a lessor will take pursuant to Section 2-403. Further, a person who leases such goods from the person who bought them should also be protected under Section 2-403, first because the lessee's rights are derivative and second because the definition of purchaser should be interpreted to include one who takes by lease; no negative implication should be drawn from the inclusion of lease in the definition of purchase in this Article. Section 2A-103(1)(v).

3. There are hypotheticals that relate to an entrustee's unauthorized lease of entrusted goods to a third party that are outside the provisions of Sections 2-403, 2A-304 and 2A-305. Consider a sale of goods by M, a merchant, to B, a buyer. After paying for the goods B allows M to retain possession of the goods as B is short of storage. Before B calls for the goods M leases the goods to L, a lessee. This transaction is not governed by Section 2-403(2) as L is not a buyer in the ordinary course of business. Section 1-201(9). Further, this transaction is not governed by Section 2A-304(2) as B is not an existing lessee. Finally, this transaction is not governed by Section 2A-305(2) as B is not M's lessor. Section 2A-307(2) resolves the potential dispute between B, M and L. By virtue of B's entrustment of the goods to M and M's lease of the goods to L, B has a cause of action against M under the common law. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-103. See, e.g., Restatement (Second) of Torts §§ 222A–243. Thus, B is a creditor of M. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-201(12). Section 2A-307(2) provides that B, as M's creditor, takes subject to M's lease to L. Thus, if L does not default under the lease, L's enjoyment and possession of the goods should be undisturbed. However, B is not without recourse. B's action should result in a judgment against M providing, among other things, a turnover of all proceeds arising from M's lease to L, as well as a transfer of all of M's right, title and interest as lessor under M's lease to L, including M's residual interest in the goods. Section 2A-103(1)(q).

4. Subsection (1) states a rule with respect to the leasehold interest obtained by a subsequent lessee from a lessor of goods under an existing lease contract. The interest will include such leasehold interest as the lessor has in the goods as well as the leasehold interest that the lessor had the power to transfer. Thus, the subsequent lessee obtains unimpaired all rights acquired under the law of agency, apparent agency, ownership or other estoppel, whether based upon statutory provisions or upon case law principles. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-103. In general, the subsequent lessee takes subject to the existing lease contract, including the existing lessee's rights thereunder. Furthermore, the subsequent lease contract is, of course, limited by its own terms, and the subsequent lessee takes only to the extent of the leasehold interest transferred thereunder.

5. Subsection (1) further provides that a lessor with voidable title has power to transfer a good leasehold interest to a good faith subsequent lessee for value. In addition, subsections (1)(a) through (d) provide specifically for the protection of the good faith subsequent lessee for value in a number of specific situations which have been troublesome under prior law.

6. The position of an existing lessee who entrusts leased goods to its lessor is not distinguishable from the position of other entrusters. Thus, subsection (2) provides that the subsequent lessee in the ordinary course of business takes free of the existing lease contract between the lessor entrustee and the lessee entruster, if the lessor is a merchant dealing in goods of that kind. Further, the subsequent lessee obtains all of the lessor entrustee's and the lessee entruster's rights to the goods, but only to the extent of the leasehold interest transferred by the lessor entrustee. Thus, the lessor entrustee retains the residual interest in the goods. Section 2A-103(1)(q). However, entrustment by the existing lessee must have occurred before the interest of the subsequent lessee became enforceable against the lessor. Entrusting is defined in Section 2-403(3) and that definition applies here. Section 2A-103(3).

7. Subsection (3) states a rule with respect to a transfer of goods from a lessor to a subsequent lessee where the goods are subject to an existing lease and covered by a certificate of title. The subsequent lessee's rights are no greater than those provided by this section and the applicable certificate of title statute, including any applicable case law construing such statute. Where the relationship between the certificate of title statute and Section 2-403, the statutory analogue to this section, has been construed by a court, that construction is incorporated here. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-102(1) and (2). The better rule is that the certificate of title statutes are in harmony with Section 2-403 and thus would be in harmony with this section. E.g., Atwood Chevrolet-Olds v. Aberdeen Mun. School Dist., 431 So.2d 926, 928 (Miss.1983); Godfrey v. Gilsdorf, 86 Nev. 714, 718, 476 P.2d 3, 6 (1970); Martin v. Nager, 192 N.J.Super. 189, 197–98, 469 A.2d 519, 523 (Ch.Div.1983). Where the certificate of title statute is silent on this issue of transfer, this section will control.

Amendment 6

Section 2A-307 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-307. Priority of Liens Arising by Attachment or Levy on, Security Interests in, and Other Claims to Goods.

(1) Except as otherwise provided in Section 2A-306, a creditor of a lessee takes subject to the lease contract.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in subsections (3) and (4) ~~of this section~~ and in Sections 2A-306 and 2A-308, a creditor of a lessor takes subject to the lease contract unless:

(a) ~~unless~~ the creditor holds a lien that attached to the goods before the lease contract became enforceable, ~~or~~

(b) ~~unless~~ the creditor holds a security interest in the goods ~~that under the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9) would have priority over any other security interest in the goods perfected by a filing covering the goods and made at the time the lease contract became enforceable, whether or not any other security interest existed.~~ and the lessee did not give value and receive delivery of the goods without knowledge of the security interest; or

(c) the creditor holds a security interest in the goods which was perfected (Section 9-303) before the lease contract became enforceable.

(3) A lessee in the ordinary course of business takes the leasehold interest free of a security interest in the goods created by the lessor even though the security interest is perfected (Section 9-303) and the lessee knows of its existence.

(4) A lessee other than a lessee in the ordinary course of business takes the leasehold interest free of a security interest to the extent that it secures future advances made after the secured party acquires knowledge of the lease or more than 45 days after the lease contract becomes enforceable, whichever first occurs, unless the future advances are made pursuant to a commitment entered into without knowledge of the lease and before the expiration of the 45-day period.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: None for ~~subsections~~ subsection (1) ~~and (2)~~. ~~Subsections~~ Subsection (2) is derived from Section 9-301, and subsections (3) and (4) are derived from ~~the provisions of~~ Section 9-307(1) and (3), respectively.

Changes: The provisions of ~~Section~~ Sections 9-301 and 9-307(1) and (3) were incorporated, and modified to reflect leasing terminology and the basic concepts reflected in this Article.

Purposes:

1. Subsection (1) states a general rule of priority that a creditor of the lessee takes subject to the lease contract. The term lessee (Section 2A-103(1)(n)) includes sublessee. Therefore, this subsection not only covers disputes between the prime lessor and a creditor of the prime lessee but also disputes between the prime lessor, or the sublessor, and a creditor of the sublessee. Section 2A-301 official comment 3(g). Further, by using the term creditor (Section 1-201(12)), this subsection will cover disputes with a general creditor, a secured creditor, a lien creditor and any representative of creditors. Section 2A-103(4).

2. Subsection (2) states a general rule of priority that a creditor of a lessor takes subject to the lease contract. Note the discussion above with regard to the scope of these rules. Section 2A-301 official comment 3(g). Thus, the section will not only cover disputes between the prime lessee and a creditor of the prime lessor but also disputes between the prime lessee, or the sublessee, and a creditor of the sublessor.

3. To take priority over the lease contract, and the interests derived therefrom, the creditor must come within one of ~~two~~ three exceptions stated within the rule. First, subsection (2)(a) provides that where the creditor holds a lien (Section 2A-103(1)(r)) that attached before the lease contract became enforceable (Section 2A-301), the creditor does not take subject to the lease. Second, subsection (2)(b) provides that when the creditor holds a security interest (Section 1-201(37)) ~~that would have~~, whether or not perfected, the creditor has priority over a ~~hypothetical~~ lessee who did not give value (Section 1-201(44)) and receive delivery of the goods without knowledge (Section 1-201(25)) of the security interest. As to other lessees, under subsection (2)(c) a secured creditor holding a perfected security interest ~~perfected by a filing made at~~ before the time the lease contract became enforceable (Section 2A-301)~~, the creditor~~ does not take subject to the lease. With respect to this provision ~~the hypothetical secured creditor is not the holder of a purchase money security interest entitled to special priority: first, the facts and circumstances relating to the security interest described in Section 2A-307(2)(b) would not create a purchase money security interest as defined in Section 9-107, and second, assuming arguendo that it did create a purchase money security interest, the facts and circumstances relating to the security interest described in Section 2A-307(2)(b) would not create a special priority under the provisions of Section 9-312(3) or (4). Thus, the priority rules of Section 9-312(5) govern the security interest held by the hypothetical secured creditor. The use of a hypothetical creditor as a statutory means to resolve disputes between competing interests is not without precedent. The Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, as amended, 11 U.S.C. § 544(a) (1982 & Supp. H 1984)~~, the lessee in these circumstances is treated like a buyer so that perfection of a purchase money security interest does not relate back (Section 9-301).

4. The rules of this section operate in favor of whichever party to the lease contract may enforce it, even if one party perhaps may not, e.g., under Section 2A-201(1)(b).

5. The ~~rule~~ rules stated in ~~subsection~~ subsections (2)(b) and (c), and the rule in subsection (3), ~~is~~ are best understood by reviewing a hypothetical. Assume that a merchant engaged in the business of selling and leasing musical instruments obtained possession of a truck load of musical instruments on deferred payment terms from a supplier of musical instruments on January 6. To secure payment of such credit the merchant granted the supplier a security interest in the instruments; the security interest was perfected by filing on January 15. The merchant, as lessor, entered into a lease to an individual of one of the musical instruments supplied by the supplier; the lease became enforceable on ~~March 1~~ January 10. Under subsection (2)(b) the lessee will prevail (assuming the lessee qualifies thereunder) unless subsection (c) provides otherwise. Under the rule stated in subsection ~~(2)(b)~~ (2)(c) a priority dispute between the supplier, as the lessor's secured creditor, and the lessee would be determined by ~~assuming that~~ ascertaining on ~~March 1~~ January 10 (the day the lease became enforceable) ~~the merchant had granted a~~ the validity and perfected status of the security interest in ~~such~~ the musical ~~instruments to a hypothetical secured creditor and the hypothetical secured creditor perfected such security interest by filing on March 1. Under the priority rules of the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9) the hypothetical secured creditor would lose in a priority dispute with the supplier. Section 9-312(5)(a). Thus~~ instrument and the enforceability of the lease contract by the lessee. Nothing more appearing, under the rule stated in subsection ~~(2)(b)~~ (2)(c), the supplier's security interest in the musical instrument would not have priority over the lease contract. ~~However~~ Moreover, subsection ~~(2)(b)~~ (2) states that its ~~rule is~~ rules are subject to the rules of subsections (3) and (4). Under this hypothetical the lessee should qualify as a "lessee in the ordinary course of business". Section 2A-103(1)(o). Subsection (3) also makes clear that the lessee in the ordinary course of business will win even if he or she knows of the existence of the supplier's security interest.

6. Subsections (3) and (4), which are modeled on the provisions of Section 9-307(1) and (3), respectively, state two exceptions to the priority rule stated in subsection (2) with respect to a creditor who holds a security interest. The lessee in the ordinary course of business will be treated in the same fashion as the buyer in the ordinary course of business, given a priority dispute with a secured creditor over goods subject to a lease contract.

Amendment 7

Section 2A-309 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-309. Lessor's and Lessee's Rights When Goods Become Fixtures.

(1) In this section:

(a) goods are "fixtures" when they become so related to particular real estate that an interest in them arises under real estate law;

(b) a "fixture filing" is the filing, in the office where a mortgage on the real estate would be filed or recorded ~~or registered~~, of a financing statement ~~concerning~~ covering goods that are or are to become fixtures and conforming to the requirements ~~of subsection (5)~~ of Section ~~9-402~~ 9-402(5);

(c) a lease is a "purchase money lease" unless the lessee has possession or use of the goods or the right to possession or use of the goods before the lease agreement is enforceable;

(d) a mortgage is a "construction mortgage" to the extent it secures an obligation incurred for the construction of an improvement on land including the acquisition cost of the land, if the recorded writing so indicates; and

(e) "encumbrance" includes real estate mortgages and other liens on real estate and all other rights in real estate that are not ownership interests.

(2) Under this Article a lease may be of goods that are fixtures or may continue in goods that become fixtures, but no lease exists under this Article of ordinary building materials incorporated into an improvement on land.

(3) This Article does not prevent creation of a lease of fixtures pursuant to real estate law.

(4) The perfected interest of a lessor of fixtures has priority over a conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the real estate if:

(a) the lease is a purchase money lease, the conflicting interest of the encumbrancer or owner arises before the goods become fixtures, the interest of the lessor is perfected by a fixture filing before the goods become fixtures or within ten days thereafter, and the lessee has an interest of record in the real estate or is in possession of the real estate; or

(b) the interest of the lessor is perfected by a fixture filing before the interest of the encumbrancer or owner is of record, the lessor's interest has priority over any conflicting interest of a predecessor in title of the encumbrancer or owner, and the lessee has an interest of record in the real estate or is in possession of the real estate.

(5) The interest of a lessor of fixtures, whether or not perfected, has priority over the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the real estate if:

(a) the fixtures are readily removable factory or office machines, readily removable equipment that is not primarily used or leased for use in the operation of the real estate, or readily removable replacements of domestic appliances that are goods subject to a consumer lease, and before the goods become fixtures the lease contract is enforceable; or

(b) the conflicting interest is a lien on the real estate obtained by legal or equitable proceedings after the lease contract is enforceable; or

(c) the encumbrancer or owner has consented in writing to the lease or has disclaimed an interest in the goods as fixtures; or

(d) the lessee has a right to remove the goods as against the encumbrancer or owner. If the lessee's right to remove terminates, the priority of the interest of the lessor continues for a reasonable time.

(6) Notwithstanding ~~paragraph (a) of~~ subsection ~~(4)~~ (4)(a) but otherwise subject to subsections (4) and (5), the interest of a lessor of fixtures*, including the lessor's residual interest,* is subordinate to the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer of the real estate under a construction mortgage recorded before the goods become fixtures if the goods become fixtures before the completion of the construction. To the extent given to refinance a construction mortgage, the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer of the real estate under a mortgage has this priority to the same extent as the encumbrancer of the real estate under the construction mortgage.

(7) In cases not within the preceding subsections, priority between the interest of a lessor of fixtures*, including the lessor's residual interest,* and the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the real estate who is not the lessee is determined by the priority rules governing conflicting interests in real estate.

(8) If the interest of a lessor of fixtures, including the lessor's residual interest, has priority over all conflicting interests of all owners and encumbrancers of the real estate, the lessor or the lessee may ~~(a)~~ (i) on default, expiration, termination, or cancellation of the lease agreement ~~by the other party~~ but subject to the ~~provisions of the~~ lease agreement and this Article, or ~~(b)~~ (ii) if necessary to enforce ~~his [or her]~~ other rights and remedies of the lessor or lessee under this Article, remove the goods from the real estate, free and clear of all conflicting interests of all owners and encumbrancers of the real estate, but ~~he [or she]~~ the lessor or lessee must reimburse any encumbrancer or owner of the real estate who is not the lessee and who has not otherwise agreed for the cost of repair of any physical injury, but not for any diminution in value of the real estate caused by the absence of the goods removed or by any necessity of replacing them. A person entitled to reimbursement may refuse permission to remove until the party seeking removal gives adequate security for the performance of this obligation.

(9) Even though the lease agreement does not create a security interest, the interest of a lessor of fixtures*, including the lessor's residual interest,* is perfected by filing a financing statement as a fixture filing for leased goods that are or are to become fixtures in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9).

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 9-313.

Changes: Revised to reflect leasing terminology and to add new material.

Purposes:

1. While Section 9-313 provided a model for this section, certain provisions were substantially revised.

2. Section 2A-309(1)(c), which is new, defines purchase money lease to exclude leases where the lessee had possession or use of the goods or the right thereof before the lease agreement became enforceable. This term is used in subsection (4)(a) as one of the conditions that must be satisfied to obtain priority over the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the real estate.

3. Section 2A-309(4), which states one of several priority rules found in this section, deletes reference to office machines and the like (Section 9-313(4)(c)) as well as certain liens (Section 9-313(4)(d)). However, these items are included in subsection (5), another priority rule that is more permissive than the rule found in subsection (4) as it applies whether or not the interest of the lessor is perfected. In addition, subsection (5)(a) expands the scope of the provisions of Section 9-313(4)(c) to include readily removable equipment not primarily used or leased for use in the operation of real estate; the qualifier is intended to exclude from the expanded rule equipment integral to the operation of real estate, e.g., heating and air conditioning equipment.

4. The rule stated in subsection (7) is more liberal than the rule stated in Section 9-313(7) in that issues of priority not otherwise resolved in this subsection are left for resolution by the priority rules governing conflicting interests in real estate, as opposed to the Section 9-313(7) automatic subordination of the security interest in fixtures. Note that, for the purpose of this section, where the interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the real estate is paramount to the interest of the lessor, the latter term includes the residual interest of the lessor.

5. The rule stated in subsection (8) is more liberal than the rule stated in Section 9-313(8) in that the right of removal is extended to both the lessor and the lessee and the occasion for removal includes expiration, termination or cancellation of the lease agreement, and enforcement of rights and remedies under this Article, as well as default. The new language also provides that upon removal the goods are free and clear of conflicting interests of owners and encumbrancers of the real estate.

6. Finally, subsection (9) provides a mechanism for the lessor of fixtures to perfect its interest by filing a financing statement under the provisions of the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9), even though the lease agreement does not create a security interest. Section 1-201(37). The relevant provisions of Article 9 must be interpreted permissively to give effect to this mechanism as it implicitly expands the scope~~, perfection and priority provisions~~ of Article 9 so that its filing provisions apply to ~~govern~~ transactions that create a lease of fixtures, even though the lease agreement does not create a security interest. This mechanism is similar to that provided in Section 2-326(3)(c) for the seller of goods on consignment, even though the consignment is not "intended as security". Section 1-201(37). Given the lack of litigation with respect to the mechanism created for consignment sales, this new mechanism should prove effective. ~~Note, however, that this is a more pervasive change in Article 9 than that wrought by expanding the filing system to accommodate permissive filing for leases. U.C.C. § 9-408 app. II (West 1983) (Reasons for 1972 Adoption of New Section).~~

Section 2A-311 of the Article is added to read:

§ 2A-311. Priority Subject to Subordination.

Nothing in this Article prevents subordination by agreement by any person entitled to priority.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 9-316.

Purposes: The several preceding sections deal with questions of priority. This section is inserted to make it entirely clear that a person entitled to priority may effectively agree to subordinate the claim. Only the person entitled to priority may make such an agreement: the rights of such a person cannot be adversely affected by an agreement to which that person is not a party.

Amendment 9

Section 2A-407 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-407. Irrevocable Promises: Finance Leases.

(1) In the case of a finance lease that is not a consumer lease the lessee's promises under the lease contract become irrevocable and independent upon the lessee's acceptance of the goods.

(2) A promise that has become irrevocable and independent under subsection (1):

(a) is effective and enforceable between the parties, and by or against third parties including assignees of the parties~~,~~; and

(b) is not subject to cancellation, termination, modification, repudiation, excuse, or substitution without the consent of the party to whom the promise runs.

(3) This section does not affect the validity under any other law of a covenant in any lease contract making the lessee's promises irrevocable and independent upon the lessee's acceptance of the goods.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: None.

Purposes:

1. This section extends the benefits of the classic "hell or high water" clause to a finance lease that is not a consumer lease. This section is self-executing; no special provision need be added to the contract. This section makes covenants in a finance lease irrevocable and independent due to the function of the finance lessor in a three party relationship: the lessee is looking to the supplier to perform the essential covenants and warranties. Section 2A-209. Thus, upon the lessee's acceptance of the goods the lessee's promises to the lessor under the lease contract become irrevocable and independent. The provisions of this section remain subject to the obligation of good faith (Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-203), and the lessee's revocation of acceptance (Section 2A-517).

2. The section requires the lessee to perform even if the lessor's performance after the lessee's acceptance is not in accordance with the lease contract; the lessee may, however, have and pursue a cause of action against the lessor, e.g., breach of certain limited warranties (Sections 2A-210 and ~~211(1)~~ 2A-211(1)). This is appropriate because the benefit of the supplier's promises and warranties to the lessor under the supply contract and, in some cases, the warranty of a manufacturer who is not the supplier, is extended to the lessee under the finance lease. Section 2A-209. Despite this balance, this section excludes a finance lease that is a consumer lease. That a consumer be obligated to pay notwithstanding defective goods or the like is a principle that is not tenable under case law (Unico v. Owen, 50 N.J. 101, 232 A.2d 405 (1967)), state statute (Unif. Consumer Credit Code §§ 3.403–3.405, 7A U.L.A. 126–31 (1974)), or federal statute (15 U.S.C.A. § 1666i (1982)).

3. The relationship of the three parties to a transaction that qualifies as a finance lease is best demonstrated by a hypothetical. A, the potential lessor, has been contacted by B, the potential lessee, to discuss the lease of an expensive line of equipment that B has recently placed an order for with C, the manufacturer of such goods. The negotiation is completed and A, as lessor, and B, as lessee, sign a lease of the line of equipment for a 60-month term. B, as buyer, assigns the purchase order with C to A. If this transaction creates a lease (Section 2A-103(1)(j)), this transaction should qualify as a finance lease. Section 2A-103(1)(g).

4. The line of equipment is delivered by C to B's place of business. After installation by C and testing by B, B accepts the goods by signing a certificate of delivery and acceptance, a copy of which is sent by B to A and C. One year later the line of equipment malfunctions and B falls behind in its manufacturing schedule.

5. Under this Article, because the lease is a finance lease, no warranty of fitness or merchantability is extended by A to B. Sections 2A-212(1) and 2A-213. Absent an express provision in the lease agreement, application of Section 2A-210 or Section 2A-211(1), or application of the principles of law and equity, including the law with respect to fraud, duress, or the like (Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-103), B has no claim against A. B's obligation to pay rent to A continues as the obligation became irrevocable and independent when B accepted the line of equipment (Section 2A-407(1)). B has no right of set-off with respect to any part of the rent still due under the lease. Section 2A-508(6). However, B may have another remedy. Despite the lack of privity between B and C (the purchase order with C having been assigned by B to A), B may have a claim against C. Section 2A-209(1).

6. This section ~~is silent as to~~ does not address whether a "hell or high water" clause, i.e., a clause that is to the effect of this section, is enforceable if included in a finance lease that is a consumer lease or a lease that is not a finance lease. That issue will continue to be determined by the facts of each case and other law which this section does not affect. Sections 2A-104, 2A-103(4), 9-206 and 9-318. However, with respect to finance leases that are not consumer leases courts have enforced "hell or high water" clauses. In re O.P.M. Leasing Servs., 21 B.R. 993, 1006 (Bkrtcy.N.Y.1982).

7. Subsection (2) further provides that a promise that has become irrevocable and independent under subsection (1) is enforceable not only between the parties but also against third parties. Thus, the finance lease can be transferred or assigned without disturbing enforceability. Further, subsection (2) also provides that the promise cannot, among other things, be cancelled or terminated without the consent of the lessor.

§ 2A-501. Default: Procedure.

(1) Whether the lessor or the lessee is in default under a lease contract is determined by the lease agreement and this Article.

(2) If the lessor or the lessee is in default under the lease contract, the party seeking enforcement has rights and remedies as provided in this Article and, except as limited by this Article, as provided in the lease agreement.

(3) If the lessor or the lessee is in default under the lease contract, the party seeking enforcement may reduce the party's claim to judgment, or otherwise enforce the lease contract by self-help or any available judicial procedure or nonjudicial procedure, including administrative proceeding, arbitration, or the like, in accordance with this Article.

(4) Except as otherwise provided in Section 1-106(1) or this Article or the lease agreement, the rights and remedies referred to in subsections (2) and (3) are cumulative.

(5) If the lease agreement covers both real property and goods, the party seeking enforcement may proceed under this Part as to the goods, or under other applicable law as to both the real property and the goods in accordance with ~~his [or her]~~ that party's rights and remedies in respect of the real property, in which case this Part does not apply.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 9-501.

Changes: Substantially revised.

Purposes:

1. Subsection (1) is new and represents a departure from the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9) as the subsection makes clear that whether a party to the lease agreement is in default is determined by ~~the agreement as well as~~ this Article as well as the agreement. Sections 2A-508 and 2A-523. It further departs from Article 9 in recognizing the potential default of either party, a function of the bilateral nature of the obligations between the parties to the lease contract.

2. Subsection (2) is a version of the first sentence of Section 9-501(1), revised to reflect leasing terminology.

3. Subsection (3), an expansive version of the second sentence of Section 9-501(1), lists the procedures that may be followed by the party seeking enforcement; in effect, the scope of the procedures listed in subsection (3) is consistent with the scope of the procedures available to the foreclosing secured party.

4. Subsection (4) establishes that the parties' rights and remedies are cumulative. DeKoven, Leases of Equipment: Puritan Leasing Company v. August, A Dangerous Decision, 12 U.S.F. L.Rev. 257, 276–80 (1978). Cumulation, and largely unrestricted selection, of remedies is allowed in furtherance of the general policy of the Commercial Code, stated in Section 1-106, that remedies be liberally administered to put the aggrieved party in as good a position as if the other party had fully performed. Therefore, cumulation of, or selection among, remedies is available to the extent necessary to put the aggrieved party in as good a position as it would have been in had there been full performance. However, cumulation of, or selection among, remedies is not available to the extent that the cumulation or selection would put the aggrieved party in a better position than it would have been in had there been full performance by the other party.

5. Section 9-501(3), which, among other things, states that certain rules, to the extent they give rights to the debtor and impose duties on the secured party, may not be waived or varied, was not incorporated in this Article. Given the significance of freedom of contract in the development of the common law as it applies to bailments for hire and the lessee's lack of an equity of redemption, there was no reason to impose that restraint.

Amendment 11

Section 2A-503 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-503. Modification or Impairment of Rights and Remedies.

(1) Except as otherwise provided in this Article, the lease agreement may include rights and remedies for default in addition to or in substitution for those provided in this Article and may limit or alter the measure of damages recoverable under this Article.

(2) Resort to a remedy provided under this Article or in the lease agreement is optional unless the remedy is expressly agreed to be exclusive. If circumstances cause an exclusive or limited remedy to fail of its essential purpose, or provision for an exclusive remedy is unconscionable, remedy may be had as provided in this Article.

(3) Consequential damages may be liquidated under Section 2A-504, or may otherwise be limited, altered, or excluded unless the limitation, alteration, or exclusion is unconscionable. Limitation*, alteration, or exclusion* of consequential damages for injury to the person in the case of consumer goods is prima facie unconscionable but limitation*, alteration, or exclusion* of damages where the loss is commercial is not prima facie unconscionable.

(4) Rights and remedies on default by the lessor or the lessee with respect to any obligation or promise collateral or ancillary to the lease contract are not impaired by this Article.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Sections 2-719 and 2-701.

Changes: Rewritten to reflect lease terminology and to clarify the relationship between this section and Section 2A-504.

Purposes:

1. A significant purpose of this Part is to provide rights and remedies for those parties to a lease who fail to provide them by agreement or whose rights and remedies fail of their essential purpose or are unenforceable. However, it is important to note that this implies no restriction on freedom to contract. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-102(3). Thus, subsection (1), a revised version of the provisions of Section 2-719(1), allows the parties to the lease agreement freedom to provide for rights and remedies in addition to or in substitution for those provided in this Article and to alter or limit the measure of damages recoverable under this Article. Except to the extent otherwise provided in this Article (e.g., Sections 2A-105, 106 and 108(1) and (2)), this Part shall be construed neither to restrict the parties' ability to provide for rights and remedies or to limit or alter the measure of damages by agreement, nor to imply disapproval of rights and remedy schemes other than those set forth in this Part.

2. Subsection (2) makes explicit with respect to this Article what is implicit in Section 2-719 with respect to the Article on Sales (Article 2): if an exclusive remedy is held to be unconscionable, remedies under this Article are available. Section 2-719 official comment 1.

3. Subsection (3), a revision of Section 2-719(3), makes clear that consequential damages may also be liquidated. Section 2A-504(1).

4. Subsection (4) is a revision of the provisions of Section 2-701. This subsection leaves the treatment of default with respect to obligations or promises collateral or ancillary to the lease contract to other law. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-103. An example of such an obligation would be that of the lessor to the secured creditor which has provided the funds to leverage the lessor's lease transaction; an example of such a promise would be that of the lessee, as seller, to the lessor, as buyer, in a sale-leaseback transaction.

Amendment 12

Section 2A-507 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-507. Proof of Market Rent: Time and Place.

(1) Damages based on market rent (Section 2A-519 or 2A-528) are determined according to the rent for the use of the goods concerned for a lease term identical to the remaining lease term of the original lease agreement and prevailing at the ~~time of the default~~ times specified in Sections 2A-519 and 2A-528.

(2) If evidence of rent for the use of the goods concerned for a lease term identical to the remaining lease term of the original lease agreement and prevailing at the times or places described in this Article is not readily available, the rent prevailing within any reasonable time before or after the time described or at any other place or for a different lease term which in commercial judgment or under usage of trade would serve as a reasonable substitute for the one described may be used, making any proper allowance for the difference, including the cost of transporting the goods to or from the other place.

(3) Evidence of a relevant rent prevailing at a time or place or for a lease term other than the one described in this Article offered by one party is not admissible unless and until he [or she] has given the other party notice the court finds sufficient to prevent unfair surprise.

(4) If the prevailing rent or value of any goods regularly leased in any established market is in issue, reports in official publications or trade journals or in newspapers or periodicals of general circulation published as the reports of that market are admissible in evidence. The circumstances of the preparation of the report may be shown to affect its weight but not its admissibility.

Amendment 13

Section 2A-508 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-508. Lessee's Remedies.

(1) If a lessor fails to deliver the goods in conformity to the lease contract (Section 2A-509) or repudiates the lease contract (Section 2A-402), or a lessee rightfully rejects the goods (Section 2A-509) or justifiably revokes acceptance of the goods (Section 2A-517), then with respect to any goods involved, and with respect to all of the goods if under an installment lease contract the value of the whole lease contract is substantially impaired (Section 2A-510), the lessor is in default under the lease contract and the lessee may:

(a) cancel the lease contract (Section 2A-505(1));

(b) recover so much of the rent and security as has been paid~~, but in the case of an installment lease contract the recovery is that which~~ and is just under the circumstances;

(c) cover and recover damages as to all goods affected whether or not they have been identified to the lease contract (Sections 2A-518 and 2A-520), or recover damages for nondelivery (Sections 2A-519 and 2A-520)~~.~~;

(d) exercise any other rights or pursue any other remedies provided in the lease contract.

(2) If a lessor fails to deliver the goods in conformity to the lease contract or repudiates the lease contract, the lessee may also:

(a) if the goods have been identified, recover them (Section 2A-522); or

(b) in a proper case, obtain specific performance or replevy the goods (Section 2A-521).

(3) If a lessor is otherwise in default under a lease contract, the lessee may exercise the rights and pursue the remedies provided in the lease contract*, which may include a right to cancel the lease,* and ~~this Article~~ in Section 2A-519(3).

(4) If a lessor has breached a warranty, whether express or implied, the lessee may recover damages (Section 2A-519(4)).

(5) On rightful rejection or justifiable revocation of acceptance, a lessee has a security interest in goods in the lessee's possession or control for any rent and security that has been paid and any expenses reasonably incurred in their inspection, receipt, transportation, and care and custody and may hold those goods and dispose of them in good faith and in a commercially reasonable manner, subject to ~~the provisions of~~ Section 2A-527(5).

(6) Subject to the provisions of Section 2A-407, a lessee, on notifying the lessor of the lessee's intention to do so, may deduct all or any part of the damages resulting from any default under the lease contract from any part of the rent still due under the same lease contract.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Sections 2-711 and 2-717.

Changes: Substantially rewritten.

Purposes:

1. This section is an index to Sections 2A-509 through 522 ~~and their effect on~~ which set out the lessee's rights and remedies after the lessor's default. The lessor and the lessee can ~~otherwise~~ agree to modify the rights and remedies available under this Article; ~~thus, the parties~~ they can, among other things, ~~raise or lower the threshold of events that give rise to a lessor's default or~~ provide that for defaults other than those specified in subsection (1) the lessee can exercise the rights and remedies referred to in subsection (1); and they can create a new scheme of rights and remedies triggered by the occurrence of the default. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-102(3).

2. Subsection (1), a substantially rewritten version of the provisions of Section 2-711(1), lists three cumulative remedies of the lessee where the lessor has failed to deliver conforming goods or has repudiated the contract, or the lessee has rightfully rejected or justifiably revoked. Sections 2A-501(2) and (4). Subsection (1) also allows the lessee to exercise any contractual remedy. This Article rejects any general doctrine of election of remedy. To determine if one remedy bars another in a particular case is a function of whether the lessee has been put in as good a position as if the lessor had fully performed the lease agreement. Use of multiple remedies is barred only if the effect is to put the lessee in a better position than it would have been in had the lessor fully performed under the lease. Sections 2A-103(4), 2A-501(4), and 1-106(1). ~~Note that a special rule has been created regarding the lessee's recovery of rent and security that have been paid in the case of an installment lease—recovery is limited to that which is just under the circumstances. With the various different types of installment leases, no bright line can be created that would operate fairly in all cases; in addition, this provision should further encourage the parties to establish their own rules by agreement.~~ Subsection (1)(b), in recognition that no bright line can be created that would operate fairly in all installment lease cases and in recognition of the fact that a lessee may be able to cancel the lease (revoke acceptance of the goods) after the goods have been in use for some period of time, does not require that all lease payments made by the lessee under the lease be returned upon cancellation. Rather, only such portion as is just of the rent and security payments made may be recovered. If a defect in the goods is discovered immediately upon tender to the lessee and the goods are rejected immediately, then the lessee should recover all payments made. If, however, for example, a 36-month equipment lease is terminated in the 12th month because the lessor has materially breached the contract by failing to perform its maintenance obligations, it may be just to return only a small part or none of the rental payments already made.

3. Subsection (2), a version of the provisions of Section 2-711(2) revised to reflect leasing terminology, lists two alternative remedies for the recovery of the goods by the lessee; however, each of these remedies is cumulative with respect to those listed in subsection (1).

4. Subsection (3) is new ~~and allows the lessee access to the remedy scheme of this Article as well as the lease contract if the lessor is in default for reasons other than those stated in subsection (1). Note that the reference to this Article includes supplemental principles of law and equity. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-103~~. It covers defaults which do not deprive the lessee of the goods and which are not so serious as to justify rejection or revocation of acceptance under subsection (1). It also covers defaults for which the lessee could have rejected or revoked acceptance of the goods but elects not to do so and retains the goods. In either case, a lessee which retains the goods is entitled to recover damages as stated in Section 2A-519(3). That measure of damages is "the loss resulting in the ordinary course of events from the lessor's default as determined in any manner that is reasonable together with incidental and consequential damages, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessor's breach."

5. Subsection (1)(d) and subsection (3) recognize that the lease agreement may provide rights and remedies in addition to or different from those which Article 2A provides. In particular, subsection (3) provides that the lease agreement may give the remedy of cancellation of the lease for defaults by the lessor that would not otherwise be material defaults which would justify cancellation under subsection (1). If there is a right to cancel, there is, of course, a right to reject or revoke acceptance of the goods.

6. Subsection (4) is new and merely adds to the completeness of the index by including a reference to the lessee's recovery of damages upon the lessor's breach of warranty; such breach may not rise to the level of a default by the lessor ~~(e.g. breach of an express warranty that the goods subject to the lease conform to description where the non conformity is such that when measured by objective criteria it reflects a minimal deviation from description) unless the breach is material or unless so provided by the lease agreement~~ justifying revocation of acceptance. If the lessee properly rejects or revokes acceptance of the goods because of a breach of warranty, the rights and remedies are those provided in subsection (1) rather than those in Section 2A-519(4).

7. Subsection (5), a revised version of the provisions of Section 2-711(3), recognizes, on rightful rejection or justifiable revocation, the lessee's security interest in goods in its possession and control. Section 9-113, which recognized security interests arising under the Article on Sales (Article 2), was amended with the adoption of this Article to reflect the security interests arising under this Article. Pursuant to Section 2A-511(4), a purchaser who purchases goods from the lessee in good faith takes free of any rights of the lessor, or in the case of a finance lease the supplier. Such goods, however, must have been rightfully rejected and disposed of pursuant to Section 2A-511 or 2A-512. However, Section ~~2A-517(3)~~ 2A-517(5) provides that the lessee will have the same rights and duties with respect to goods where acceptance has been revoked as with respect to goods rejected. Thus, Section 2A-511(4) will apply to the lessee's disposition of such goods.

8. Pursuant to Section 2A-527(5), the lessee must account to the lessor for the excess proceeds of such disposition, after satisfaction of the claim secured by the lessee's security interest.

9. Subsection (6), a slightly revised version of the provisions of Section 2-717, sanctions a right of set-off by the lessee, subject to the rule of Section 2A-407 with respect to irrevocable promises in a finance lease that is not a consumer lease, and further subject to an enforceable "hell or high water" clause in the lease agreement. Section 2A-407 official comment. No attempt is made to state how the set-off should occur; this is to be determined by the facts of each case.

10. There is no special treatment of the finance lease in this section. Absent supplemental principles of law and equity to the contrary, in the case of most finance leases, following the lessee's acceptance of the goods the lessee will have no rights or remedies against the lessor, because the lessor's obligations to the lessee are minimal. Sections 2A-210 and 2A-211(1). Since the lessee will look to the supplier for performance, this is appropriate. Section 2A-209.

Amendment 14

Section 2A-516 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-516. Effect of Acceptance of Goods; Notice of Default; Burden of Establishing Default After Acceptance; Notice of Claim or Litigation to Person Answerable Over.

(1) A lessee must pay rent for any goods accepted in accordance with the lease contract, with due allowance for goods rightfully rejected or not delivered.

(2) A lessee's acceptance of goods precludes rejection of the goods accepted. In the case of a finance lease, if made with knowledge of a nonconformity, acceptance cannot be revoked because of it. In any other case, if made with knowledge of a nonconformity, acceptance cannot be revoked because of it unless the acceptance was on the reasonable assumption that the nonconformity would be seasonably cured. Acceptance does not of itself impair any other remedy provided by this Article or the lease agreement for nonconformity.

(3) If a tender has been accepted:

(a) within a reasonable time after the lessee discovers or should have discovered any default, the lessee shall notify the lessor and the supplier*, if any*, or be barred from any remedy against the party not notified;

(b) except in the case of a consumer lease, within a reasonable time after the lessee receives notice of litigation for infringement or the like (Section 2A-211) the lessee shall notify the lessor or be barred from any remedy over for liability established by the litigation; and

(c) the burden is on the lessee to establish any default.

(4) If a lessee is sued for breach of a warranty or other obligation for which a lessor or a supplier is answerable over the following apply:

(a) The lessee may give the lessor or the supplier*, or both,* written notice of the litigation. If the notice states that the ~~lessor or the supplier~~ person notified may come in and defend and that if the ~~lessor or the supplier~~ person notified does not do so ~~he [or she]~~ that person will be bound in any action against ~~him [or her]~~ that person by the lessee by any determination of fact common to the two litigations, then unless the ~~lessor or the supplier~~ person notified after seasonable receipt of the notice does come in and defend ~~he [or she]~~ that person is so bound.

(b) The lessor or the supplier may demand in writing that the lessee turn over control of the litigation including settlement if the claim is one for infringement or the like (Section 2A-211) or else be barred from any remedy over. If the demand states that the lessor or the supplier agrees to bear all expense and to satisfy any adverse judgment, then unless the lessee after seasonable receipt of the demand does turn over control the lessee is so barred.

(5) ~~The provisions of subsections~~ Subsections (3) and (4) apply to any obligation of a lessee to hold the lessor or the supplier harmless against infringement or the like (Section 2A-211).

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 2-607.

Changes: Substantially revised.

Purposes:

1. Subsection (2) creates a special rule for finance leases, precluding revocation if acceptance is made with knowledge of nonconformity with respect to the lease agreement, as opposed to the supply agreement; this is not inequitable as the lessee has a direct claim against the supplier. Section 2A-209(1). Revocation of acceptance of a finance lease is permitted if the lessee's acceptance was without discovery of the nonconformity (with respect to the lease agreement, not the supply agreement) and was reasonably induced by the lessor's assurances. Section 2A-517(1)(b). Absent exclusion or modification, the lessor under a finance lease makes certain warranties to the lessee. Sections 2A-210 and 2A-211(1). Revocation of acceptance is not prohibited even after the lessee's promise has become irrevocable and independent. Section 2A-407 official comment. Where the finance lease creates a security interest, the rule may be to the contrary. General Elec. Credit Corp. of Tennessee v. Ger-Beck Mach. Co., 806 F.2d 1207 (3d Cir.1986).

2. Subsection (3)(a) requires the lessee to give notice of default, within a reasonable time after the lessee discovered or should have discovered the default. ~~In all cases, notice of default must be given to the lessor. In the case of a finance lease, notice of default must be given to the lessor and the supplier. The~~ In a finance lease, notice may be given either to the supplier, the lessor, or both, but remedy is barred against the party not notified. In a finance lease, the lessor is usually not liable for defects in the goods and the essential notice is to the supplier. While notice to the finance lessor will often not give any additional rights to the lessee, it would be good practice to give the notice since the finance lessor has an interest in the goods. Subsection (3)(a) does not use the term finance lease, but the definition of supplier is a person from whom a lessor buys or leases goods to be leased under a finance lease. Section 2A-103(1)(x). ~~Thus, not all sellers or lessors of goods to be leased are included within the set of persons to be given notice of default, as suppliers.~~ Therefore, there can be a "supplier" only in a finance lease. Subsection (4) applies similar notice rules as to lessors and suppliers if a lessee is sued for a breach of warranty or other obligation for which a lessor or supplier is answerable over.

3. Subsection (3)(b) requires the lessee to give the lessor notice of litigation for infringement or the like. There is an exception created in the case of a consumer lease. While such an exception was considered for a finance lease, it was not created because it was not necessary—the lessor in a finance lease does not give a warranty against infringement. Section 2A-211(2). Even though not required under subsection (3)(b), the lessee who takes under a finance lease should consider giving notice of litigation for infringement or the like to the supplier, because the lessee obtains the benefit of the suppliers' promises subject to the suppliers' defenses or claims. Amendment 15

Section 2A-517 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-517. Revocation of Acceptance of Goods.

(1) A lessee may revoke acceptance of a lot or commercial unit whose nonconformity substantially impairs its value to the lessee if ~~he [or she]~~ the lessee has accepted it:

(a) except in the case of a finance lease, on the reasonable assumption that its nonconformity would be cured and it has not been seasonably cured; or

(b) without discovery of the nonconformity if the lessee's acceptance was reasonably induced either by the lessor's assurances or, except in the case of a finance lease, by the difficulty of discovery before acceptance.

(2) Except in the case of a finance lease that is not a consumer lease, a lessee may revoke acceptance of a lot or commercial unit if the lessor defaults under the lease contract and the default substantially impairs the value of that lot or commercial unit to the lessee.

(3) If the lease agreement so provides, the lessee may revoke acceptance of a lot or commercial unit because of other defaults by the lessor.

~~(2)~~(4) Revocation of acceptance must occur within a reasonable time after the lessee discovers or should have discovered the ground for it and before any substantial change in condition of the goods which is not caused by the nonconformity. Revocation is not effective until the lessee notifies the lessor.

~~(3)~~(5) A lessee who so revokes has the same rights and duties with regard to the goods involved as if the lessee had rejected them.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 2-608.

Changes: Revised to reflect leasing practices and terminology. Note that in the case of a finance lease the lessee retains a limited right to revoke acceptance. Sections 2A-517(1)(b) and 2A-516 official comment. New subsections (2) and (3) added.

Purposes:

1. The section states the situations under which the lessee may return the goods to the lessor and cancel the lease. Subsection (2) recognizes that the lessor may have continuing obligations under the lease and that a default as to those obligations may be sufficiently material to justify revocation of acceptance of the leased items and cancellation of the lease by the lessee. For example, a failure by the lessor to fulfill its obligation to maintain leased equipment or to supply other goods which are necessary for the operation of the leased equipment may justify revocation of acceptance and cancellation of the lease.

2. Subsection (3) specifically provides that the lease agreement may provide that the lessee can revoke acceptance for defaults by the lessor which in the absence of such an agreement might not be considered sufficiently serious to justify revocation. That is, the parties are free to contract on the question of what defaults are so material that the lessee can cancel the lease.

Amendment 16

Section 2A-518 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-518. Cover; Substitute Goods.

(1) After a default by a lessor under the lease contract of the type described in ~~(~~Section 2A-508(1)~~)~~, or, if agreed, after other default by the lessor, the lessee may cover by making any purchase or lease of or contract to purchase or lease goods in substitution for those due from the lessor.

(2) Except as otherwise provided with respect to damages liquidated in the lease agreement (Section 2A-504) or otherwise determined ~~by~~ pursuant to agreement of the parties (~~Section~~ Sections 1-102(3) and 2A-503), if a lessee's cover is by a lease agreement substantially similar to the original lease agreement and the new lease agreement is made in good faith and in a commercially reasonable manner, the lessee may recover from the lessor as damages ~~(a)~~ (i) the present value, as of the date of ~~default~~ the commencement of the term of the new lease agreement, of ~~the difference be-~~ ~~tween~~ the ~~total~~ rent ~~for the lease term of~~ under the new lease agreement ~~and~~ applicable to that period of the new lease term which is comparable to the then remaining term of the original lease agreement minus the present value as of the same date of the total rent for the then remaining lease term of the original lease agreement*,* and ~~(b)~~ (ii) any incidental or consequential damages*,* less expenses saved in consequence of the lessor's default.

(3) If a lessee's cover is by lease agreement that for any reason does not qualify for treatment under subsection (2), or is by purchase or otherwise, the lessee may recover from the lessor as if the lessee had elected not to cover and Section 2A-519 governs.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 2-712.

Changes: Substantially revised.

Purposes: 1. Subsection (1) allows the lessee to take action to fix its damages after default by the lessor. Such action may consist of the ~~purchase or~~ lease of goods. The decision to cover is a function of commercial judgment, not a statutory mandate replete with sanctions for failure to comply. Cf. Section 9-507.

2. Subsection (2) states a rule for determining the amount of lessee's damages provided that there is no agreement to the contrary. The lessee's damages will be established using the new lease agreement as a measure if the following three criteria are met: (i) the lessee's cover is by lease agreement, (ii) the lease agreement is substantially similar to the original lease agreement, and (iii) such cover was effected in good faith, and in a commercially reasonable manner. Thus, the lessee will be entitled to recover from the lessor the present value, as of the date of ~~default~~ commencement of the term of the new lease agreement, of the ~~difference between~~ rent under the new lease agreement applicable to that period which is comparable to the then remaining term of the original lease agreement less the present value of the rent reserved for the remaining term under ~~the new lease and~~ the original lease, together with incidental or consequential damages less expenses saved in consequence of the lessor's default. ~~Note that the reference in Section 2A-518(2)(a) is to the date of default not to the date of an event of default. An event of default under a lease agreement becomes a default under a lease agreement only after the expiration of any relevant period of grace and compliance with any notice requirements under this Article and the lease agreement. American Bar Foundation,~~ Commentaries on Indentures, § 5-1, at 216-217 (1971). Section 2A-501(1). This conclusion is also a function of whether, as a matter of fact or law, the event of default has been waived, suspended or cured. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-103. ~~Consequential damages may include loss suffered by the lessee because of deprivation of the use of the goods during the period between the default and the acquisition of the goods under the new lease agreement. If the lessee's cover does not satisfy the criteria of subsection (2), Section 2A-519 governs.~~

3. Two of the three criteria to be met by the lessee are familiar, but the concept of the new lease agreement being substantially similar to the original lease agreement is not. Given the many variables facing a party who intends to lease goods and the rapidity of change in the market place, the policy decision was made not to draft with specificity. It was thought unwise to seek to establish certainty at the cost of fairness. Thus, the decision of whether the new lease agreement is substantially similar to the original will be determined case by case.

4. While the section does not draw a bright line, it is possible to describe some of the factors that should be considered in finding that a new lease agreement is substantially similar to the original. First, the goods subject to the new lease agreement should be examined. For example, in a lease of computer equipment the new lease might be for more modern equipment. However, it may be that at the time of the lessor's breach it was not possible to obtain the same type of goods in the market place. Because the lessee's remedy under Section 2A-519 is intended to place the lessee in essentially the same position as if he had covered, if goods similar to those to have been delivered under the original lease are not available, then the computer equipment in this hypothetical should qualify as a commercially reasonable substitute. See Section 2-712(1).

5. Second, the various elements of the new lease agreement should also be examined. Those elements include ~~the term of the new lease (because the damages are calculated under subsection (2) as the difference between the total rent payable for the entire term of the new lease agreement and the remaining term of the original lease);~~ the presence or absence of options to purchase or release; the lessor's representations, warranties and covenants to the lessee, as well as those to be provided by the lessee to the lessor; and the services, if any, to be provided by the lessor or by the lessee. All of these factors allocate cost and risk between the lessor and the lessee and thus affect the amount of rent to be paid. If the differences between the original lease and the new lease can be easily valued, it would be appropriate for a court to adjust the difference in rental to take account of the difference between the two leases, find that the new lease is substantially similar to the old lease, and award cover damages under this section. If, for example, the new lease requires the lessor to insure the goods in the hands of the lessee, while the original lease required the lessee to insure, the usual cost of such insurance could be deducted from the rent due under the new lease before determining the difference in rental between the two leases.

6. Having examined the goods and the agreement, the test to be applied is whether, in light of these comparisons, the new lease agreement is substantially similar to the original lease agreement. These findings should not be made with scientific precision, as they are a function of economics, nor should they be made independently with respect to the goods and each element of the agreement, as it is important that a sense of commercial judgment pervade the finding. To establish the new lease as a proper measure of damage under subsection (2), these factors, taken as a whole, must result in a finding that the new lease agreement is substantially similar to the original.

7. A new lease can be substantially similar to the original lease even though its term extends beyond the remaining term of the original lease, so long as both (a) the lease terms are commercially comparable (e.g., it is highly unlikely that a one-month rental and a five-year lease would reflect similar commercial realities), and (b) the court can fairly apportion a part of the rental payments under the new lease to that part of the term of the new lease which is comparable to the remaining lease term under the original lease. Also, the lease term of the new lease may be comparable to the term of the original lease even though the beginning and ending dates of the two leases are not the same. For example, a two-month lease of agricultural equipment for the months of August and September may be comparable to a two-month lease running from the 15th of August to the 15th of October if in the particular location two-month leases beginning on August 15th are basically interchangeable with two-month leases beginning August 1st. Similarly, the term of a one-year truck lease beginning on the 15th of January may be comparable to the term of a one-year truck lease beginning January 2d. If the lease terms are found to be comparable, the court may base cover damages on the entire difference between the costs under the two leases.

Section 2A-519 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-519. Lessee's Damages for Non-Delivery, Repudiation, Default, and Breach of Warranty in Regard to Accepted Goods.

(1) Except as otherwise provided with respect to damages liquidated in the lease agreement (Section 2A-504) or otherwise determined ~~by~~ pursuant to agreement of the parties (~~Section~~ Sections 1-102(3) and 2A-503), if a lessee elects not to cover or a lessee elects to cover and the cover is by lease agreement that for any reason does not qualify for treatment under Section 2A-518(2), or is by purchase or otherwise, the measure of damages for non-delivery or repudiation by the lessor or for rejection or revocation of acceptance by the lessee is the present value, as of the date of the default, of the ~~difference between the~~ then market rent ~~and~~ minus the present value as of the same date of the original rent, computed for the remaining lease term of the original lease agreement, together with incidental and consequential damages, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessor's default.

(2) Market rent is to be determined as of the place for tender or, in cases of rejection after arrival or revocation of acceptance, as of the place of arrival.

(3) ~~If~~ Except as otherwise agreed, if the lessee has accepted goods and given notification (Section 2A-516(3)), the measure of damages for non-conforming tender or delivery or other default by a lessor is the loss resulting in the ordinary course of events from the lessor's default as determined in any manner that is reasonable together with incidental and consequential damages, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessor's default.

(4) ~~The~~ Except as otherwise agreed, the measure of damages for breach of warranty is the present value at the time and place of acceptance of the difference between the value of the use of the goods accepted and the value if they had been as warranted for the lease term, unless special circumstances show proximate damages of a different amount, together with incidental and consequential damages, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessor's default or breach of warranty.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Sections 2-713 and 2-714.

Changes: Substantially revised.

Purposes:

1. Subsection (1), a revised version of the provisions of Section 2-713(1), states the basic rule governing the measure of lessee's damages for non-delivery or repudiation by the lessor or for rightful rejection or revocation of acceptance by the lessee. This measure will apply, absent agreement to the contrary, if the lessee does not cover or if the cover does not qualify under Section 2A-518. There is no sanction for cover that does not qualify.

2. The measure of damage is the present value, as of the date of default, of the ~~difference between~~ market rent ~~and~~ for the remaining term of the lease less the present value of the original rent for the remaining term of the lease, plus incidental and consequential damages less expenses saved in consequence of the default. Note that the reference in Section 2A-519(1) is to the date of default not to the date of an event of default. An event of default under a lease agreement becomes a default under a lease agreement only after the expiration of any relevant period of grace and compliance with any notice requirements under this Article and the lease agreement. American Bar Foundation, Commentaries on Indentures, § 5-1, at 216–217 (1971). Section 2A-501(1). This conclusion is also a function of whether, as a matter of fact or law, the event of default has been waived, suspended or cured. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-103.

3. Subsection (2), a revised version of the provisions of Section 2-713(2), states the rule with respect to determining market rent.

4. Subsection (3), a revised version of the provisions of Section 2-714(1) and (3), states the measure of damages where goods have been accepted and acceptance is not revoked. The subsection applies both to defaults which occur at the inception of the lease and to defaults which occur subsequently, such as failure to comply with an obligation to maintain the leased goods. The measure in essence is the loss, in the ordinary course of events, flowing from the default.

5. Subsection (4), a revised version of the provisions of Section 2-714(2), states the measure of damages for breach of warranty. The measure in essence is the present value of the difference between the value of the goods accepted and of the goods if they had been as warranted.

6. Subsections (1), (3) and (4) specifically state that the parties may by contract vary the damages rules stated in those subsections.

Amendment 18

Section 2A-523 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-523. Lessor's Remedies.

(1) If a lessee wrongfully rejects or revokes acceptance of goods or fails to make a payment when due or repudiates with respect to a part or the whole, then, with respect to any goods involved, and with respect to all of the goods if under an installment lease contract the value of the whole lease contract is substantially impaired (Section 2A-510), the lessee is in default under the lease contract and the lessor may:

(a) cancel the lease contract (Section 2A-505(1));

(b) proceed respecting goods not identified to the lease contract (Section 2A-524);

(c) withhold delivery of the goods and take possession of goods previously delivered (Section 2A-525);

(d) stop delivery of the goods by any bailee (Section 2A-526);

(e) dispose of the goods and recover damages (Section 2A-527), or retain the goods and recover damages (Section 2A-528), or in a proper case recover rent (Section 2A-529)~~.~~;

(f) exercise any other rights or pursue any other remedies provided in the lease contract.

(2) If a lessor does not fully exercise a right or obtain a remedy to which the lessor is entitled under subsection (1), the lessor may recover the loss resulting in the ordinary course of events from the lessee's default as determined in any reasonable manner, together with incidental damages, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessee's default.

~~(2)~~(3) If a lessee is otherwise in default under a lease contract, the lessor may exercise the rights and pursue the remedies provided in the lease contract ~~and this Article~~, which may include a right to cancel the lease. In addition, unless otherwise provided in the lease contract:

(a) if the default substantially impairs the value of the lease contract to the lessor, the lessor may exercise the rights and pursue the remedies provided in subsections (1) or (2); or

(b) if the default does not substantially impair the value of the lease contract to the lessor, the lessor may recover as provided in subsection (2).

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 2-703.
Changes: Substantially revised.
Purposes:

1. ~~This section~~ Subsection (1) is an index to Sections 2A-524 through 2A-531 and ~~their effect on the lessor's rights and remedies upon the lessee's default~~ states that the remedies provided in those sections are available for the defaults referred to in subsection (1): wrongful rejection or revocation of acceptance, failure to make a payment when due, or repudiation. In addition, remedies provided in the lease contract are available. Subsection (2) sets out a remedy if the lessor does not pursue to completion a right or actually obtain a remedy available under subsection (1), and subsection (3) sets out statutory remedies for defaults not specifically referred to in subsection (1). Subsection (3) provides that, if any default by the lessee other than those specifically referred to in subsection (1) is material, the lessor can exercise the remedies provided in subsection (1) or (2); otherwise the available remedy is as provided in subsection (3). A lessor who has brought an action seeking or has nonjudicially pursued one or more of the remedies available under subsection (1) may amend so as to claim or may nonjudicially pursue a remedy under subsection (2) unless the right or remedy first chosen has been pursued to an extent actually inconsistent with the new course of action. The intent of the provision is to reject the doctrine of election of remedies and to permit an alteration of course by the lessor unless such alteration would actually have an effect on the lessee that would be unreasonable under the circumstances. Further, the lessor may pursue remedies under both subsections (1) and (2) unless doing so would put the lessor in a better position than it would have been in had the lessee fully performed.

2. The lessor and the lessee can agree ~~otherwise~~ to modify the rights and remedies available under the Article; ~~thus, the parties~~ they can, among other things, ~~raise or lower the threshold that gives rise to lessee's default or~~ provide that for defaults other than those specified in subsection (1) the lessor can exercise the rights and remedies referred to in subsection (1), whether or not the default would otherwise be held to substantially impair the value of the lease contract to the lessor; they can also create a new scheme of rights and remedies triggered by the occurrence of the default. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-102(3).

3. Subsection (1), a substantially rewritten version of Section 2-703, lists various cumulative remedies of the lessor where the lessee wrongfully rejects or revokes acceptance, fails to make a payment when due, or repudiates. Section ~~2A-501(4)~~ 2A-501(2) and (4). The subsection also allows the lessor to exercise any contractual remedy.

4. This Article rejects ~~the~~ any general doctrine of election of remedy. Whether, in a particular case, one remedy bars another, is a function of whether lessor has been put in as good a position as if the lessee had fully performed the lease contract. Multiple remedies are barred only if the effect is to put the lessor in a better position than it would have been in had the lessee fully performed under the lease. Sections 2A-103(4), 2A-501(4), and 1-106(1).

5. Hypothetical: ~~1.~~ To better understand the application of subparagraphs (a) through (e), it is useful to review a hypothetical. Assume that A is a merchant in the business of selling and leasing new bicycles of various types. B is about to engage in the business of subleasing bicycles to summer residents of and visitors to an island resort. A, as lessor, has agreed to lease 60 bicycles to B. While there is one master lease, deliveries and terms are staggered.

20 bicycles are to be delivered by A to B's island location on June 1; the term of the lease of these bicycles is four months. 20 bicycles are to be delivered by A to B's island location on July 1; the term of the lease of these bicycles is three months. Finally, 20 bicycles are to be delivered by A to B's island location on August 1; the term of the lease of these bicycles is two months. B is obligated to pay rent to A on the 15th day of each month during the term for the lease. Rent is $50 per month, per bicycle. B has no option to purchase or release and must return the bicycles to A at the end of the term, in good condition, reasonable wear and tear excepted. Since the retail price of each bicycle is $400 and bicycles used in the retail rental business have a useful economic life of 36 months, this transaction creates a lease. Sections 2A-103(1)(j) and 1-201(37).

~~2.~~6. A's current inventory of bicycles is not large. Thus, upon signing the lease with B in February, A agreed to purchase 60 new bicycles from A's principal manufacturer, with special instructions to drop ship the bicycles to B's island location in accordance with the delivery schedule set forth in the lease.

~~3.~~7. The first shipment of 20 bicycles was received by B on May 21. B inspected the bicycles, accepted the same as conforming to the lease and signed a receipt of delivery and acceptance. However, due to poor weather that summer, business was terrible and B was unable to pay the rent due on June 15. Pursuant to the lease A sent B notice of default and proceeded to enforce his rights and remedies against B.

~~4.~~8. A's counsel first advised A that under Section 2A-510(2) and the terms of the lease B's failure to pay was a default with respect to the whole. Thus, to minimize A's continued exposure, A was advised to take possession of the bicycles. If A had possession of the goods A could refuse to deliver. Section 2A-525(1). However, the facts here are different. With respect to the bicycles in B's possession, A has the right to take possession of the bicycles, without breach of the peace. Section 2A-525(2). If B refuses to allow A access to the bicycles, A can proceed by action, including replevin or injunctive relief.

~~5.~~9. With respect to the 40 bicycles that have not been delivered, this Article provides various alternatives. First, assume that 20 of the remaining 40 bicycles have been manufactured and delivered by the manufacturer to a carrier for shipment to B. Given the size of the shipment, the carrier was using a small truck for the delivery and the truck had not yet reached the island ferry when the manufacturer (at the request of A) instructed the carrier to divert the shipment to A's place of business. A's right to stop delivery is recognized under these circumstances. Section 2A-526(1). Second, assume that the 20 remaining bicycles were in the process of manufacture when B defaulted. A retains the right (as between A as lessor and B as lessee) to exercise reasonable commercial judgment whether to complete manufacture or to dispose of the unfinished goods for scrap. Since A is not the manufacturer and A has a binding contract to buy the bicycles, A elected to allow the manufacturer to complete the manufacture of the bicycles, but instructed the manufacturer to deliver the completed bicycles to A's place of business. Section 2A-524(2).

~~6.~~10. Thus, so far A has elected to exercise the remedies referred to in subparagraphs (b) through (d) in subsection (1). None of these remedies bars any of the others because A's election and enforcement merely resulted in A's possession of the bicycles. Had B performed A would have recovered possession of the bicycles. Thus A is in the process of obtaining the benefit of his bargain. Note that A could exercise any other rights or pursue any other remedies provided in the lease contract (Section 2A-523(1)(f)), or elect to recover his loss due to the lessee's default under Section 2A-523(2).

~~7.~~11. A's counsel next would determine what action, if any, should be taken with respect to the goods. As stated in subparagraph (e) and as discussed fully in Section 2A-527(1) the lessor may, but has no obligation to, dispose of the goods by ~~lease, sale or otherwise~~ a substantially similar lease (indeed, the lessor has no obligation whatsoever to dispose of the goods at all) and recover damages based on that action, but lessor will not be able to recover damages which put it in a better position than performance would have done, nor will it be able to recover damages for losses which it could have reasonably avoided. In this case, since A is in the business of leasing and selling bicycles, A will probably inventory the 60 bicycles for its retail trade.

~~8.~~12. A's counsel then will determine which of the various~~, alternate~~ means of ascertaining A's ~~claim for~~ damages against B ~~will be computed~~ are available. Subparagraph (e) catalogues each relevant section. First, under Section 2A-527(2) the amount of A's claim ~~will be~~ is computed by comparing the original lease between A and B with any subsequent lease of the bicycles but only if the subsequent lease is substantially similar to the original lease contract. While the section does not define this term, the official comment does establish some parameters. If, however, A elects to lease the bicycles to his retail trade, it is unlikely that the resulting lease will be substantially similar to the original, as leases to retail customers are considerably different from leases to wholesale customers like B. If, however, the leases were substantially similar, the damage claim is for accrued and unpaid rent to the beginning of the new lease, plus the present value as of the same date, of the ~~difference between the~~ rent reserved under ~~both leases for the balance of their terms~~ the original lease for the balance of its term less the present value as of the same date of the rent reserved under the replacement lease for a term comparable to the balance of the term of the original lease, together with incidental damages less expenses saved in consequence of the lessee's default.

~~9.~~13. If the new lease is not substantially similar or if A elects to sell the bicycles or to hold the bicycles, damages are computed under Section 2A-528 or 2A-529.

~~10.~~14. If A elects to pursue his claim under Section 2A-528(1) the damage rule is the same as that stated in Section 2A-527(2) except that damages are measured from default if the lessee never took possession of the goods or from the time when the lessor did or could have regained possession and that the standard of comparison is not the rent reserved under a substantially similar lease entered into by the lessor but a market rent, as defined in Section 2A-507. Further, if the facts of this hypothetical were more elaborate A may be able to establish that the measure of damage under subsection (1) is inadequate to put him in the same position that B's performance would have, in which case A can claim the present value of his lost profits.

~~11.~~15. Yet another alternative for computing A's damage claim against B which will be available in some situations is ~~prescribed by~~ recovery of the present value, as of entry of judgment, of the rent for the then remaining lease term under Section 2A-529. However, ~~to use this formula A must, among other things, hold the bicycles identified in the lease contract for B. Since this would include all 60 bicycles and A is a merchant, it is unlikely to occur. Further, subsection (1)(a), which in essence allows A to receive the present value of the rent reserved under the lease, would in this case apply only to the 20 bicycles accepted by B in May. With respect to~~ this formulation is not available if the goods have been repossessed or tendered back to A. For the 20 bicycles repossessed and the remaining 40 bicycles, ~~subsection 1(b) will apply~~ A will be able to recover the present value of the rent only if A is unable to dispose of them, or circumstances indicate the effort will be unavailing~~, in which case the damage formula identical to the one set forth in (1)(a) will apply~~. ~~At~~ If A has prevailed in an action for the rent, at any time up to collection of a judgment by A against B, A ~~may~~ might dispose of the bicycles. In such case A's claim for damages against B is governed by Section 2A-527 or 2A-528. Section 2A-529(3). The resulting recalculation of claim should reduce the amount recoverable by A against B and the lessor is required to cause an appropriate credit to be entered against the earlier judgment. However, the nature of the post-judgment proceedings to resolve this issue, and the sanctions for ~~abuse~~ a failure to comply, if any, will be determined by other law.

~~12.~~16. Finally, if the lease agreement had so provided pursuant to subparagraph (f), A's claim against B would not be determined under any of these statutory formulae, but pursuant to a liquidated damages clause. Section 2A-504(1).

~~13.~~17. These various methods of computing A's damage claim against B are alternatives subject to Section 2A-501(4). However, the pursuit of any one of these alternatives is not a bar to, nor has it been barred by, A's earlier action to obtain possession of the 60 bicycles. These formulae, which vary as a function of an overt or implied mitigation of damage theory, focus on allowing A a recovery of the benefit of his bargain with B. Had B performed, A would have received the rent as well as the return of the 60 bicycles at the end of the term.

~~14.~~18. Finally, A's counsel should also advise A of his right to cancel the lease contract under subparagraph (a). Section 2A-505(1). Cancellation will discharge all existing obligations but preserve A's rights and remedies.

19. Subsection (2) recognizes that a lessor who is entitled to exercise the rights or to obtain a remedy granted by subsection (1) may choose not to do so. In such cases, the lessor can recover damages as provided in subsection (2). For example, for nonpayment of rent, the lessor may decide not to take possession of the goods and cancel the lease, but rather to merely sue for the unpaid rent as it comes due plus lost interest or other damages "determined in any reasonable manner." Subsection (2) also negates any loss of alternative rights and remedies by reason of having invoked or commenced the exercise or pursuit of any one or more rights or remedies.

~~15.~~20. Subsection ~~(2) is new and~~ (3) allows the lessor access to ~~the~~ a remedy scheme ~~of~~ provided in this Article as well as that contained in the lease contract if the lessee is in default for reasons other than those stated in subsection (1). Note that the reference to this Article includes supplementary principles of law and equity, e.g., fraud, misrepresentation and duress. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-103.

~~16.~~21. There is no special treatment of the finance lease in this section. Amendment 19

Section 2A-524 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-524. Lessor's Right to Identify Goods to Lease Contract.

(1) ~~A lessor aggrieved under Section 2A-523(1)~~ After default by the lessee under the lease contract of the type described in Section 2A-523(1) or 2A-523(3)(a) or, if agreed, after other default by the lessee, the lessor may:

(a) identify to the lease contract conforming goods not already identified if at the time the lessor learned of the default they were in the lessor's or the supplier's possession or control; and

(b) dispose of goods (Section 2A-527(1)) that demonstrably have been intended for the particular lease contract even though those goods are unfinished.

(2) If the goods are unfinished, in the exercise of reasonable commercial judgment for the purposes of avoiding loss and of effective realization, an aggrieved lessor or the supplier may either complete manufacture and wholly identify the goods to the lease contract or cease manufacture and lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the goods for scrap or salvage value or proceed in any other reasonable manner.

Changes: Revised to reflect leasing practices and terminology.

Purposes: The remedies provided by this section are available to the lessor (i) if there has been a default by the lessee which falls within Section 2A-523(1) or 2A-523(3)(a), or (ii) if there has been any other default for which the lease contract gives the lessor the remedies provided by this section. Under "(ii)", the lease contract may give the lessor the remedies of identification and disposition provided by this section in various ways. For example, a lease provision might specifically refer to the remedies of identification and disposition, or it might refer to this section by number (i.e., 2A-524), or it might do so by a more general reference such as "all rights and remedies provided by Article 2A for default by the lessee."

Amendment 20

Section 2A-525 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-525. Lessor's Right to Possession of Goods.

(1) If a lessor discovers the lessee to be insolvent, the lessor may refuse to deliver the goods.

(2) ~~The lessor has on~~ After a default by the lessee under the lease contract of the type described in Section 2A-523(1) or 2A-523(3)(a) or, if agreed, after other default by the lessee, the lessor has the right to take possession of the goods. If the lease contract so provides, the lessor may require the lessee to assemble the goods and make them available to the lessor at a place to be designated by the lessor which is reasonably convenient to both parties. Without removal, the lessor may render unusable any goods employed in trade or business, and may dispose of goods on the lessee's premises (Section 2A-527).

(3) The lessor may proceed under subsection (2) without judicial process if ~~that~~ it can be done without breach of the peace or the lessor may proceed by action.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: ~~Section~~ Sections 2-702(1) and 9-503.

Changes: Substantially revised.

Purposes:

1. Subsection (1), a revised version of the provisions of Section 2-702(1), allows the lessor to refuse to deliver goods if the lessee is insolvent. Note that the provisions of Section 2-702(2), granting the unpaid seller certain rights of reclamation, were not incorporated in this section. Subsection (2) made this unnecessary.

2. Subsection (2), a revised version of the provisions of Section 9-503, allows the lessor, on a Section 2A-523(1) or 2A-523(3)(a) default by the lessee, the right to take possession of or reclaim the goods~~;~~. Also, the lessor can contract for the right to take possession of the goods for other defaults by the lessee. Therefore, since the lessee's insolvency is an event of default in a standard lease agreement, subsection (2) is the functional equivalent of Section 2-702(2). Further, subsection (2) sanctions the classic crate and delivery clause obligating the lessee to assemble the goods and to make them available to the lessor. Finally, the lessor may leave the goods in place, render them unusable (if they are goods employed in trade or business), and dispose of them on the lessee's premises.

3. Subsection (3), a revised version of the provisions of Section 9-503, allows the lessor to proceed under subsection (2) without judicial process, absent breach of the peace, or by action. Sections 2A-501(3), 2A-103(4) and 1-201(1). In the appropriate case action includes injunctive relief. Clark Equip. Co. v. Armstrong Equip. Co., 431 F.2d 54 (5th Cir.1970), cert. denied, 402 U.S. 909, 91 S.Ct. 1382, 28 L.Ed.2d 650 (1971). This Section, as well as a number of other Sections in this Part, are included in the Article to codify the lessor's common law right to protect the lessor's reversionary interest in the goods. Section 2A-103(1)(q). These Sections are intended to supplement and not displace principles of law and equity with respect to the protection of such interest. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-103. Such principles apply in many instances, e.g., loss or damage to goods if risk of loss passes to the lessee, failure of the lessee to return goods to the lessor in the condition stipulated in the lease, and refusal of the lessee to return goods to the lessor after termination or cancellation of the lease. Amendment 21

Section 2A-527 of the Article is amended to read:

§ 2A-527. Lessor's Rights to Dispose of Goods.

(1) After a default by a lessee under the lease contract of the type described in ~~(~~Section 2A-523(1)~~)~~ or 2A-523(3)(a) or after the lessor refuses to deliver or takes possession of goods (Section 2A-525 or 2A-526), or, if agreed, after other default by a lessee, the lessor may dispose of the goods concerned or the undelivered balance thereof by lease, sale*,* or otherwise.

(2) Except as otherwise provided with respect to damages liquidated in the lease agreement (Section 2A-504) or otherwise determined ~~by~~ pursuant to agreement of the parties (~~Section~~ Sections 1-102(3) and 2A-503), if the disposition is by lease agreement substantially similar to the original lease agreement and the new lease agreement is made in good faith and in a commercially reasonable manner, the lessor may recover from the lessee as damages ~~(a)~~ (i) accrued and unpaid rent as of the date of ~~default~~ the commencement of the term of the new lease agreement, ~~(b)~~ (ii) the present value*,* as of the same date*,* ~~of default~~ of the ~~difference between the~~ total rent for the then remaining lease term of the original lease agreement ~~and the total rent for the lease term~~ minus the present value, as of the same date, of the rent under the new lease agreement applicable to that period of the new lease term which is comparable to the then remaining term of the original lease agreement, and ~~(c)~~ (iii) any incidental damages allowed under Section 2A-530, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessee's default.

(3) If the lessor's disposition is by lease agreement that for any reason does not qualify for treatment under subsection (2), or is by sale or otherwise, the lessor may recover from the lessee as if the lessor had elected not to dispose of the goods and Section 2A-528 governs.

(4) A subsequent buyer or lessee who buys or leases from the lessor in good faith for value as a result of a disposition under this section takes the goods free of the original lease contract and any rights of the original lessee even though the lessor fails to comply with one or more of the requirements of this Article.

(5) The lessor is not accountable to the lessee for any profit made on any disposition. A lessee who has rightfully rejected or justifiably revoked acceptance shall account to the lessor for any excess over the amount of the lessee's security interest (Section 2A-508(5)).

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 2-706(1), (5) and (6).

Changes: Substantially revised.

Purposes:

1. Subsection (1), a revised version of the first sentence of subsection 2-706(1), allows the lessor the right to dispose of goods after a statutory or other material default by the lessee (even if the goods remain in the lessee's possession—Section 2A-525(2)), ~~or~~ after the lessor refuses to deliver or takes possession of the goods*, or, if agreed, after other contractual default*. The lessor's decision to exercise this right is a function of a commercial judgment, not a statutory mandate replete with sanctions for failure to comply. Cf. Section 9-507. As the owner of the goods, in the case of a lessor, or as the prime lessee of the goods, in the case of a sublessor, compulsory disposition of the goods is inconsistent with the nature of the interest held by the lessor or the sublessor and is not necessary because the interest held by the lessee or the sublessee is not protected by a right of redemption under the common law or this Article. Subsection 2A-527(5).

2. The rule for determining the measure of damages recoverable by the lessor against the lessee is a function of several variables. If the lessor has elected to effect disposition under subsection (1) and such disposition is by lease that qualifies under subsection (2), the measure of damages set forth in subsection (2) will apply, absent agreement to the contrary. Sections 2A-504, 2A-103(4) and 1-102(3).

3. The lessor's damages will be established using the new lease agreement as a measure if the following three criteria are satisfied: (i) the lessor disposed of the goods by lease, (ii) the lease agreement is substantially similar to the original lease agreement, and (iii) such disposition was in good faith, and in a commercially reasonable manner. Thus, the lessor will be entitled to recover from the lessee the accrued and unpaid rent as of the date of ~~default~~ commencement of the term of the new lease, and the present value, as of the same date ~~of default~~, of the ~~difference between the~~ rent ~~reserved~~ under ~~the new lease and~~ the original lease for the then remaining term less the present value as of the same date of the rent under the new lease agreement applicable to the period of the new lease comparable to the remaining term under the original lease, together with incidental damages less expenses saved in consequence of the lessee's default. If the lessor's disposition does not satisfy the criteria of subsection (2), the lessor may calculate its claim against the lessee pursuant to Section 2A-528. Section 2A-523(1)(e). ~~Note that the reference in Section 2A-527(2)(a) and (b) is to the date of default not to the date of an event of default. An event of default under a lease agreement becomes a default under a lease agreement only after the expiration of any relevant period of grace and compliance with any notice requirements under this Article and the lease agreement. American Bar Foundation,~~Commentaries on Indentures, § 5-1, at 216-217 (1971). Section 2A-501(1). This conclusion is also a function of whether, as a matter of fact or law, the event of default has been waived, suspended or cured. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-103.

4. Two of the three criteria to be met by the lessor are familiar, but the concept of the new lease agreement that is substantially similar to the original lease agreement is not. Given the many variables facing a party who intends to lease goods and the rapidity of change in the market place, the policy decision was made not to draft with specificity. It was thought unwise to seek to establish certainty at the cost of fairness. The decision of whether the new lease agreement is substantially similar to the original will be determined case by case.

5. While the section does not draw a bright line, it is possible to describe some of the factors that should be considered in a finding that a new lease agreement is substantially similar to the original. The various elements of the new lease agreement should be examined. Those elements include ~~the term of the new lease (because the damages are calculated under subsection (2) as the difference between the total rent payable for the entire term of the new lease agreement and the remaining lease term of the original lease);~~ the options to purchase or release; the lessor's representations, warranties and covenants to the lessee as well as those to be provided by the lessee to the lessor; and the services, if any, to be provided by the lessor or by the lessee. All of these factors allocate cost and risk between the lessor and the lessee and thus affect the amount of rent to be paid. These findings should not be made with scientific precision, as they are a function of economics, nor should they be made independently, as it is important that a sense of commercial judgment pervade the finding. See Section 2A-507(2). To establish the new lease as a proper measure of damage under subsection (2), these various factors, taken as a whole, must result in a finding that the new lease agreement is substantially similar to the original. If the differences between the original lease and the new lease can be easily valued, it would be appropriate for a court to find that the new lease is substantially similar to the old lease, adjust the difference in the rent between the two leases to take account of the differences, and award damages under this section. If, for example, the new lease requires the lessor to insure the goods in the hands of the lessee, while the original lease required the lessee to insure, the usual cost of such insurance could be deducted from rent due under the new lease before the difference in rental between the two leases is determined.

6. The following hypothetical illustrates the difficulty of providing a bright line. Assume that A buys a jumbo tractor for $1 million and then leases the tractor to B for a term of 36 months. The tractor is delivered to and is accepted by B on May 1. On June 1 B fails to pay the monthly rent to A. B returns the tractor to A, who immediately releases the tractor to C for a term identical to the term remaining under the lease between A and B. All terms and conditions under the lease between A and C are identical to those under the original lease between A and B, except that C does not provide any property damage or other insurance coverage, and B agreed to provide complete coverage. Coverage is expensive and difficult to obtain. ~~The new lease should be viewed as not substantially similar to the original. However, if the lessor seeks a recovery under Section 2A-528 the new lease can be introduced into evidence to establish market rent (Section 2A-507), with a proper allowance for the lessor's cost of replacing the lost insurance coverage~~ It is a question of fact whether it is so difficult to adjust the recovery to take account of the difference between the two leases as to insurance that the second lease is not substantially similar to the original.

7. A new lease can be substantially similar to the original lease even though its term extends beyond the remaining term of the original lease, so long as both (a) the lease terms are commercially comparable (e.g., it is highly unlikely that a one-month rental and a five-year lease would reflect similar realities), and (b) the court can fairly apportion a part of the rental payments under the new lease to that part of the term of the new lease which is comparable to the remaining lease term under the original lease. Also, the lease term of the new lease may be comparable to the remaining term of the original lease even though the beginning and ending dates of the two leases are not the same. For example, a two-month lease of agricultural equipment for the months of August and September may be comparable to a two-month lease running from the 15th of August to the 15th of October if in the particular location two-month leases beginning on August 15th are basically interchangeable with two-month leases beginning August 1st. Similarly, the term of a one-year truck lease beginning on the 15th of January may be comparable to the term of a one-year truck lease beginning January 2d. If the lease terms are found to be comparable, the court may base cover damages on the entire difference between the costs under the two leases.

8. Subsection (3), which is new, provides that if the lessor's disposition is by lease that does not qualify under subsection (2), or is by sale or otherwise, Section 2A-528 governs.

9. Subsection (4), a revised version of subsection 2-706(5), applies to protect a subsequent buyer or lessee who buys or leases from the lessor in good faith and for value, pursuant to a disposition under this section. Note that by its terms, the rule in subsection 2A-304(1), which provides that the subsequent lessee takes subject to the original lease contract, is controlled by the rule stated in this subsection.

10. Subsection (5), a revised version of subsection 2-706(6), provides that the lessor is not accountable to the lessee for any profit made by the lessor on a disposition. This rule follows from the fundamental premise of the bailment for hire that the lessee under a lease of goods has no equity of redemption to protect.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 2-708.

Changes: Substantially revised.

Purposes:

1. Subsection (1), a substantially revised version of Section 2-708(1), states the basic rule governing the measure of lessor's damages for ~~non-acceptance or repudiation by the lessee; repudiation is defined (Section 2A-402) to include the lessee's post acceptance default for failure to pay rent and the like.~~ a default described in Section 2A-523(1) or (3)(a), and, if agreed, for a contractual default. This measure will apply if the lessor elects to retain the goods (whether undelivered, returned by the lessee, or repossessed by the lessor after acceptance and default by the lessee) or if the lessor's disposition does not qualify under subsection 2A-527(2). Section 2A-527(3). Note that under some of these conditions, the lessor may recover damages from the lessee pursuant to the rule set forth in Section 2A-529. There is no sanction for disposition that does not qualify under subsection 2A-527(2). Application of the rule set forth in this section is subject to agreement to the contrary. Sections 2A-504, 2A-103(4) and 1-102(3).

2. ~~The~~ If the lessee has never taken possession of the goods, the measure of damage is the accrued and unpaid rent as of the date of default together with the present value, as of the date of default, of the ~~difference between market rent and the~~ original rent for the remaining term of the lease less the present value as of the same date of market rent, and incidental damages, less expenses saved in consequence of the default. Note that the reference in Section ~~2A-528(1)(a) and (b)~~ 2A-528(1)(i) and (ii) is to the date of default not to the date of an event of default. An event of default under a lease agreement becomes a default under a lease agreement only after the expiration of any relevant period of grace and compliance with any notice requirements under this Article and the lease agreement. American Bar Foundation, Commentaries on Indentures, § 5-1, at 216–217 (1971). Section 2A-501(1). This conclusion is also a function of whether, as a matter of fact or law, the event of default has been waived, suspended or cured. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-103. If the lessee has taken possession of the goods, the measure of damages is the accrued and unpaid rent as of the earlier of the time the lessor repossesses the goods or the time the lessee tenders the goods to the lessor plus the difference between the present value, as of the same time, of the rent under the lease for the remaining lease term and the present value, as of the same time, of the market rent.

3. Market rent will be computed pursuant to Section 2A-507. ~~In the case of a default by the lessee, the time for tender should be interpreted as the date of the default. If, as of the date of default, the lessor has attempted and failed to obtain possession of the goods, the lessor has, among various additional rights and remedies, a cause of action against the lessee for damages due to loss of use of possession of the goods between the date of default and the date the lessor obtains possession of the goods. Sections 2A-525(3), 2A-103(4), 1-201(1). See also Section 2A-530. This conclusion is critical to an important policy decision to protect the lessor's residual interest in the goods. Section 2A-103(1)(q).~~

4. Subsection (2), a somewhat revised version of the provisions of subsection 2-708(2), states a measure of damages which applies ~~in each case that subsection (1) applies but~~ if the measure of damages in subsection (1) is inadequate to put the lessor in as good a position as performance would have. The measure of damage is the lessor's profit, including overhead, together with incidental damages, with allowance for costs reasonably incurred and credit for payments or proceeds of disposition. In determining the amount of due credit with respect to proceeds of disposition a proper value should be attributed to the lessor's residual interest in the goods. Sections 2A-103(1)(q) and 2A-507(4).

5. In calculating profit, a court should include any expected appreciation of the goods, e.g. the foal of a leased brood mare. Because this subsection is intended to give the lessor the benefit of the bargain, a court should consider any reasonable benefit or profit expected by the lessor from the performance of the lease agreement. See Honeywell, Inc. v. Lithonia Lighting, Inc., 317 F.Supp. 406, 413 (N.D.Ga.1970); Locks v. Wade, 36 N.J.Super. 128, 131, 114 A.2d 875, 877 (App.Div.1955). Further, in calculating profit the concept of present value ~~should~~ must be given effect. Taylor v. Commercial Credit Equip. Corp., 170 Ga.App. 322, 316 S.E.2d 788 (1984). See generally Section 2A-103(1)(u).

(b) for goods identified to the lease contract if the lessor is unable after reasonable effort to dispose of them at a reasonable price or the circumstances reasonably indicate that effort will be unavailing, (i) accrued and unpaid rent as of the date of ~~default~~ entry of judgment in favor of the lessor, (ii) the present value as of the same date of ~~default of~~ the rent for the then remaining lease term of the lease agreement, and (iii) any incidental damages allowed under Section 2A-530, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessee's default.

(2) Except as provided in subsection (3), the lessor shall hold for the lessee for the remaining lease term of the lease agreement any goods that have been identified to the lease contract and are in the lessor's control.

(4) Payment of the judgment for damages obtained pursuant to subsection (1) entitles the lessee to the use and possession of the goods not then disposed of for the remaining lease term of and in accordance with the lease agreement.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 2-709.

Changes: Substantially revised.

Purposes: ~~Subsection (1) provides another method of determining the measure of lessor's damages after default by the lessee. Absent agreement to the contrary (Section 2A-504), this Article provides the lessor, in this section and the two preceding sections, three alternate methods of computing damages recoverable from the defaulting lessee (Section 2A-523(1)(e)). This section, as well as the two preceding sections, applies to goods subject to the lease, even if such goods have been repossessed from the lessee or otherwise (Section 2A-525(2)). This is a departure from Section 2-709, the statutory analogue. The departure is not surprising given the essential difference between a sale and a lease.~~

~~Absent the right to repossess the goods, the recovery stated in subsection (1)(a) would not compensate the lessor for his or her loss. Consider a lease of a carpet cleaner by A to B, for a term of two days. A purchased the carpet cleaner for $500.00. The rent for the two day term is $75.00. If B defaulted by not paying the rent and refusing to return the carpet cleaner and A was not allowed to repossess the carpet cleaner, the measure of damage stated in this section would allow a recovery of not more than $75.00, together with incidental damages. The rule stated in this Article, which allows the lessor the right to repossess the goods from the lessee and to recover damages, is consistent with the lessor's ownership of the goods. DeKoven, Proceedings After Default by the Lessee Under a True Lease of Equipment, in 1C P. Coogan, W. Hogan, D. Vagts, Secured Transactions Under the Uniform Commercial Code,, § 29B.06[4] (1986). The statutory analogue, Section 2-709, only provides an action for the price of the goods sold, which is consistent with the seller's agreement to dispose of all of his or her right, title and interest in the goods to the buyer. That measure of damage would not have been appropriate here as the lessor's agreement is to dispose of possession and use of the goods for a term; the bargain includes the return of the goods at the end of the term. It would be anomalous to allow the lessee to improve on the bargain, i.e. retain the goods, solely by virtue of his or her default, even if that had been balanced by allowing the lessor to sue to recover the price or value of the goods.~~

~~The measure of the lessor's damages under this section is a function of a two-part rule. First, subparagraph (1)(a) establishes a rule of recovery with respect to goods accepted by the lessee (even if repossessed by the lessor) and with respect to conforming goods lost or damaged within a commercially reasonable time after risk of loss passed to the lessee. Thus, reading subsections (1), (2) and (3) together, if accepted goods are repossessed by the lessor and the lessor holds the goods for the lessee for the balance of the term, lessor's damages will be calculated pursuant to subsection (1)(a); if the lessor leases, sells or otherwise disposes of the goods, subsection (1)(a) is inapplicable and the lessor's damages will be calculated pursuant to Section 2A-528, unless the lessor's disposition was by a substantially similar lease, in which case Section 2A-527(2) applies. Second, subparagraph (1)(b) establishes a rule of recovery with respect to goods identified to the lease contract (but not accepted by the lessee—see subparagraph (1)(a)) only if the lessor is unable, after reasonable effort, to dispose of them at a reasonable price, or if circumstances indicate the effort would be unavailing.~~

~~As a condition to the lessor's election to employ the method to measure the lessor's claim against the lessee set forth in subsection (1), the lessor must comply with subsection (2), which provides that, with one exception, goods identified to the lease contract and in the~~

~~lessor's control (whether as a result of repossession or otherwise) must be held for the lessee for the balance of the lease term. This eliminates the possibility of a double recovery by the lessor and preserves the value of the leasehold estate to the lessee.~~

1. Absent a lease contract provision to the contrary, an action for the full unpaid rent (discounted to present value as of the time of entry of judgment as to rent due after that time) is available as to goods not lost or damaged only if the lessee retains possession of the goods or the lessor is or apparently will be unable to dispose of them at a reasonable price after reasonable effort. There is no general right in a lessor to recover the full rent from the lessee upon holding the goods for the lessee. If the lessee tenders goods back to the lessor, and the lessor refuses to accept the tender, the lessor will be limited to the damages it would have suffered had it taken back the goods. The rule in Article 2 that the seller can recover the price of accepted goods is rejected here. In a lease, the lessor always has a residual interest in the goods which the lessor usually realizes upon at the end of a lease term by either sale or a new lease. Therefore, it is not a substantial imposition on the lessor to require it to take back and dispose of the goods if the lessee chooses to tender them back before the end of the lease term: the lessor will merely do earlier what it would have done anyway, sell or relet the goods. Further, the lessee will frequently encounter substantial difficulties if the lessee attempts to sublet the goods for the remainder of the lease term. In contrast to the buyer who owns the entire interest in goods and can easily dispose of them, the lessee is selling only the right to use the goods under the terms of the lease and the sublessee must assume a relationship with the lessor. In that situation, it is usually more efficient to eliminate the original lessee as a middleman by allowing the lessee to return the goods to the lessor who can then redispose of them.

2. In some situations even where possession of the goods is reacquired, a lessor will be able to recover as damages the present value of the full rent due, not under this section, but under 2A-528(2) which allows a lost profit recovery if necessary to put the lessor in the position it would have been in had the lessee performed. Following is an example of such a case. A is a lessor of construction equipment and maintains a substantial inventory. B leases from A a backhoe for a period of two weeks at a rental of $1,000. After three days, B returns the backhoe and refuses to pay the rent. A has five backhoes in inventory, including the one returned by B. During the next 11 days after the return by B of the backhoe, A rents no more than three backhoes at any one time and, therefore, always has two on hand. If B had kept the backhoe for the full rental period, A would have earned the full rental on that backhoe, plus the rental on the other backhoes it actually did rent during that period. Getting this backhoe back before the end of the lease term did not enable A to make any leases it would not otherwise have made. The only way to put A in the position it would have been in had the lessee fully performed is to give the lessor the full rentals. A realized no savings at all because the backhoe was returned early and might even have incurred additional expense if it was paying for parking space for equipment in inventory. A has no obligation to relet the backhoe for the benefit of B rather than leasing that backhoe or any other in inventory for its own benefit. Further, it is probably not reasonable to expect A to dispose of the backhoe by sale when it is returned in an effort to reduce damages suffered by B. Ordinarily, the loss of a two-week rental would not require A to reduce the size of its backhoe inventory. Whether A would similarly be entitled to full rentals as lost profit in a one-year lease of a backhoe is a question of fact: in any event the lessor, subject to mitigation of damages rules, is entitled to be put in as good a position as it would have been had the lessee fully performed the lease contract.

3. Under subsection (2) a lessor who is able and elects to sue for the rent due under a lease must hold goods not lost or damaged for the lessee. Subsection (3) creates an exception to the subsection (2) requirement ~~set forth as a condition to subsection (1), that goods identified to the contract and in the lessor's control be held by the lessor. (Section 2A-529(2))~~. If the lessor disposes of those goods prior to collection of the judgment (whether as a matter of law or agreement), the lessor's recovery is governed by the measure of damages in Section 2A-527 if the disposition is by lease that is substantially similar to the original lease, or otherwise by the measure of damages in Section 2A-528. Section 2A-523 official comment ~~Number 11~~.

~~The relationship between subsections (2) and (3) is best stated by examining a hypothetical. Assume the lease is for a term of two years and after default by the lessee the lessor recovers the goods from the lessee and obtains judgment against the lessee for damages pursuant to subsection (1). If the lessor holds the goods so recovered until the end of~~

~~the two year term, any subsequent disposition will have no effect on the lessor's judgment. If, however, the lessor determines that the lessee is judgment proof, the lessor might be wise to dispose of the goods before the end of the remaining lease term, even though the amount that the lessor then will be allowed to recover from the lessee, as determined by the provisions of Section 2A-527 or 2A-528, is less than the judgment. Subsection (3) allows the lessor to make this election at any time before collection of the judgment.~~

4. Subsection (4), which is new, further reinforces the requisites of Subsection (2). In the event the judgment for damages obtained by the lessor against the lessee pursuant to subsection (1) is satisfied, the lessee regains the right to use and possession of the remaining goods for the balance of the original lease term; a partial satisfaction of the judgment creates no right in the lessee to use and possession of the goods.

5. The relationship between subsections (2) and (4) is important to understand. Subsection (2) requires the lessor to hold for the lessee identified goods in the lessor's possession. Absent agreement to the contrary, whether in the lease or otherwise, under most circumstances the requirement that the lessor hold the goods for the lessee for the term will mean that the lessor is not allowed to use them. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-203. Further, the lessor's use of the goods could be viewed as a disposition of the goods that would bar the lessor from recovery under this section, remitting the lessor to the two preceding sections for a determination of the lessor's claim for damages against the lessee.

6. Subsection (5), the analogue of subsection 2-709(3), further reinforces the thrust of subsection (3) by stating that a lessor who is held not entitled to rent under this section has not elected a remedy; the lessor must be awarded damages under Sections 2A-527 and 2A-528. This is a function of two significant policies of this Article—that resort to a remedy is optional, unless expressly agreed to be exclusive (Section 2A-503(2)) and that rights and remedies provided in this Article generally are cumulative. (Section 2A-501(2) and (4)).

Amendment 24

Section 2A-532 of the Article is added to read:

§ 2A-532. Lessor's Rights to Residual Interest.

In addition to any other recovery permitted by this Article or other law, the lessor may recover from the lessee an amount that will fully compensate the lessor for any loss of or damage to the lessor's residual interest in the goods caused by the default of the lessee.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: None.

Purposes: This section recognizes the right of the lessor to recover under this Article (as well as under other law) from the lessee for failure to comply with the lease obligations as to the condition of leased goods when returned to the lessor, for failure to return the goods at the end of the lease, or for any other default which causes loss or injury to the lessor's residual interest in the goods.

Appendix to 1990 Article 2A Amendments

§ 2A-101. Short Title.

This Article shall be known and may be cited as the Uniform Commercial Code—Leases.

Rationale for Codification:

There are several reasons for codifying the law with respect to leases of goods. An analysis of the case law as it applies to leases of goods suggests at least three significant issues to be resolved by codification. First, what is a lease? It is necessary to define lease to determine whether a transaction creates a lease or a security interest disguised as a lease. If the transaction creates a security interest disguised as a lease, the lessor will be required to file a financing statement or take other action to perfect its interest in the goods against third parties. There is no such requirement with respect to leases. Yet the distinction between a lease and a security interest disguised as a lease is not clear. Second, will the lessor be deemed to have made warranties to the lessee? If the transaction is a sale the express and implied warranties of Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code apply. However, the warranty law with respect to leases is uncertain. Third, what remedies are available to the lessor upon the lessee's default? If the transaction is a security interest disguised as a lease, the answer is stated in Part 5 of the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9). There is no clear answer with respect to leases.

There are reasons to codify the law with respect to leases of goods in addition to those suggested by a review of the reported cases. The answer to this important question should not be limited to the issues raised in these cases. Is it not also proper to determine the remedies available to the lessee upon the lessor's default? It is, but that issue is not reached through a review of the reported cases. This is only one of the many issues presented in structuring, negotiating and documenting a lease of goods.

Statutory Analogue:

After it was decided to proceed with the codification project, the drafting committee of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws looked for a statutory analogue, gradually narrowing the focus to the Article on Sales (Article 2) and the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9). A review of the literature with respect to the sale of goods reveals that Article 2 is predicated upon certain assumptions: Parties to the sales transaction frequently are without counsel; the agreement of the parties often is oral or evidenced by scant writings; obligations between the parties are bilateral; applicable law is influenced by the need to preserve freedom of contract. A review of the literature with respect to personal property security law reveals that Article 9 is predicated upon very different assumptions: Parties to a secured transaction regularly are represented by counsel; the agreement of the parties frequently is reduced to a writing, extensive in scope; the obligations between the parties are essentially unilateral; and applicable law seriously limits freedom of contract.

The lease is closer in spirit and form to the sale of goods than to the creation of a security interest. While parties to a lease are sometimes represented by counsel and their agreement is often reduced to a writing, the obligations of the parties are bilateral and the common law of leasing is dominated by the need to preserve freedom of contract. Thus the drafting committee concluded that Article 2 was the appropriate statutory analogue.

Issues: The drafting committee then identified and resolved several issues critical to codification:

Scope: The scope of the Article was limited to leases (Section 2A-102). There was no need to include leases intended as security, i.e., security interests disguised as leases, as they are adequately treated in Article 9. Further, even if leases intended as security were included, the need to preserve the distinction would remain, as policy suggests treatment significantly different from that accorded leases.

Definition of Lease: Lease was defined to exclude leases intended as security (Section 2A-103(1)(j)). Given the litigation to date a revised definition of security interest was suggested for inclusion in the Act. (Section 1-201(37)). This revision sharpens the distinction between leases and security interests disguised as leases.

Filing: The lessor was not required to file a financing statement against the lessee or take any other action to protect the lessor's interest in the goods (Section 2A-301). The refined definition of security interest will more clearly signal the need to file to potential lessors of goods. Those lessors who are concerned will file a protective financing statement (Section 9-408).

Warranties: All of the express and implied warranties of the Article on Sales (Article 2) were included (Sections 2A-210 through 2A-216), revised to reflect differences in lease transactions. The lease of goods is sufficiently similar to the sale of goods to justify this decision. Further, many courts have reached the same decision.

Certificate of Title Laws: Many leasing transactions involve goods subject to certificate of title statutes. To avoid conflict with those statutes, this Article is subject to them (~~Section 2A-104(1)(b)~~ Section 2A-104(1)(a)).

Consumer Leases: Many leasing transactions involve parties subject to consumer protection statutes or decisions. To avoid conflict with those ~~statutes~~ laws this Article is subject to them to the extent provided in (~~Section 2A-104(1)(a) and (d)~~ Section 2A-104(1)(c) and (2)). Further, certain consumer protections have been incorporated in the Article.

Finance Leases: Certain leasing transactions substitute the ~~seller~~ supplier of the goods for the lessor as the party responsible to the lessee with respect to warranties and the like. The definition of finance lease (Section 2A-103(1)(g)) was developed to describe these transactions. Various sections of the Article implement the substitution of the ~~seller~~ supplier for the lessor, including Sections 2A-209 and 2A-407. No attempt was made to fashion a special rule where the finance lessor is an affiliate of the ~~seller~~ supplier of goods; this is to be developed by the courts, case by case.

Sale and Leaseback: Sale and leaseback transactions are becoming increasingly common. A number of state statutes treat transactions where possession is retained by the seller as fraudulent per se or prima facie fraudulent. That position is not ~~balanced~~ in accord with modern practice and thus is changed by the Article "if the buyer bought for value and in good faith" (Section 2A-308(3)).

Remedies: The Article has not only provided for lessor's remedies upon default by the lessee (Sections 2A-523 through 2A-531), but also for lessee's remedies upon default by the lessor (Sections 2A-508 through 2A-522). This is a significant departure from Article 9, which provides remedies only for the secured party upon default by the debtor. This difference is compelled by the bilateral nature of the obligations between the parties to a lease.

Damages: Many leasing transactions are predicated on the parties' ability to stipulate an appropriate measure of damages in the event of default. The rule with respect to sales of goods (Section 2-718) is not sufficiently flexible to accommodate this practice. Consistent with the common law emphasis upon freedom to contract, the Article has created a revised rule that allows greater flexibility with respect to leases of goods (Section 2A-504(1)).

History:

This Article is a revision of the Uniform Personal Property Leasing Act, which was approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in August, 1985. However, it was believed that the subject matter of the Uniform Personal Property Leasing Act would be better treated as an article of this Act. Thus, although the Conference promulgated the Uniform Personal Property Leasing Act as a Uniform Law, activity was ~~modest~~ held in abeyance to allow time to restate the Uniform Personal Property Leasing Act as Article 2A.

In August, 1986 the Conference approved and recommended this Article (including conforming amendments to Article 1 and Article 9) for promulgation as an amendment to this Act. In December, 1986 the Council of the American Law Institute approved and recommended this Article (including conforming amendments to Article 1 and Article 9), with official comments, for promulgation as an amendment to this Act. In March, 1987 the Permanent Editorial Board for the Uniform Commercial Code approved and recommended this Article (including conforming amendments to Article 1 and Article 9), with official comments, for promulgation as an amendment to this Act. In May, 1987 the American Law Institute approved and recommended this Article (including conforming amendments to Article 1 and Article 9), with official comments, for promulgation as an amendment to this Act. In August, 1987 the Conference confirmed its approval of the final text of this Article.

Upon its initial promulgation, Article 2A was rapidly enacted in several states, was introduced in a number of other states, and underwent bar association, law revision commission and legislative study in still further states. In that process debate emerged, principally sparked by the study of Article 2A by the California Bar Association, California's non-uniform amendments to Article 2A, and articles appearing in a symposium on Article 2A published after its promulgation in the Alabama Law Review. The debate chiefly centered on whether Article 2A had struck the proper balance or was clear enough concerning the ability of a lessor to grant a security interest in its leasehold interest and in the residual, priority between a secured party and the lessee, and the lessor's remedy structure under Article 2A.

This debate over issues on which reasonable minds could and did differ began to affect the enactment effort for Article 2A in a deleterious manner. Consequently, the Standby Committee for Article 2A, composed predominantly of the former members of the drafting committee, reviewed the legislative actions and studies in the various states, and opened a dialogue with the principal proponents of the non-uniform amendments. Negotiations were conducted in conjunction with, and were facilitated by, a study of the uniform Article and the non-uniform Amendments by the New York Law Revision Commission. Ultimately, a consensus was reached, which has been approved by the membership of the Conference, the Permanent Editorial Board, and the Council of the Institute. Rapid and uniform enactment of Article 2A is expected as a result of the completed amendments. The Article 2A experience reaffirms the essential viability of the procedures of the Conference and the Institute for creating and updating uniform state law in the commercial law area.

Relationship of Article 2A to Other Articles:

The Article on Sales provided a useful point of reference for codifying the law of leases. Many of the provisions of that Article were carried over, changed to reflect differences in style, leasing terminology or leasing practices. Thus, the official comments to those sections of Article 2 whose provisions were carried over are incorporated by reference in Article 2A, as well; further, any case law interpreting those provisions should be viewed as persuasive but not binding on a court when deciding a similar issue with respect to leases. Any change in the sequence that has been made when carrying over a provision from Article 2 should be viewed as a matter of style, not substance. This is not to suggest that in other instances Article 2A did not also incorporate substantially revised provisions of Article 2, Article 9 or otherwise where the revision was driven by a concern over the substance; but for the lack of a mandate, the drafting committee ~~would~~ might well have made the same or a similar change in the statutory analogue. Those sections in Article 2A include Sections 2A-104, 2A-105, 2A-106, 2A-108(2) and (4), 2A-109(2), 2A-208, 2A-214(2) and (3)(a), 2A-216, 2A-303, 2A-306, 2A-503, 2A-504(3)(b), 2A-506(2), and 2A-515. For lack of relevance or significance not all of the provisions of Article 2 were incorporated in Article 2A.

This codification was greatly influenced by the fundamental tenet of the common law as it has developed with respect to leases of goods: freedom of the parties to contract. Note that, like all other Articles of this Act, the principles of construction and interpretation contained in Article 1 are applicable throughout Article 2A (Section 2A-103(4)). These principles include the ability of the parties to vary the effect of the provisions of Article 2A, subject to certain limitations including those that relate to the obligations of good faith, diligence, reasonableness and care (Section 1-102(3)). Consistent with those principles no negative inference is to be drawn by the episodic use of the phrase "unless otherwise agreed" in certain provisions of Article 2A. Section 1-102(4). Indeed, the contrary is true, as the general rule in the Act, including this Article, is that the effect of the Act's provisions may be varied by agreement. Section 1-102(3). This conclusion follows even where the statutory analogue contains the phrase and the correlative provision in Article 2A does not.

(1) There is in a lease contract a warranty that for the lease term no person holds a claim to or interest in the goods that arose from an act or omission of the lessor, other than a claim by way of infringement or the like, which will interfere with the lessee's enjoyment of its leasehold interest.

(2) Except in a finance lease there is in a lease contract by a lessor who is a merchant regularly dealing in goods of the kind a warranty that the goods are delivered free of the rightful claim of any person by way of infringement or the like.

(3) A lessee who furnishes specifications to a lessor or a supplier shall hold the lessor and the supplier harmless against any claim by way of infringement or the like that arises out of compliance with the specifications.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 2-312.

Changes: This section is modeled on the provisions of Section 2-312, with modifications to reflect the limited interest transferred by a lease contract and the total interest transferred by a sale. Section 2-312(2), which is omitted here, is incorporated in Section 2A-214. The warranty of quiet possession was abolished with respect to sales of goods. Section 2-312 official comment 1. Section 2A-211(1) reinstates the warranty of quiet possession with respect to leases. Inherent in the nature of the limited interest transferred by the lease—the right to possession and use of the goods—is the need of the lessee for protection greater than that afforded to the buyer. Since the scope of the protection is limited to claims or interests that arose from acts or omissions of the lessor, the lessor will be in position to evaluate the potential cost, certainly a far better position than that enjoyed by the lessee. Further, to the extent the market will allow, the lessor can attempt to pass on the anticipated additional cost to the lessee in the guise of higher rent.

Purposes: General language was chosen for subsection (1) that expresses the essence of the lessee's expectation: with an exception for infringement and the like, no person holding a claim or interest that arose from an act or omission of the lessor will be able to interfere with the lessee's use and enjoyment of the goods for the lease term. Subsection (2), like other similar provisions in later sections, excludes the finance lessor from extending this warranty; with few exceptions (Sections 2A-210 and 2A-211(1)), the lessee under a finance lease is to look to the supplier for warranties and the like or, in some cases as to warranties, to the manufacturer if a warranty made by that person is passed on. Subsections (2) and (3) are derived from Section 2-312(3). These subsections, as well as the analogue, should be construed so that applicable principles of law and equity supplement their provisions. Sections 2A-103(4) and 1-103.

§ 2A-301. Enforceability of Lease Contract.

Except as otherwise provided in this Article, a lease contract is effective and enforceable according to its terms between the parties, against purchasers of the goods and against creditors of the parties.

Official Comment

Uniform Statutory Source: Section 9-201.

Changes: The first sentence of Section 9-201 was incorporated, modified to reflect leasing terminology. The second sentence of Section 9-201 was eliminated as not relevant to leasing practices.

Purposes:

1. This section establishes a general rule regarding the validity and enforceability of a lease contract. The lease contract is effective and enforceable between the parties and against third parties. Exceptions to this general rule arise where there is a specific rule to the contrary in this Article. Enforceability is, thus, dependent upon the lease contract meeting the requirements of the Statute of Frauds provisions of Section 2A-201. Enforceability is also a function of the lease contract conforming to the principles of construction and interpretation contained in the Article on General Provisions (Article 1). Section 2A-103(4).

2. The effectiveness or enforceability of the lease contract is not dependent upon the lease contract or any financing statement or the like being filed or recorded; however, the priority of the interest of a lessor of fixtures with respect to the interests of certain third parties in such fixtures is subject to the provisions of the Article on Secured Transactions (Article 9). Section 2A-309. Prior to the adoption of this Article filing or recording was not required with respect to leases, only leases intended as security. The definition of security interest, as amended concurrently with the adoption of this Article, more clearly delineates leases and leases intended as security and thus signals the need to file. Section 1-201(37). Those lessors who are concerned about whether the transaction creates a lease or a security interest will continue to file a protective financing statement. Section 9-408. Coogan, Leasing and the Uniform Commercial Code, in Equipment Leasing—Leveraged Leasing 681, 744–46 (2d ed. 1980).

3. Hypothetical:

~~1.~~ (a) In construing this section it is important to recognize its relationship to other sections in this Article. This is best demonstrated by reference to a hypothetical. Assume that on February 1 A, a manufacturer of combines and other farm equipment, leased a fleet of six combines to B, a corporation engaged in the business of farming, for a 12 month term. Under the lease agreement between A and B, A agreed to defer B's payment of the first two months' rent to April 1. On March 1 B recognized that it would need only four combines and thus subleased two combines to C for an 11 month term.

~~2.~~ (b) This hypothetical raises a number of issues that are answered by the sections contained in this part. Since lease is defined to include sublease (Section 2A-103(i)(j) and (w)), this section provides that the prime lease between A and B and the sublease between B and C are enforceable in accordance with their terms, except as otherwise provided in this Article; that exception, in this case, is one of considerable scope.

~~3.~~ (c) The separation of ownership, which is in A, and possession, which is in B with respect to four combines and which is in C with respect to two combines, is not relevant. Section 2A-302. A's interest in the six combines cannot be challenged simply because A parted with possession to B, who in turn parted with possession of some of the combines to C. Yet it is important to note that by the terms of Section 2A-302 this conclusion is subject to change if otherwise provided in this Article.

~~4.~~ (d) B's entering the sublease with C raises an issue that is treated by this part. In a dispute over the leased combines A may challenge B's right to sublease. The ~~general~~ rule is permissive as to transfers of interests under a lease contract, including subleases. ~~Section 2A-303(1)~~ Section 2A-303(2). However, the rule ~~creates~~ has two significant ~~exceptions~~ qualifications. If the prime lease contract between A and B prohibits B from subleasing the combines, ~~Section 2A-303(1)(a)~~ or makes such a sublease an event of default, Section 2A-303(2) applies~~, as the transfer is voluntary and prohibited~~; thus, while B's interest under the prime lease may ~~not~~ be transferred under the sublease to C, A may have a remedy pursuant to Section 2A-303(5). Absent a prohibition or default provision in the prime lease contract A might be able to argue that the sublease to C materially increases A's risk; thus, while B's interest under the prime lease may ~~not~~ be transferred under the sublease to C, ~~if after demand by A, C fails to provide the assurances required by Section 2A-303(2)~~ A may have a remedy pursuant to Section 2A-303(5). ~~Section 2A-303(1)(b)~~ Section 2A-303(5)(b)(ii).

~~5.~~ (e) Resolution of this issue is also a function of the section dealing with the sublease of goods by a prime lessee (Section 2A-305). Subsection (1) of Section 2A-305, which is subject to the ~~rule~~ rules of Section 2A-303 stated above, provides that C takes subject to the interest of A under the prime lease between A and B. However, there are two exceptions. First, if B is a merchant (Sections 2A-103(3) and 2-104(1)) dealing in goods of that kind and C is a sublessee in the ordinary course of business (Sections 2A-103(1)(o) and 2A-103(1)(n)), C takes free of the prime lease between A and B. Second, if B has rejected the six combines under the prime lease with A, and B disposes of the goods by sublease to C, C takes free of the prime lease if C can establish good faith. Section 2A-511(4).

~~6.~~ (f) If the facts of this hypothetical are expanded and we assume that the prime lease obligated B to maintain the combines, an additional issue may be presented. Prior to entering the sublease B, in satisfaction of its maintenance covenant, brought the two combines that it desired to sublease to a local independent dealer of A's. The dealer did the requested work for B. C inspected the combines on the dealer's lot after the work was completed. C signed the sublease with B two days later. C, however, was prevented from taking delivery of the two combines as B refused to pay the dealer's invoice for the repairs. The dealer furnished the repair service to B in the ordinary course of the dealer's business. If under applicable law the dealer has a lien on repaired goods in the dealer's possession, the dealer's lien will take priority over ~~A's,~~ B's and C's interests, and also should take priority over A's interest, depending upon the terms of the lease contract and the applicable law. Section 2A-306.

~~7.~~ (g) Now assume that C is in financial straits and one of C's creditors obtains a judgment against C. If the creditor levies on C's subleasehold interest in the two combines, who will prevail? Unless the levying creditor also holds a lien covered by Section 2A-306, discussed above, the judgment creditor will take its interest subject to B's rights under the sublease and A's rights under the prime lease. Section 2A-307(1). the hypothetical becomes more complicated if we assume that B is in financial straits and B's creditor holds the judgment. Here the judgment creditor takes subject to the sublease unless the lien attached to the two combines before the sublease contract became enforceable. Section 2A-307(2)(a). However, B's judgment creditor cannot prime A's interest in the goods because, with respect to A, the judgment creditor is a creditor of B in its capacity as lessee under the prime lease between A and B. Thus, here the judgment creditor's interest is subject to the lease between A and B. Section 2A-307(1).

~~8.~~ (h) Finally, assume that on April 1 B is unable to pay A the deferred rent then due under the prime lease, but that C is current in its payments under the sublease from B. What effect will B's default under the prime lease between A and B have on C's rights under the sublease between B and C? Section 2A-301 provides that a lease contract is effective against the creditors of either party. Since a lease contract includes a sublease contract (Section 2A-103(1)(l)), the sublease contract between B and C arguably could be enforceable against A, a prime lessor who has extended unsecured credit to B, the prime lessee/sublessor, if the sublease contract meets the requirements of Section 2A-201. However, the rule stated in Section 2A-301 is subject to other provisions in this Article. Under Section 2A-305, C, as sublessee, would take subject to the prime lease contract in most cases. Thus, B's default under the prime lease will in most cases lead to A's recovery of the goods from C. Section 2A-523. A and C could provide otherwise by agreement. Section 2A-311. C's recourse will be to assert a claim for damages against B. ~~Section~~ Sections 2A-211(1) and 2A-508.

4. Relationship Between Sections:

~~1.~~ (a) As the analysis of the hypothetical demonstrates, Part 3 of the Article focuses on issues that relate to the enforceability of the lease contract (Sections 2A-301, 2A-302 and 2A-303) and to the priority of various claims to the goods subject to the lease contract (Sections 2A-304, 2A-305, 2A-306, 2A-307, 2A-308, 2A-309, ~~and~~ 2A-310, and 2A-311).

~~2.~~ (b) This section states a general rule of enforceability, which is subject to specific rules to the contrary stated elsewhere in the Article. Section 2A-302 negates any notion that the separation of title and possession is fraudulent as a rule of law. Finally, Section 2A-303 states ~~a permissive rule~~ rules with respect to the transfer of the lessor's interest (as well as the residual interest in the goods) or the lessee's interest under the lease contract. ~~Conditions~~ Qualifications are imposed as a function of various issues, including whether the transfer is ~~voluntary or involuntary~~ the creation or enforcement of a security interest or one that is material to the other party to the lease contract. In addition, a system of rules is created to deal with the rights and duties among assignor, assignee and the other party to the lease contract.

~~3.~~ (c) Sections 2A-304 and 2A-305 are twins that deal with good faith transferees of goods subject to the lease contract. Section 2A-304 creates a set of rules with respect to transfers by the lessor of goods subject to a lease contract; the transferee considered is a subsequent lessee of the goods. The priority dispute covered here is between the subsequent lessee and the original lessee of the goods (or persons claiming through the original lessee). Section 2A-305 creates a set of rules with respect to transfers by the lessee of goods subject to a lease contract; the transferees considered are buyers of the goods or sublessees of the goods. The priority dispute covered here is between the transferee and the lessor of the goods (or persons claiming through the lessor).

~~4.~~ (d) Section 2A-306 creates a rule with respect to priority disputes between holders of liens for services or materials furnished with respect to goods subject to a lease contract and the lessor or the lessee under that contract. Section 2A-307 creates a rule with respect to priority disputes between the lessee and creditors of the lessor and priority disputes between the lessor and creditors of the lessee.

~~5.~~ (e) Section 2A-308 creates a series of rules relating to allegedly fraudulent transfers and preferences. The most significant rule is that set forth in subsection (3) which validates sale-leaseback transactions if the buyer-lessor can establish that he or she bought for value and in good faith.

~~6.~~ (f) ~~Finally,~~ Sections 2A-309 and 2A-310 create a series of rules with respect to priority disputes between various third parties and a lessor of fixtures or accessions, respectively, with respect thereto.

(g) Finally, Section 2A-311 allows parties to alter the statutory priorities by agreement.

Official Comment

This Article represents a complete revision and modernization of the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

The Comments which follow will point out the respects in which this Article changes the Negotiable Instruments Law, which was promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1896, and was subsequently enacted in every American jurisdiction. Needless to say, in the 50 odd years of the history of that statute, there have been vast changes in commercial practices relating to the handling of negotiable instruments. The need for revision of this important statute was felt for some years before the present project was undertaken.

It should be noted especially that this Article does not apply in any way to the handling of securities. Article 8 deals with that subject. See Sec. 3-103.

§ 3-102. Definitions and Index of Definitions.

(1) In this Article unless the context otherwise requires

(a) "Issue" means the first delivery of an instrument to a holder or a remitter.

(b) An "order" is a direction to pay and must be more than an authorization or request. It must identify the person to pay with reasonable certainty. It may be addressed to one or more such persons jointly or in the alternative but not in succession.

(c) A "promise" is an undertaking to pay and must be more than an acknowledgment of an obligation.

(d) "Secondary party" means a drawer or endorser.

(e) "Instrument" means a negotiable instrument.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 1(5), 128 and 191, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: See below.

Purposes of Changes:

1. The definition of "issue" in Section 191 of the original act has been clarified in two respects. The Section 191 definition required that the instrument delivered be "complete in form" inconsistently with the provisions of Sections 14 and 15 (relating to incomplete instruments) of the original act. The "complete in form" language has therefore been deleted. Furthermore the Section 191 definition required that the delivery be "to a person who takes as a holder", thus raising difficulties in the case of the remitter (see Comment 3 to Sec. 3-302) who may not be a party to the instrument and thus not a holder. The definition in subsection (1)(a) of this Section thus provides that the delivery may be to a holder or to a remitter.

2. The definitions of "order" [subsection (b)] and "promise" [subsection (c)] are new, but state principles clearly recognized by the courts. In the case of orders the dividing line between "a direction to pay" and "an authorization or request" may not be self-evident in the occasional unusual, and therefore non-commercial, case. The prefixing of words of courtesy to the direction—as "please pay" or "kindly pay"—should not lead to a holding that the direction has degenerated into a mere request. On the other hand informal language—such as "I wish you would pay"—would not qualify as an order and such an instrument would be non-negotiable. The definition of "promise" is intended to make it clear that a mere I.O.U. is not a negotiable instrument, and to change the result in occasional cases which have held that "Due Currier & Barker seventeen dollars and fourteen cents, value received," and "I borrowed from P. Shemonia the sum of five hundred dollars with four per cent interest; the borrowed money ought to be paid within four months from the above date" were promises sufficient to make the instruments into notes.

3. The last sentence of subsection (1)(b) ("order") permits the order to be addressed to one or more persons (as drawees) in the alternative, recognizing the practice of corporations issuing dividend checks and of other drawers who for commercial convenience name a number of drawees, usually in different parts of the country. The section on presentment provides that presentment may be made to any one of such drawees. Drawees in succession are not permitted because the holder should not be required to make more than one presentment, and upon the first dishonor should have his recourse against the drawer and indorsers.

4. Comments on the definitions indexed follow the sections in which the definitions are contained.

§ 3-103. Limitations on Scope of Article.

(1) This Article does not apply to money, documents of title or investment securities.

(2) The provisions of this Article are subject to the provisions of the Article on Bank Deposits and Collections (Article 4) and Secured Transactions (Article 9).

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. This Article is restricted to commercial paper—that is to say, to drafts, checks, certificates of deposit and notes as defined in Section 3-104(2). Subsection (1) expressly excludes any money, as defined in this Act (Section 1-201), even though the money may be in the form of a bank note which meets all the requirements of Section 3-104(1). Money is of course negotiable at common law or under separate statutes, but no provision of this Article is applicable to it. Subsection (1) also expressly excludes documents of title and investment securities which fall within Articles 7 and 8, respectively. To this extent the section follows decisions which held that interim certificates calling for the delivery of securities were not negotiable instruments under the original statute. Such paper is now covered under Article 8, but is not within any section of this Article. Likewise, bills of lading, warehouse receipts and other documents of title which fall within Article 7 may be negotiable under the provision of that Article, but are not covered by any section of this Article.

2. Instruments which fall within the scope of this Article may also be subject to other Articles of the Code. Many items in course of bank collection will of course be negotiable instruments, and the same may be true of collateral pledged as security for a debt. In such cases this Article, which is general, is, in case of conflicting provisions, subject to the Articles which deal specifically with the type of transaction or instrument involved: Article 4 (Bank Deposits and Collections) and Article 9 (Secured Transactions). In the case of a negotiable instrument which is subject to Article 4 because it is in course of collection or to Article 9 because it is used as collateral, the provisions of this Article continue to be applicable except insofar as there may be conflicting provisions in the Bank Collection or Secured Transactions Article.

An instrument which qualifies as "negotiable" under this Article may also qualify as a "security" under Article 8. It will be noted that the formal requisites of negotiability (Section 3-104) go to matters of form exclusively; the definition of "security" on the other hand (Section 8-102) looks principally to the manner in which an instrument is used ("commonly dealt in upon securities exchanges . . . or commonly recognized . . . as a medium for investment"). If an instrument negotiable in form under Section 3-104 is, because of the manner of its use, a "security" under Section 8-102, Article 8 and not this Article applies. See subsection (1) of this Section and Section 8-102(1)(b).

Point 1: Articles 7 and 8; Sections 1-201, 3-104(1) and (2), 3-107.

Definitional Cross References:

§ 3-104. Form of Negotiable Instruments; "Draft"; "Check"; "Certificate of Deposit"; "Note".

(1) Any writing to be a negotiable instrument within this Article must

(a) be signed by the maker or drawer; and

(b) contain an unconditional promise or order to pay a sum certain in money and no other promise, order, obligation or power given by the maker or drawer except as authorized by this Article; and

(c) be payable on demand or at a definite time; and

(d) be payable to order or to bearer.

(2) A writing which complies with the requirements of this section is

(a) a "draft" ("bill of exchange") if it is an order;

(b) a "check" if it is a draft drawn on a bank and payable on demand;

(c) a "certificate of deposit" if it is an acknowledgment by a bank of receipt of money with an engagement to repay it;

(d) a "note" if it is a promise other than a certificate of deposit.

(3) As used in other Articles of this Act, and as the context may require, the terms "draft", "check", "certificate of deposit" and "note" may refer to instruments which are not negotiable within this Article as well as to instruments which are so negotiable.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 1, 5, 10, 126, 184 and 185, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Parts of original sections combined and reworded; new provisions; original Section 10 omitted.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter: The changes are intended to bring together in one section related provisions and definitions formerly widely separated.

1. Under subsection (1)(b) any writing, to be a negotiable instrument within this Article, must be payable in money. In a few states there are special statutes, enacted at an early date when currency was less sound and barter was prevalent, which make promises to pay in commodities negotiable. Even under these statutes commodity notes are now little used and have no general circulation. This Article makes no attempt to provide for such paper, as it is a matter of purely local concern. Even if retention of the old statutes is regarded in any state as important, amendment of this section may not be necessary, since "within this Article" in subsection (1) leaves open the possibility that some writings may be made negotiable by other statutes or by judicial decision. The same is true as to any new type of paper which commercial practice may develop in the future.

2. While a writing cannot be made a negotiable instrument within this Article by contract or by conduct, nothing in this section is intended to mean that in a particular case a court may not arrive at a result similar to that of negotiability by finding that the obligor is estopped by his conduct from asserting a defense against a bona fide purchaser. Such an estoppel rests upon ordinary principles of the law of simple contract; it does not depend upon negotiability, and it does not make the writing negotiable for any other purpose. But a contract to build a house or to employ a workman, or equally a security agreement does not become a negotiable instrument by the mere insertion of a clause agreeing that it shall be one.

3. The words "no other promise, order, obligation or power" in subsection (1)(b) are an expansion of the first sentence of the original Section 5. Section 3-112 permits an instrument to carry certain limited obligations or powers in addition to the simple promise or order to pay money. Subsection (1) of this Section is intended to say that it cannot carry others.

4. Any writing which meets the requirements of subsection (1) and is not excluded under Section 3-103 is a negotiable instrument, and all sections of this Article apply to it, even though it may contain additional language beyond that contemplated by this section. Such an instrument is a draft, a check, a certificate of deposit or a note as defined in subsection (2). Traveler's checks in the usual form, for instance, are negotiable instruments under this Article when they have been completed by the identifying signature.

5. This Article omits the original Section 10, which provided that the instrument need not follow the language of the act if it "clearly indicates an intention to conform" to it. The provision has served no useful purpose, and it has been an encouragement to bad drafting and to liberality in holding questionable paper to be negotiable. The omission is not intended to mean that the instrument must follow the language of this section, or that one term may not be recognized as clearly the equivalent of another, as in the case of "I undertake" instead of "I promise," or "Pay to holder" instead of "Pay to bearer." It does mean that either the language of the section or a clear equivalent must be found, and that in doubtful cases the decision should be against negotiability.

6. Subsection (3) is intended to make clear the same policy expressed in Section 3-805.

§ 3-105. When Promise or Order Unconditional.

(1) A promise or order otherwise unconditional is not made conditional by the fact that the instrument

(a) is subject to implied or constructive conditions; or

(b) states its consideration, whether performed or promised, or the transaction which gave rise to the instrument, or that the promise or order is made or the instrument matures in accordance with or "as per" such transaction; or

(c) refers to or states that it arises out of a separate agreement or refers to a separate agreement for rights as to prepayment or acceleration; or

(d) states that it is drawn under a letter of credit; or

(e) states that it is secured, whether by mortgage, reservation of title or otherwise; or

(f) indicates a particular account to be debited or any other fund or source from which reimbursement is expected; or

(g) is limited to payment out of a particular fund or the proceeds of a particular source, if the instrument is issued by a government or governmental agency or unit; or

(h) is limited to payment out of the entire assets of a partnership, unincorporated association, trust or estate by or on behalf of which the instrument is issued.

(2) A promise or order is not unconditional if the instrument

(a) states that it is subject to or governed by any other agreement; or

(b) states that it is to be paid only out of a particular fund or source except as provided in this section.

As amended in 1962.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 3, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Completely revised.

Purposes of Changes: The section is intended to make it clear that, so far as negotiability is affected, the conditional or unconditional character of the promise or order is to be determined by what is expressed in the instrument itself; and to permit certain specific limitations upon the terms of payment.

1. Paragraph (a) of subsection (1) rejects the theory of decisions which have held that a recital in an instrument that it is given in return for an executory promise gives rise to an implied condition that the instrument is not to be paid if the promise is not performed, and that this condition destroys negotiability. Nothing in the section is intended to imply that language may not be fairly construed to mean what it says, but implications, whether of law or fact, are not to be considered in determining negotiability.

2. Paragraph (b) of subsection (1) is an amplification of Section 3(2) of the original act. The final clause is intended to resolve a conflict in the decisions over the effect of such language as "This note is given for payment as per contract for the purchase of goods of even date, maturity being in conformity with the terms of such contract." It adopts the general commercial understanding that such language is intended as a mere recital of the origin of the instrument and a reference to the transaction for information, but is not meant to condition payment according to the terms of any other agreement.

3. Paragraph (c) of subsection (1) likewise is intended to resolve a conflict, and to reject cases in which a reference to a separate agreement was held to mean that payment of the instrument must be limited in accordance with the terms of the agreement, and hence was conditioned by it. Such a reference normally is inserted for the purpose of making a record or giving information to anyone who may be interested, and in the absence of any express statement to that effect is not intended to limit the terms of payment. Inasmuch as rights as to prepayment or acceleration has to do with a "speed-up" in payment and since notes frequently refer to separate agreements for a statement of these rights, such reference does not destroy negotiability even though it has mild aspects of incorporation by reference. The general reasoning with respect to subparagraph (c) also applies to a draft which on its face states that it is drawn under a letter of credit (subparagraph (d)). Paragraphs (c) and (d) therefore adopt the position that negotiability is not affected. If the reference goes further and provides that payment must be made according to the terms of the agreement, it falls under paragraph (a) of subsection (2) [As amended 1962].

4. Paragraph (e) of subsection (1) is intended to settle another conflict in the decisions, over the effect of "title security notes" and other instruments which recite the security given. It rejects cases which have held that the mere statement that the instrument is secured, by reservation of title or otherwise, carries the implied condition that payment is to be made only if the security agreement is fully performed. Again such a recital normally is included only for the purpose of making a record or giving information, and is not intended to condition payment in any way. The provision adopts the position of the great majority of the courts.

5. Paragraph (f) of subsection (1) is a rewording of Section 3(1) of the original act.

6. Paragraph (g) of subsection (1) is new. It is intended to permit municipal corporations or other governments or governmental agencies to draw checks or to issue other short-term commercial paper in which payment is limited to a particular fund or to the proceeds of particular taxes or other sources of revenue. The provision will permit some municipal warrants to be negotiable if they are in proper form. Normally such warrants lack the words "order" or "bearer," or are marked "Not Negotiable," or are payable only in serial order, which makes them conditional.

7. Paragraph (h) of subsection (1) is new. It adopts the policy of decisions holding that an instrument issued by an unincorporated association is negotiable although its payment is expressly limited to the assets of the association, excluding the liability of individual members; and recognizing as negotiable an instrument issued by a trust estate without personal liability of the trustee. The policy is extended to a partnership and to any estate. The provision affects only the negotiability of the instrument, and is not intended to change the law of any state as to the liability of a partner, trustee, executor, administrator, or any other person on such an instrument.

8. Paragraph (a) of subsection (2) retains the generally accepted rule that where an instrument contains such language as "subject to terms of contract between maker and payee of this date," its payment is conditioned according to the terms of the agreement and the instrument is not negotiable. The distinction is between a mere recital of the existence of the separate agreement or a reference to it for information, which under paragraph (c) of subsection (1) will not affect negotiability, and any language which, fairly construed, requires the holder to look to the other agreement for the terms of payment. The intent of the provision is that an instrument is not negotiable unless the holder can ascertain all of its essential terms from its face. In the specific instance of rights as to prepayment or acceleration, however, there may be a reference to a separate agreement without destroying negotiability [As amended 1962].

9. Paragraph (b) of subsection (2) restates the last sentence of Section 3 of the original act. As noted above, exceptions are made by paragraphs (g) and (h) of subsection (1) in favor of instruments issued by governments or governmental agencies, or by a partnership, unincorporated association, trust or estate.

§ 3-106. Sum Certain.

(1) The sum payable is a sum certain even though it is to be paid

(a) with stated interest or by stated installments; or

(b) with stated different rates of interest before and after default or a specified date; or

(c) with a stated discount or addition if paid before or after the date fixed for payment; or

(d) with exchange or less exchange, whether at a fixed rate or at the current rate; or

(e) with costs of collection or an attorney's fee or both upon default.

(2) Nothing in this section shall validate any term which is otherwise illegal.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 2 and 6(5), Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Reworded.

Purposes of Changes: The new language is intended to clarify doubts arising under the original section as to interest, discounts or additions, exchange, costs and attorney's fees, and acceleration or extension.

1. The section rejects decisions which have denied negotiability to a note with a term providing for a discount for early payment on the ground that at the time of issue the amount payable was not certain. It is sufficient that at any time of payment the holder is able to determine the amount then payable from the instrument itself with any necessary computation. Thus a demand note bearing interest at six per cent is negotiable. A stated discount or addition for early or late payment does not affect the certainty of the sum so long as the computation can be made, nor do different rates of interest before and after default or a specified date. The computation must be one which can be made from the instrument itself without reference to any outside source, and this section does not make negotiable a note payable with interest "at the current rate."

2. Paragraph (d) recognizes the occasional practice of making the instrument payable with exchange deducted rather than added.

3. In paragraph (e) "upon default" is substituted for the language of the original Section 2(5) in order to include any default in payment of interest or installments.

4. The section contains no specific language relating to the effect of acceleration clauses on the certainty of the sum payable. Section 2(3) of the original act contained a saving clause for provisions accelerating principal on default in payment of an installment or of interest, which led to doubt as to the effect of other accelerating provisions. This Article (Section 3-109, Definite Time) broadly validates acceleration clauses; it is not necessary to state the matter in this section as well. The disappearance of the language referred to in old Section 2(3) means merely that it was regarded as surplusage.

5. Most states have usury laws prohibiting excessive rates of interest. In some states there are statutes or rules of law invalidating a term providing for increased interest after maturity, or for costs and attorney's fees. Subsection (2) is intended to make it clear that this section is concerned only with the effect of such terms upon negotiability, and is not meant to change the law of any state as to the validity of the term itself.

§ 3-107. Money.

(1) An instrument is payable in money if the medium of exchange in which it is payable is money at the time the instrument is made. An instrument payable in "currency" or "current funds" is payable in money.

(2) A promise or order to pay a sum stated in a foreign currency is for a sum certain in money and, unless a different medium of payment is specified in the instrument, may be satisfied by payment of that number of dollars which the stated foreign currency will purchase at the buying sight rate for that currency on the day on which the instrument is payable or, if payable on demand, on the day of demand. If such an instrument specifies a foreign currency as the medium of payment the instrument is payable in that currency.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 6(5), Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Completely rewritten.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter: To make clear when an instrument is payable in money and to state rules applicable to instruments drawn payable in a foreign currency.

1. The term "money" is defined in Section 1-201 as "a medium of exchange authorized or adopted by a domestic or foreign government as a part of its currency". That definition rejects the narrow view of some early cases that "money" is limited to legal tender. Legal tender acts do no more than designate a particular kind of money which the obligee will be required to accept in discharge of an obligation. It rejects also the contention sometimes advanced that "money" includes any medium of exchange current and accepted in the particular community whether it be gold dust, beaver pelts, or cigarettes in occupied Germany. Such unusual "currency" is necessarily of uncertain and fluctuating value, and an instrument intended to pass generally in commerce as negotiable may not be made payable therein.

The test adopted is that of the sanction of government, which recognizes the circulating medium as a part of the official currency of that government. In particular the provision adopts the position that an instrument expressing the amount to be paid in sterling, francs, lire or other recognized currency of a foreign government is negotiable even though payable in the United States.

2. The provision on "currency" or "current funds" accepts the view of the great majority of the decisions, that "currency" or "current funds" means that the instrument is payable in money.

3. Either the amount to be paid or the medium of payment may be expressed in terms of a particular kind of money. A draft passing between Toronto and Buffalo may, according to the desire and convenience of the parties, call for payment of 100 United States dollars or of 100 Canadian dollars; and it may require either sum to be paid in either currency. Under this section an instrument in any of these forms is negotiable, whether payable in Toronto or in Buffalo.

4. As stated in the preceding paragraph the intention of the parties in making an instrument payable in a foreign currency may be that the medium of payment shall be either dollars measured by the foreign currency or the foreign currency in which the instrument is drawn. Under subsection (2) the presumption is, unless the instrument otherwise specifies, that the obligation may be satisfied by payment in dollars in an amount determined by the buying sight rate for the foreign currency on the day the instrument becomes payable. Inasmuch as the buying sight rate will fluctuate from day to day, it might be argued that an instrument expressed in a foreign currency but actually payable in dollars is not for a "sum certain". Subsection (2) makes it clear that for the purposes of negotiability under this Article such an instrument, despite exchange fluctuations, is for a sum certain.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 7, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Reworded, final sentence of original section omitted.

Purposes of Changes: Except for the omission of the final sentence this section restates the substance of original Section 7. The final sentence dealt with the status of a person issuing, accepting or indorsing an instrument after maturity and provided that as to such a person the instrument was payable on demand. That language implied that the ordinary rules relating to demand instruments as to due course, holding, presentment, notice of dishonor and so on were applicable. This Article abandons that concept which served no special purpose except to trap the unwary. Under Section 3-302 (Holder in Due Course) and in view of the deletion from this section of the final sentence of original Section 7 there is no longer the possibility that one taking time paper after maturity may acquire due course rights against a post-maturity indorser. Section 3-501(4), however, provides that the indorser after maturity is not entitled to presentment, notice of dishonor or protest.

(1) An instrument is payable at a definite time if by its terms it is payable

(a) on or before a stated date or at a fixed period after a stated date; or

(b) at a fixed period after sight; or

(c) at a definite time subject to any acceleration; or

(d) at a definite time subject to extension at the option of the holder, or to extension to a further definite time at the option of the maker or acceptor or automatically upon or after a specified act or event.

(2) An instrument which by its terms is otherwise payable only upon an act or event uncertain as to time of occurrence is not payable at a definite time even though the act or event has occurred.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 4 and 17(3), Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Reworded; new provisions; rule of original Section 4(3) reversed.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter: To remove uncertainties arising under the original section, and to eliminate commercially unacceptable instruments.

1. Subsection (2) reverses the rule of the original Section 4(3) as to instruments payable after events certain to happen but uncertain as to time. Almost the only use of such instruments has been in the anticipation of inheritance or future interests by borrowing on post-obituary notes. These have been much more common in England than in the United States. They are at best questionable paper, not acceptable in general commerce, with no good reason for according them free circulation as negotiable instruments. As in the case of the occasional note payable "one year after the war" or at a similar uncertain date, they are likely to be made under unusual circumstances suggesting good reason for preserving defenses of the maker. They are accordingly eliminated.

2. With this change "definite time" is substituted for "fixed or determinable future time." The time of payment is definite if it can be determined from the face of the instrument.

3. An undated instrument payable "thirty days after date" is not payable at a definite time, since the time of payment cannot be determined on its face. It is, however, an incomplete instrument within the provisions of Section 3-115 dealing with such instruments and may be completed by dating it. It is then payable at a definite time.

4. Paragraph (c) of subsection (1) resolves a conflict in the decisions on the negotiability of instruments containing acceleration clauses as to the meaning and effect of "on or before a fixed or determinable future time" in the original Section 4(2). (Instruments expressly stated to be payable "on or before" a given date are dealt with in subsection (1)(a)). So far as certainty of time of payment is concerned a note payable at a definite time but subject to acceleration is no less certain than a note payable on demand, whose negotiability never has been questioned. It is in fact more certain, since it at least states a definite time beyond which the instrument cannot run. Objections to the acceleration clause must be based rather on the possibility of abuse by the holder, which has nothing to do with negotiability and is not limited to negotiable instruments. That problem is now covered by Section 1-208.

Subsection (1)(c) is intended to mean that the certainty of time of payment or the negotiability of the instrument is not affected by any acceleration clause, whether acceleration be at the option of the maker or the holder, or automatic upon the occurrence of some event, and whether it be conditional or unrestricted. If the acceleration term itself is uncertain it may fail on ordinary contract principles, but the instrument then remains negotiable and is payable at the definite time.

The effect of acceleration clauses upon a holder in due course is covered by the new definition of the holder in due course (Section 3-302) and by the section on notice to purchaser (subsection (3) of Section 3-304). If the purchaser is not aware of any acceleration, his delay in making presentment may be excused under the section dealing with excused presentment (subsection (1) of Section 3-511).

5. Paragraph (d) of subsection (1) is new. It adopts the generally accepted rule that a clause providing for extension at the option of the holder, even without a time limit, does not affect negotiability since the holder is given only a right which he would have without the clause. If the extension is to be at the option of the maker or acceptor or is to be automatic, a definite time limit must be stated or the time of payment remains uncertain and the instrument is not negotiable. Where such a limit is stated, the effect upon certainty of time of payment is the same as if the instrument were made payable at the ultimate date with a term providing for acceleration.

The construction and effect of extension clauses is covered by paragraph (f) of Section 3-118 on ambiguous terms and rules of construction, to which reference should be made.

§ 3-110. Payable to Order.

(1) An instrument is payable to order when by its terms it is payable to the order or assigns of any person therein specified with reasonable certainty, or to him or his order, or when it is conspicuously designated on its face as "exchange" or the like and names a payee. It may be payable to the order of

(a) the maker or drawer; or

(b) the drawee; or

(c) a payee who is not maker, drawer or drawee; or

(d) two or more payees together or in the alternative; or

(e) an estate, trust or fund, in which case it is payable to the order of the representative of such estate, trust or fund or his successors; or

(f) an office, or an officer by his title as such in which case it is payable to the principal but the incumbent of the office or his successors may act as if he or they were the holder; or

(g) a partnership or unincorporated association, in which case it is payable to the partnership or association and may be indorsed or transferred by any person thereto authorized.

(2) An instrument not payable to order is not made so payable by such words as "payable upon return of this instrument properly indorsed."

(3) An instrument made payable both to order and to bearer is payable to order unless the bearer words are handwritten or typewritten.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 8, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Reworded, new provisions.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter: The changes are intended to remove uncertainties arising under the original section.

1. Paragraph (d) of subsection (1) replaces the original subsections (4) and (5). It eliminates the word "jointly," which has carried a possible implication of a right of survivorship. Normally an instrument payable to "A and B" is intended to be payable to the two parties as tenants in common, and there is no survivorship in the absence of express language to that effect. The instrument may be payable to "A or B," in which case it is payable to either A or B individually. It may even be made payable to "A and/or B," in which case it is payable either to A or to B singly, or to the two together. The negotiation, enforcement and discharge of the instrument in all such cases are covered by the section on instruments payable to two or more persons (Sec. 3-116).

2. Paragraph (e) of subsection (1) is intended to change the result of decisions which have held that an instrument payable to the order of the estate of a decedent was payable to bearer, on the ground that the name of the payee did not purport to be that of any person. The intent in such cases is obviously not to make the instrument payable to bearer, but to the order of the representative of the estate. The provision extends the same principle to an instrument payable to the order of "Tilden Trust," or "Community Fund". So long as the payee can be identified, it is not necessary that it be a legal entity; and in each case the instrument is treated as payable to the order of the appropriate representative or his successor.

3. Under paragraph (f) of subsection (1) an instrument may be made payable to the office itself ("Swedish Consulate") or to the officer by his title as such ("Treasurer of City Club"). In either case it runs to the incumbent of the office and his successors. The effect of instruments in such a form is covered by the section on instruments payable with words of description (Sec. 3-117).

4. Vestigial theories relating to the lack of "legal entity" of partnerships and various forms of unincorporated associations—such as labor unions and business trusts—make it the part of wisdom to specify that instruments made payable to such groups are order paper payable as designated and not bearer paper (subsection (1)(g)). As in the case of incorporated associations, any person having authority from the partnership or association to whose order the instrument is payable may indorse or otherwise deal with the instrument.

5. Subsection (2) is intended to change the result of cases holding that "payable upon return of this certificate properly indorsed" indicated an intention to make the instrument payable to any indorsee and so must be construed as the equivalent of "Pay to order." Ordinarily the purpose of such language is only to insure return of the instrument with indorsement in lieu of a receipt, and the word "order" is omitted with the intention that the instrument shall not be negotiable.

6. Subsection (3) is directed at occasional instruments reading "Pay to the order of John Doe or bearer." Such language usually is found only where the drawer has filled in the name of the payee on a printed form, without intending the ambiguity or noticing the word "bearer." Under such circumstances the name of the specified payee indicates an intent that the order words shall control. If the word "bearer" is handwritten or typewritten, there is sufficient indication of an intent that the instrument shall be payable to bearer. Instruments payable to "order of bearer" are covered not by this section but by the following Section 3-111.

An instrument is payable to bearer when by its terms it is payable to

(a) bearer or the order of bearer; or

(b) a specified person or bearer; or

(c) "cash" or the order of "cash", or any other indication which does not purport to designate a specific payee.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 9, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Reworded; original subsections (3) and (5) omitted here but covered by Sections on impostors and signature in name of payee (Section 3-405) and on special and blank indorsements (Section 3-204).

Purposes of Changes: The rewording is intended to remove uncertainties.

1. Language such as "order of bearer" usually results when a printed form is used and the word "bearer" is filled in. Subsection (a) rejects the view that the instrument is payable to order, and adopts the position that "bearer" is the unusual word and should control. Compare Comment 6 to Section 3-110.

2. Paragraph (c) is reworded to remove any possible implication that "Pay to the order of _____" makes the instrument payable to bearer. It is an incomplete order instrument, and falls under Section 3-115. Likewise "Pay Treasurer of X Corporation" does not mean pay bearer, even though there may be no such officer. Instruments payable to the order of an estate, trust, fund, partnership, unincorporated association or office are covered by the preceding section. This subsection applies only to such language as "Pay Cash," "Pay to the order of cash," "Pay bills payable," "Pay to the order of one keg of nails," or other words which do not purport to designate any specific payee.

3. Under Section 40 of the original Act an instrument payable to bearer on its face remained bearer paper negotiable by delivery although subsequently specially indorsed. It should be noted that Section 3-204 on special indorsement reverses this rule and allows the special indorsement to control.

(1) The negotiability of an instrument is not affected by

(a) the omission of a statement of any consideration or of the place where the instrument is drawn or payable; or

(b) a statement that collateral has been given to secure obligations either on the instrument or otherwise of an obligor on the instrument or that in case of default on those obligations the holder may realize on or dispose of the collateral; or

(c) a promise or power to maintain or protect collateral or to give additional collateral; or

(d) a term authorizing a confession of judgment on the instrument if it is not paid when due; or

(e) a term purporting to waive the benefit of any law intended for the advantage or protection of any obligor; or

(f) a term in a draft providing that the payee by indorsing or cashing it acknowledges full satisfaction of an obligation of the drawer; or

(g) A statement in a draft drawn in a set of parts (Section 3-801) to the effect that the order is effective only if no other part has been honored.

(2) Nothing in this section shall validate any term which is otherwise illegal.

As amended in 1962.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 5 and 6, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Reworded; new provisions; Subsection (4) of original Section 5 omitted. Subsection (4) of the original Section 6 is now covered by Section 3-113, and Subsection (5) by Section 3-107.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter: The changes are intended to remove uncertainties arising under the original sections. Subsection (4) of the original Section 5 is omitted because it has been important only in connection with bonds and other investment securities now covered by Article 8 of this Act. An option to require something to be done in lieu of payment of money is uncommon and not desirable in commercial paper.

This section permits the insertion of certain obligations and powers in addition to the simple promise or order to pay money. Under Section 3-104, dealing with form of negotiable instruments, the instrument may not contain any other promise, order, obligation or power.

1. Paragraph (b) of subsection (1) permits a clause authorizing the sale or disposition of collateral given to secure obligations either on the instrument or otherwise of an obligor on the instrument upon any default in those obligations, including a default in payment of an installment or of interest. It is not limited, as was the original Section 5(1), to default at maturity. The reference to obligations of an obligor on the instrument is intended to recognize so-called cross collateral provisions that appear in collateral note forms used by banks and others throughout the United States and to permit the use of these provisions without destroying negotiability. Paragraph (c) is new. It permits a clause, apparently not within the original section, containing a promise or power to maintain or protect collateral or to give additional collateral, whether on demand or on some other condition. Such terms frequently are accompanied by a provision for acceleration if the collateral is not given, which is now permitted by the section on what constitutes a definite time. Section 1-208 should be consulted as to the construction to be given such clauses under this Act.

2. As under the original Section 5(2), paragraph (d) is intended to mean that a confession of judgment may be authorized only if the instrument is not paid when due, and that otherwise negotiability is affected. The use of judgment notes is confined to two or three states, and in others the judgment clauses are made illegal or ineffective either by special statutes or by decision. Subsection (2) is intended to say that any such local rule remains unchanged, and that the clause itself may be invalid, although the negotiability of the instrument is not affected.

3. As in the case of the original Section 5(3), paragraph (e) applies not only to any waiver of the benefits of this Article, such as presentment, notice of dishonor or protest, but also to a waiver of the benefits of any other law such as a homestead exemption. Again subsection (2) is intended to mean that any rule which invalidates the waiver itself is not changed, and that while negotiability is not affected, a waiver of the statute of limitations contained in an instrument may be invalid.

This paragraph is to be read together with subsection (1) of Section 3-104 on form of negotiable instruments. A waiver cannot make the instrument negotiable within this Article where it does not comply with the requirements of that section.

4. Paragraph (f) is new. The effect of a clause of acknowledgment of satisfaction upon negotiability has been uncertain under the original section.

5. Paragraph (g) is intended to insure that a condition arising from the statement in question will not adversely affect negotiability.

An instrument otherwise negotiable is within this Article even though it is under a seal.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 6(4), Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Reworded.

Purposes of Changes: The revised wording is intended to change the result of decisions holding that while a seal does not affect the negotiability of an instrument it may affect it in other respects falling within the statute, such as the conclusiveness of consideration. The section is intended to place sealed instruments on the same footing as any other instruments so far as all sections of this Article are concerned. It does not affect any other statutes or rules of law relating to sealed instruments except insofar as, in the case of negotiable instruments, they are inconsistent with this Article. Thus a sealed instrument which is within this Article may still be subject to a longer statute of limitations than negotiable instruments not under seal, or to such local rules of procedure as that it may be enforced by an action of special assumpsit.

§ 3-114. Date, Antedating, Postdating.

(1) The negotiability of an instrument is not affected by the fact that it is undated, antedated or postdated.

(2) Where an instrument is antedated or postdated the time when it is payable is determined by the stated date if the instrument is payable on demand or at a fixed period after date.

(3) Where the instrument or any signature thereon is dated, the date is presumed to be correct.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 6(1), 11, 12 and 17(3), Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Reworded; new provision; parts of original section 12 omitted.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter: The rewording is intended to remove uncertainties arising under the original sections.

1. The reference to an "illegal or fraudulent purpose" in the original Section 12 is omitted as inaccurate and misleading. Any fraud or illegality connected with the date of an instrument does not affect its negotiability, but is merely a defense under Sections 3-306 and 3-307 to the same extent as any other fraud or illegality. The provision in the same section as to acquisition of title upon delivery is also omitted, as obvious and unnecessary.

2. Subsection (2) is new. An undated instrument payable "thirty days after date" is uncertain as to time of payment, and does not fall within Section 3-109(1)(a) on definite time. It is, however, an incomplete instrument, and the date may be inserted as provided in the section dealing with such instruments (Section 3-115). When the instrument has been dated, this subsection follows decisions under the original Act in providing that the time of payment is to be determined from the stated date, even though the instrument is antedated or postdated. An antedated instrument may thus be due before it is issued. As to the liability of indorsers in such a case, see Section 3-501(4), on indorsement after maturity.

3. Subsection (3) extends the original Section 11 to any signature on an instrument. As to the meaning of "presumed," see Section 1-201.

§ 3-115. Incomplete Instruments.

(1) When a paper whose contents at the time of signing show that it is intended to become an instrument is signed while still incomplete in any necessary respect it cannot be enforced until completed, but when it is completed in accordance with authority given it is effective as completed.

(2) If the completion is unauthorized the rules as to material alteration apply (Section 3-407), even though the paper was not delivered by the maker or drawer; but the burden of establishing that any completion is unauthorized is on the party so asserting.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 13, 14 and 15, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Condensed and reworded; original Section 13 and parts of Section 14 omitted; rule of Section 15 reversed.

Purposes of Changes:

1. The original sections were lengthy and confusing. Section 13 is eliminated because it has suggested some uncertain distinction between undated instruments and those incomplete in other respects, and has carried the inference that only a holder may fill in the date. An instrument lacking in an essential date is merely one kind of incomplete instrument, to be treated like any other. The third sentence of Section 14, providing that the instrument must be filled up strictly in accordance with the authority given and within a reasonable time, is eliminated as entirely superfluous, since any authority must always be exercised in accordance with its limitations, and expires within a reasonable time unless a time limit is fixed.

2. The language "signed while still incomplete in any necessary respect" in subsection (1) is substituted for "wanting in any material particular" in the original Section 14, in order to make it entirely clear that a complete writing which lacks an essential element of an instrument and contains no blanks or spaces or anything else to indicate that what is missing is to be supplied, does not fall within the section. "Necessary" means necessary to a complete instrument. It will always include the promise or order, the designation of the payee, and the amount payable. It may include the time of payment where a blank is left for that time to be filled in; but where it is clear that no time is intended to be stated the instrument is complete, and is payable on demand under Section 3-108. It does not include the date of issue, which under Section 3-114(1) is not essential, unless the instrument is made payable at a fixed period after that date.

3. This section omits the second sentence of the original Section 14, providing that "a signature on a blank paper delivered by the person making the signature in order that the paper may be converted into a negotiable instrument operates as a prima facie authority to fill it up as such for any amount." This had utility only in connection with the ancient practice of signing blank paper to be filled in later as an acceptance, at a time when communications were slow and difficult. The practice has been obsolete for nearly a century. It affords obvious opportunity for fraud, and should not be encouraged by express sanction in the statute. The omission is not intended, however, to mean that any person may not be authorized to write in an instrument over a signature either before or after delivery.

4. Subsection (2) states the rule generally recognized by the courts, that any unauthorized completion is an alteration of the instrument which stands on the same footing as any other alteration. Reference is therefore made to Section 3-407 where the effect of alteration is stated. Subsection (3) of that section provides that a subsequent holder in due course may in all cases enforce the instrument as completed, and replaces the final sentence of the original Section 14.

5. The language "even though the paper was not delivered" reverses the rule of the original Section 15, which provides that where an incomplete instrument has not been delivered it will not, if completed, be a valid contract in the hands of any holder as against any person whose signature was placed thereon before delivery. Since under this Article (Sections 3-305 and 3-407) neither non-delivery nor unauthorized completion is a defense against a holder in due course, it has always been illogical that the two together should invalidate the instrument in his hands. A holder in due course sees and takes the same paper, whether it was complete when stolen or completed afterward by the thief, and in each case he relies in good faith on the maker's signature. The loss should fall upon the party whose conduct in signing blank paper has made the fraud possible, rather than upon the innocent purchaser. The result is consistent with the theory of decisions holding the drawer of a check stolen and afterwards filled in to be estopped from setting up the non-delivery against an innocent party.

A similar provision protecting a depositary bank which pays an item in good faith is contained in Section 4-401. The policy of that Section should apply in favor of drawees other than banks.

6. The language on burden of establishing unauthorized completion is substituted for the "prima facie authority" of the original section 14. It follows the generally accepted rule that the full burden of proof by a preponderance of the evidence is upon the party attacking the completed instrument. "Burden of establishing" is defined in Section 1-201.

An instrument payable to the order of two or more persons

(a) if in the alternative is payable to any one of them and may be negotiated, discharged or enforced by any of them who has possession of it;

(b) if not in the alternative is payable to all of them and may be negotiated, discharged or enforced only by all of them.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 41, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Revised in wording and substance.

Purposes of Changes: The changes are intended to make clear the distinction between an instrument payable to "A or B" and one payable to "A and B." The first names either A or B as payee, so that either of them who is in possession becomes a holder as that term is defined in Section 1-201 and may negotiate, enforce or discharge the instrument. The second is payable only to A and B together, and as provided in the original section both must indorse in order to negotiate the instrument, although one may of course be authorized to sign for the other. Likewise both must join in any action to enforce the instrument, and the rights of one are not discharged without his consent by the act of the other.

If the instrument is payable to "A and/or B," it is payable in the alternative to A, or to B, or to A and B together, and it may be negotiated, enforced or discharged accordingly.

An instrument made payable to a named person with the addition of words describing him

(a) as agent or officer of a specified person is payable to his principal but the agent or officer may act as if he were the holder;

(b) as any other fiduciary for a specified person or purpose is payable to the payee and may be negotiated, discharged or enforced by him;

(c) in any other manner is payable to the payee unconditionally and the additional words are without effect on subsequent parties.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 42, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Revised and extended.

Purposes of Changes:

1. Subsection (a) extends the policy of the original Section 42, which covered only cashiers and fiscal officers of banks and corporations, to any case where a payee is named with words describing him as agent or officer of another named person. The intent is to include all such descriptions as "John Doe, Treasurer of Town of Framingham," "John Doe, President Home Telephone Co.," "John Doe, Secretary of City Club," or "John Doe, agent of Richard Roe." In all such cases it is commercial understanding that the description is not added for mere identification but for the purpose of making the instrument payable to the principal, and that the agent or officer is named as payee only for convenience in enabling him to cash the check.

2. Subsection (b) covers such descriptions as "John Doe, Trustee of Smithers Trust," "John Doe, Administrator of the Estate of Richard Roe," or "John Doe, Executor under Will of Richard Roe." In such cases the instrument is payable to the individual named, and he may negotiate it, enforce it or discharge it, but he remains subject to any liability for breach of his obligation as a fiduciary. Any subsequent holder of the instrument is put on notice of the fiduciary position, and under the section on notice to purchaser (Section 3-304) is not a holder in due course if he takes with notice that John Doe has negotiated the instrument in payment of or as security for his own debt or in any transaction for his own benefit, or otherwise in breach of duty.

3. Any other words of description, such as "John Doe, 1121 Main Street," "John Doe, Attorney," or "Jane Doe, unremarried widow," are to be treated as mere identification, and not in any respect as a condition of payment. The same is true of any description of the payee as "Treasurer," "President," "Agent," "Trustee," "Executor," or "Administrator," which does not name the principal or beneficiary. In all such cases the person named may negotiate, enforce or discharge the instrument if he is otherwise identified, even though he does not meet the description. Any subsequent party dealing with the instrument may disregard the description and treat the paper as payable unconditionally to the individual, and is fully protected in the absence of independent notice of other facts sufficient to affect his position.

§ 3-118. Ambiguous Terms and Rules of Construction.

The following rules apply to every instrument:

(a) Where there is doubt whether the instrument is a draft or a note the holder may treat it as either. A draft drawn on the drawer is effective as a note.

(b) Handwritten terms control typewritten and printed terms, and typewritten control printed.

(c) Words control figures except that if the words are ambiguous figures control.

(d) Unless otherwise specified a provision for interest means interest at the judgment rate at the place of payment from the date of the instrument, or if it is undated from the date of issue.

(e) Unless the instrument otherwise specifies two or more persons who sign as maker, acceptor or drawer or indorser and as a part of the same transaction are jointly and severally liable even though the instrument contains such words as "I promise to pay."

(f) Unless otherwise specified consent to extension authorizes a single extension for not longer than the original period. A consent to extension, expressed in the instrument, is binding on secondary parties and accommodation makers. A holder may not exercise his option to extend an instrument over the objection of a maker or acceptor or other party who in accordance with Section 3-604 tenders full payment when the instrument is due.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 17 and 68, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Reworded; new provisions; original subsections (3) and (6) of Section 17 omitted. The original Section 17(3) is covered, so far as the question can arise, by Sections 3-109(1)(a) and 3-114 of this Article. The original Section 17(6) is now covered by Section 3-402.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter:

1. The purpose of this section is to protect holders and to encourage the free circulation of negotiable paper by stating rules of law which will preclude a resort to parol evidence for any purpose except reformation of the instrument. Except as to such reformation, these rules cannot be varied by any proof that any party intended the contrary.

2. Subsection (a): The language of the original Section 17(5) is changed to make it clear that the provision is not limited to ambiguities of phrasing, but extends to any case where the form of the instrument leaves its character as a draft or a note in doubt.

3. Subsection (b): The original Section 17(4) is revised to cover typewriting because of its frequent use in instruments, particularly in promissory notes.

4. Subsection (c): The rewording of the original Section 17(1) is intended to make it clear that figures control only where the words are ambiguous and the figures are not.

5. Subsection (d): The revision of the original Section 17(2) is intended to make it clear that where the instrument provides for payment "with interest" without specifying the rate, the judgment rate of interest of the place of payment is to be taken as intended.

6. Subsection (e): This subsection combines and revises the original Section 17(7) and the last sentence of the original Section 68. The rule applies to any two or more persons who sign in the same capacity, whether as makers, drawers, acceptors or indorsers. It applies only where such parties sign as a part of the same transaction; successive indorsers are, of course, liable severally but not jointly.

7. Subsection (f): This provision is new. It has reference to such clauses as "The makers and indorsers of this note consent that it may be extended without notice to them." Such terms usually are inserted to obtain the consent of the indorsers and any accommodation maker to extension which might otherwise discharge them under Section 3-606 dealing with impairment of recourse or collateral. An extension in accord with these terms binds secondary parties. The holder may not force an extension on a maker or acceptor who makes due tender; the holder is not free to refuse payment and keep interest running on a good note or other instrument by extending it over the objection of a maker or acceptor or other party who in accordance with Section 3-604 tenders full payment when the instrument is due. Where consent to extension has been given, the subsection provides that unless otherwise specified the consent is to be construed as authorizing only one extension for not longer than the original period of the note.

§ 3-119. Other Writings Affecting Instrument.

(1) As between the obligor and his immediate obligee or any transferee the terms of an instrument may be modified or affected by any other written agreement executed as a part of the same transaction, except that a holder in due course is not affected by any limitation of his rights arising out of the separate written agreement if he had no notice of the limitation when he took the instrument.

(2) A separate agreement does not affect the negotiability of an instrument.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes: This section is new. It is intended to resolve conflicts as to the effect of a separate writing upon a negotiable instrument.

1. This Article does not attempt to state general rules as to when an instrument may be varied or affected by parol evidence, except to the extent indicated by the comment to the preceding section. This section is limited to the effect of a separate written agreement executed as a part of the same transaction. The separate writing is most commonly an agreement creating or providing for a security interest such as a mortgage, chattel mortgage, conditional sale or pledge. It may, however, be any type of contract, including an agreement that upon certain conditions the instrument shall be discharged or is not to be paid, or even an agreement that it is a sham and not to be enforced at all. Nothing in this section is intended to validate any such agreement which is fraudulent or void as against public policy, as in the case of a note given to deceive a bank examiner.

2. Other parties, such as an accommodation indorser, are not affected by the separate writing unless they were also parties to it as a part of the transaction by which they became bound on the instrument.

3. The section applies to negotiable instruments the ordinary rule that writings executed as a part of the same transaction are to be read together as a single agreement. As between the immediate parties a negotiable instrument is merely a contract, and is no exception to the principle that the courts will look to the entire contract in writing. Accordingly a note may be affected by an acceleration clause, a clause providing for discharge under certain conditions, or any other relevant term in the separate writing. "May be modified or affected" does not mean that the separate agreement must necessarily be given effect. There is still room for construction of the writing as not intended to affect the instrument at all, or as intended to affect it only for a limited purpose such as foreclosure or other realization of collateral. If there is outright contradiction between the two, as where the note is for $1,000 but the accompanying mortgage recites that it is for $2,000, the note may be held to stand on its own feet and not to be affected by the contradiction.

4. Under this Article a purchaser of the instrument may become a holder in due course although he takes it with knowledge that it was accompanied by a separate agreement, if he has no notice of any defense or claim arising from the terms of the agreement. If any limitation in the separate writing in itself amounts to a defense or claim, as in the case of an agreement that the note is a sham and cannot be enforced, a purchaser with notice of it cannot be a holder in due course. The section also covers limitations which do not in themselves give notice of any present defense or claim, such as conditions providing that under certain conditions the note shall be extended for one year. A purchaser with notice of such limitations may be a holder in due course, but he takes the instrument subject to the limitation. If he is without such notice, he is not affected by such a limiting clause in the separate writing.

5. Subsection (2) rejects decisions which have carried the rule that contemporaneous writings must be read together to the length of holding that a clause in a mortgage affecting a note destroyed the negotiability of the note. The negotiability of an instrument is always to be determined by what appears on the face of the instrument alone, and if it is negotiable in itself a purchaser without notice of a separate writing is in no way affected by it. If the instrument itself states that it is subject to or governed by any other agreement, it is not negotiable under this Article; but if it merely refers to a separate agreement or states that it arises out of such an agreement, it is negotiable.

§ 3-120. Instruments "Payable Through" Bank.

An instrument which states that it is "payable through" a bank or the like designates that bank as a collecting bank to make presentment but does not of itself authorize the bank to pay the instrument.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes: Insurance, dividend or payroll checks, and occasionally other types of instruments, are sometimes made payable "through" a particular bank. This section states the commercial understanding as to the effect of such language. The bank is not named as drawee, and it is not ordered or even authorized to pay the instrument out of the drawer's account or any other funds of the drawer in its hands. Neither is it required to take the instrument for collection in the absence of special agreement to that effect. It is merely designated as a collecting bank through which presentment is properly made to the drawee.

Note: If this Act is introduced in the Congress of the United States this section should be omitted.
(States to select either alternative)

Alternative A—

A note or acceptance which states that it is payable at a bank is the equivalent of a draft drawn on the bank payable when it falls due out of any funds of the maker or acceptor in current account or otherwise available for such payment.

Alternative B—

A note or acceptance which states that it is payable at a bank is not of itself an order or authorization to the bank to pay it.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 87, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.
Changes: Alternative sections offered.
Purposes of Changes: The original section 87 has been amended so extensively that no uniformity has been achieved; and in many parts of the country it has been consistently disregarded in practice.

The original section represents the commercial and banking practice of New York and the surrounding states, according to which a note or acceptance made payable at a bank is treated as the equivalent of a draft drawn on the bank. The bank is not only authorized but ordered to make payment out of the account of the maker or acceptor when the instrument falls due, and it is expected to do so without consulting him. In the western and southern states a contrary understanding prevails. The note or acceptance payable at a bank is treated as merely designating a place of payment, as if the instrument were made payable at the office of an attorney. The bank's only function is to notify the maker or acceptor that the instrument has been presented and to ask for his instructions; and in the absence of specific instructions it is not regarded as required or even authorized to pay. Notwithstanding the original section western and southern banks have consistently followed the practice of asking for instructions and treating a direction not to pay as a revocation, equivalent to a direction to stop payment.

Both practices are well established, and the division is along geographical lines. A change in either practice might lead to undesirable consequences for holders, banks or depositors. The instruments involved are chiefly promissory notes, which infrequently cross state lines. There is no great need for uniformity. This section therefore offers alternative provisions, the first of which states the New York commercial understanding, and the second that of the south and west.

§ 3-122. Accrual of Cause of Action.

(1) A cause of action against a maker or an acceptor accrues

(a) in the case of a time instrument on the day after maturity;

(b) in the case of a demand instrument upon its date or, if no date is stated, on the date of issue.

(2) A cause of action against the obligor of a demand or time certificate of deposit accrues upon demand, but demand on a time certificate may not be made until on or after the date of maturity.

(3) A cause of action against a drawer of a draft or an indorser of any instrument accrues upon demand following dishonor of the instrument. Notice of dishonor is a demand.

(4) Unless an instrument provides otherwise, interest runs at the rate provided by law for a judgment

(a) in the case of a maker, acceptor or other primary obligor of a demand instrument, from the date of demand;

(b) in all other cases from the date of accrual of the cause of action.

As amended in 1962.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purpose:

1. This section is new. It follows the generally accepted rule that action may be brought on a demand note immediately upon issue, without demand, since presentment is not required to charge the maker under the original Act or under this Article. An exception is made in the case of certificates of deposit for the reason that banking custom and expectation is that demand will be made before any liability is incurred by the bank, and the additional reason that such certificates are issued with the understanding that they will be held for a considerable length of time, which in many instances exceeds the period of the statute of limitations. As to makers and acceptors of time instruments generally, the cause of action accrues on the day after maturity. As to drawers of drafts (including checks) and all indorsers, the cause of action accrues, in conformity with their underlying contract on the instrument (Sections 3-413 and 3-414), only upon demand made, typically in the form of a notice of dishonor, after the instrument has been presented to and dishonored by the person designated on the instrument to pay it.

2. Closely related to the accrual of a cause of action is the question of when interest begins to run where the instrument is blank on the point. A term in the instrument providing for interest controls. (See Section 3-118(d) for the construction of a term which provides for interest but does not specify the rate or the time from which it runs.) In the absence of such a term and except in the case of a maker, acceptor or other primary obligor of a demand instrument subsection (4) states the rule that interest at the judgment rate runs from the date the cause of action accrues. In the case of a primary obligor of a demand instrument, interest runs from the date of demand although the cause of action (subsection (1)(a)) accrues on the stated date of the instrument or on issue. There has been a conflict in the decisions as to when "legal" interest begins to run on a demand note. Some courts have taken the view that, since the note is due when issued without demand, it should follow that interest runs from the same date. On the other hand it is clear that there is no default until after demand by the holder and thus no reason for the imposition of the penalty on the maker. Subsection (4), therefore, adopts the position of the majority of the courts that on a demand note interest runs only from demand. This same rule is applied to acceptors and other primary obligors on a demand instrument.

PART 2
TRANSFER AND NEGOTIATION

§ 3-201. Transfer: Right to Indorsement.

(1) Transfer of an instrument vests in the transferee such rights as the transferor has therein, except that a transferee who has himself been a party to any fraud or illegality affecting the instrument or who as a prior holder had notice of a defense or claim against it cannot improve his position by taking from a later holder in due course.

(2) A transfer of a security interest in an instrument vests the foregoing rights in the transferee to the extent of the interest transferred.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed any transfer for value of an instrument not then payable to bearer gives the transferee the specifically enforceable right to have the unqualified indorsement of the transferor. Negotiation takes effect only when the indorsement is made and until that time there is no presumption that the transferee is the owner.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 27, 49 and 58, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded; new provisions.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter: To make it clear that:

1. The section applies to any transfer, whether by a holder or not. Any person who transfers an instrument transfers whatever rights he has in it. The transferee acquires those rights even though they do not amount to "title."

2. The transfer of rights is not limited to transfers for value. An instrument may be transferred as a gift, and the donee acquires whatever rights the donor had.

3. A holder in due course may transfer his rights as such. The "shelter" provision of the last sentence of the original Section 58 is merely one illustration of the rule that anyone may transfer what he has. Its policy is to assure the holder in due course a free market for the paper, and that policy is continued in this section. The provision is not intended and should not be used to permit any holder who has himself been a party to any fraud or illegality affecting the instrument, or who has received notice of any defense or claim against it, to wash the paper clean by passing it into the hands of a holder in due course and then repurchasing it. The operation of the provision is illustrated by the following examples:

(a) A induces M by fraud to make an instrument payable to A, A negotiates it to B, who takes as a holder in due course. After the instrument is overdue B gives it to C, who has notice of the fraud. C succeeds to B's rights as a holder in due course, cutting off the defense.

(b) A induces M by fraud to make an instrument payable to A, A negotiates it to B, who takes as a holder in due course. A then repurchases the instrument from B. A does not succeed to B's rights as a holder in due course, and remains subject to the defense of fraud.

(c) A induces M by fraud to make an instrument payable to A, A negotiates it to B, who takes with notice of the fraud. B negotiates it to C, a holder in due course, and then repurchases the instrument from C. B does not succeed to C's rights as a holder in due course, and remains subject to the defense of fraud.

(d) The same facts as (c), except that B had no notice of the fraud when he first acquired the instrument, but learned of it while he was a holder and with such knowledge negotiated to C. B does not succeed to C's rights as a holder in due course, and his position is not improved by the negotiation and repurchase.

4. The rights of a transferee with respect to collateral for the instrument are determined by Article 9 (Secured Transactions).

5. Subsection (2) restates original Section 27 and is intended to make it clear that a transfer of a limited interest in the instrument passes the rights of the transferor to the extent of the interest given. Thus a transferee for security acquires all such rights subject of course to the provisions of Article 9 (Secured Transactions).

6. Subsection (3) applies only to the transfer for value of an instrument payable to order or specially indorsed. It has no application to a gift, or to an instrument payable or indorsed to bearer or indorsed in blank. The transferee acquires, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the right to have the indorsement of the transferor. This right is now made enforceable by an action for specific performance. Unless otherwise agreed, it is a right to the general indorsement of the transferor with full liability as indorser, rather than to an indorsement without recourse. The question commonly arises where the purchaser has paid in advance and the indorsement is omitted fraudulently or through oversight; a transferor who is willing to indorse only without recourse or unwilling to indorse at all should make his intentions clear. The agreement for the transferee to take less than an unqualified indorsement need not be an express one, and the understanding may be implied from conduct, from past practice, or from the circumstances of the transaction.

7. Subsection (3) follows the second sentence of the original Section 49 in providing that there is no effective negotiation until the indorsement is made. Until that time the purchaser does not become a holder, and if he receives earlier notice of defense against or claim to the instrument he does not qualify as a holder in due course under Section 3-302(1)(c).

8. The final clause of subsection (3), which is new, is intended to make it clear that the transferee without indorsement of an order instrument is not a holder and so is not aided by the presumption that he is entitled to recover on the instrument provided in Section 3-307(2). The terms of the obligation do not run to him, and he must account for his possession of the unindorsed paper by proving the transaction through which he acquired it. Proof of a transfer to him by a holder is proof that he has acquired the rights of a holder and that he is entitled to the presumption.

§ 3-202. Negotiation.

(1) Negotiation is the transfer of an instrument in such form that the transferee becomes a holder. If the instrument is payable to order it is negotiated by delivery with any necessary indorsement; if payable to bearer it is negotiated by delivery.

(2) An indorsement must be written by or on behalf of the holder and on the instrument or on a paper so firmly affixed thereto as to become a part thereof.

(3) An indorsement is effective for negotiation only when it conveys the entire instrument or any unpaid residue. If it purports to be of less it operates only as a partial assignment.

(4) Words of assignment, condition, waiver, guaranty, limitation or disclaimer of liability and the like accompanying an indorsement do not affect its character as an indorsement.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 30, 31 and 32, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded; new provisions.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter: To make it clear that:

1. Negotiation is merely a special form of transfer, the importance of which lies entirely in the fact that it makes the transferee a holder as defined in Section 1-201. Any negotiation carries a transfer of rights as provided in the section on transfer (subsections (1) and (2) of Section 3-201).

2. Any instrument which has been specially indorsed can be negotiated only with the indorsement of the special indorsee as provided in Section 3-204 on special indorsement. An instrument indorsed in blank may be negotiated by delivery alone, provided that it bears the indorsement of all prior special indorsees.

3. Subsection (2) follows decisions holding that a purported indorsement on a mortgage or other separate paper pinned or clipped to an instrument is not sufficient for negotiation. The indorsement must be on the instrument itself or on a paper intended for the purpose which is so firmly affixed to the instrument as to become an extension or part of it. Such a paper is called an allonge.

4. The cause of action on an instrument cannot be split. Any indorsement which purports to convey to any party less than the entire amount of the instrument is not effective for negotiation. This is true of either "Pay A one-half," or "Pay A two-thirds and B one-third," and neither A nor B becomes a holder. On the other hand an indorsement reading merely "Pay A and B" is effective, since it transfers the entire cause of action to A and B as tenants in common.

The partial indorsement does, however, operate as a partial assignment of the cause of action. The provision makes no attempt to state the legal effect of such an assignment, which is left to the local law. In a jurisdiction in which a partial assignee has any rights, either at law or in equity, the partial indorsee has such rights; and in any jurisdiction where a partial assignee has no rights the partial indorsee has none.

5. Subsection (4) is intended to reject decisions holding that the addition of such words as "I hereby assign all my right, title and interest in the within note" prevents the signature from operating as an indorsement. Such words usually are added by laymen out of an excess of caution and a desire to indicate formally that the instrument is conveyed, rather than with any intent to limit the effect of the signature.

6. Subsection (4) is also intended to reject decisions which have held that the addition of "I guarantee payment" indicates an intention not to indorse but merely to guarantee. Any signature with such added words is an indorsement, and if it is made by a holder is effective for negotiation; but the liability of the indorser may be affected by the words of guarantee as provided in the section on the contract of a guarantor. § 3-203. Wrong or Misspelled Name.

Where an instrument is made payable to a person under a misspelled name or one other than his own he may indorse in that name or his own or both; but signature in both names may be required by a person paying or giving value for the instrument.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 43, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.
Changes: Reworded.
Purposes of Changes: To make it clear that:

1. The party whose name is wrongly designated or misspelled may make an indorsement effective for negotiation by signing in his true name only. This is not commercially satisfactory, since any subsequent purchaser may be left in doubt as to the state of the title; but whether it is done intentionally or through oversight, the party transfers his rights and is liable on his indorsement, and there is a negotiation if identity exists.

2. He may make an effective indorsement in the wrongly designated or misspelled name only. This again is not commercially satisfactory, since his liability as an indorser may require proof of identity.

3. He may indorse in both names. This is the proper and desirable form of indorsement, and any person called upon to pay an instrument or under contract to purchase it may protect his interest by demanding indorsement in both names, and is not in default if such demand is refused.

§ 3-204. Special Indorsement; Blank Indorsement.

(1) A special indorsement specifies the person to whom or to whose order it makes the instrument payable. Any instrument specially indorsed becomes payable to the order of the special indorsee and may be further negotiated only by his indorsement.

(2) An indorsement in blank specifies no particular indorsee and may consist of a mere signature. An instrument payable to order and indorsed in blank becomes payable to bearer and may be negotiated by delivery alone until specially indorsed.

(3) The holder may convert a blank indorsement into a special indorsement by writing over the signature of the indorser in blank any contract consistent with the character of the indorsement.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 9(5), 33, 34, 35, 36, and 40, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.
Changes: Combined and reworded; rule of Section 40 reversed.
Purposes of Changes:

The last sentence of subsection (1) reverses the rule of the original Section 40, under which an instrument drawn payable to bearer and specially indorsed could be further negotiated by delivery alone. The principle here adopted is that the special indorser, as the owner even of a bearer instrument, has the right to direct the payment and to require the indorsement of his indorsee as evidence of the satisfaction of his own obligation. The special indorsee may of course make it payable to bearer again by himself indorsing in blank.

§ 3-205. Restrictive Indorsements.

An indorsement is restrictive which either

(a) is conditional; or

(b) purports to prohibit further transfer of the instrument; or

(c) includes the words "for collection", "for deposit", "pay any bank", or like terms signifying a purpose of deposit or collection; or

(d) otherwise states that it is for the benefit or use of the indorser or of another person.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 36 and 39, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded; new provisions.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter:

1. This section is intended to provide a definition of restrictive indorsements which will include the varieties of indorsement described in original Sections 36 and 39. The separate mention of conditional indorsements, those prohibiting transfer, indorsements in the bank deposit or collection process, and other indorsements to a fiduciary, permits separate treatment in subsequent sections where policy so requires.

2. This is part of a series of changes of the prior uniform statutory provisions effected by Sections 3-102, 3-205, 3-206, 3-304, 3-419, 3-603, and in Article 4, Sections 4-203 and 4-205. The purpose of the changes is generally to require a taker or payor under restrictive indorsement to apply or pay value given consistently with the indorsement, but to provide certain exceptions applying to banks in the collection process (other than depositary banks), and to some other takers and payors.

§ 3-206. Effect of Restrictive Indorsement.

(1) No restrictive indorsement prevents further transfer or negotiation of the instrument.

(2) An intermediary bank, or a payor bank which is not the depositary bank, is neither given notice nor otherwise affected by a restrictive indorsement of any person except the bank's immediate transferor or the person presenting for payment.

(3) Except for an intermediary bank, any transferee under an indorsement which is conditional or includes the words "for collection", "for deposit", "pay any bank", or like terms (subparagraphs (a) and (c) of Section 3-205) must pay or apply any value given by him for or on the security of the instrument consistently with the indorsement and to the extent that he does so he becomes a holder for value. In addition such transferee is a holder in due course if he otherwise complies with the requirements of Section 3-302 on what constitutes a holder in due course.

(4) The first taker under an indorsement for the benefit of the indorser or another person (subparagraph (d) of Section 3-205) must pay or apply any value given by him for or on the security of the instrument consistently with the indorsement and to the extent that he does so he becomes a holder for value. In addition such taker is a holder in due course if he otherwise complies with the requirements of Section 3-302 on what constitutes a holder in due course. A later holder for value is neither given notice nor otherwise affected by such restrictive indorsement unless he has knowledge that a fiduciary or other person has negotiated the instrument in any transaction for his own benefit or otherwise in breach of duty (subsection (2) of Section 3-304).

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 36, 37, 39 and 47, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Completely revised.

Purposes of Changes:

1. Subsections (1) and (2) apply to all four classes of restrictive indorsements defined in Section 3-205. Conditional indorsements and indorsements for deposit or collection, defined in paragraphs (a) and (c) of Section 3-205, are also subject to subsection (3); and trust indorsements as defined in paragraph (d) of Section 3-205 are subject to subsection (4). This section negates the implication which has sometimes been found in the original Sections 37 and 47, that under a restrictive indorsement neither the indorsee nor any subsequent taker from him could become a holder in due course. By omitting the original Section 47, this Article also avoids any implication that a discharge is effective against a holder in due course. See Section 3-602.

2. Under subsection (1) an indorsement reading "Pay A only," or any other indorsement purporting to prohibit further transfer, is without effect for that purpose. Such indorsements have rarely appeared in reported American cases. Ordinarily further negotiation will be contemplated by the indorser, if only for bank collection. The indorsee becomes a holder, and the indorsement does not of itself give notice to subsequent parties of any defense or claim of the indorser. Hence this section gives such an indorsement the same effect as an unrestricted indorsement.

3. Subsection (2) permits an intermediary bank (Sections 3-102(3) and 4-105) or a payor bank which is not a depositary bank (Sections 3-102(3) and 4-105) to disregard any restrictive indorsement except that of the bank's immediate transferor. Such banks ordinarily handle instruments, especially checks, in bulk and have no practicable opportunity to consider the effect of restrictive indorsements. Subsection (2) does not affect the rights of the restrictive indorser against parties outside the bank collection process or against the first bank in the collection process; such rights are governed by subsections (3) and (4) and Section 3-603.

4. Conditional indorsements are treated by this section like indorsements for deposit or collection. Under subsection (3) any transferee under such an indorsement except an intermediary bank becomes a holder for value to the extent that he acts consistently with the indorsement in paying or applying any value given by him for or on the security of the instrument. Contrary to the original Section 39, subsection (3) permits a transferee under a conditional indorsement to become a holder in due course free of the conditional indorser's claim.

5. Of the indorsements covered by this section those "for collection", "for deposit" and "pay any bank" are overwhelmingly the most frequent. Indorsements "for collection" or "for deposit" may be either special or blank; indorsements "pay any bank" are governed by Section 4-201(2). Instruments so indorsed are almost invariably destined to be lodged in a bank for collection. Subsection (3) requires any transferee other than an intermediary bank to act consistently with the purpose of collection, and Section 3-603 lays down a similar rule for payors not covered by subsection (2).

6. Subsection (4), applying to trust indorsements other than those for deposit or collection (paragraph (d) of Section 3-205) is similar to subsection (3); but in subsection (4) the duty to act consistently with the indorsement is limited to the first taker under it. If an instrument is indorsed "Pay T in trust for B" or "Pay T for B" or "Pay T for account of B" or "Pay T as agent for B," whether B is the indorser or a third person, T is of course subject to liability for any breach of his obligation as fiduciary. But trustees commonly and legitimately sell trust assets in transactions entirely outside the bank collection process; the trustee therefore has power to negotiate the instrument and make his transferee a holder in due course. Whether transferees from T have notice of a breach of trust such as to deny them the status of holders in due course is governed by the section on notice to purchasers (Section 3-304); the trust indorsement does not of itself give such notice. Payors are immunized either by subsection (2) of this section or by Section 3-603: payment to the trustee or to a purchaser from the trustee is "consistent with the terms" of the trust indorsement under Section 3-603(1)(b).

7. Several sections of Article 3 and Article 4 are explicitly made subject to the rules stated in this section. See Sections 3-306, 3-419, 4-203 and 4-205.

§ 3-207. Negotiation Effective Although It May Be Rescinded.

(1) Negotiation is effective to transfer the instrument although the negotiation is

(a) made by an infant, a corporation exceeding its powers, or any other person without capacity; or

(b) obtained by fraud, duress or mistake of any kind; or

(c) part of an illegal transaction; or

(d) made in breach of duty.

(2) Except as against a subsequent holder in due course such negotiation is in an appropriate case subject to rescission, the declaration of a constructive trust or any other remedy permitted by law.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 22, 58 and 59, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Completely revised.

Purposes of Changes: To make it clear that:

1. The original Section 22, which covered only negotiation by an infant or a corporation, is extended by this section to include other negotiations which may be rescinded. The provision applies even though the party's lack of capacity, or the illegality, is of a character which goes to the essence of the transaction and makes it entirely void, and even though the party negotiating has incurred no liability and is entitled to recover the instrument and have his indorsement cancelled.

2. It is inherent in the character of negotiable paper that any person in possession of an instrument which by its terms runs to him is a holder, and that anyone may deal with him as a holder. The principle finds its most extreme application in the well settled rule that a holder in due course may take the paper even from a thief and be protected against the claim of the rightful owner. Where there is actual negotiation, even in an entirely void transaction, it is no less effective. The policy of this provision, as well as of the last sentence of the original Section 59, is that any person to whom an instrument is negotiated is a holder until the instrument has been recovered from his possession; and that any person who negotiates an instrument thereby parts with all his rights in it until such recovery. The remedy of any such claimant is to recover the paper by replevin or otherwise; to impound it or to enjoin its enforcement, collection or negotiation; to recover its proceeds from the holder; or to intervene in any action brought by the holder against the obligor. As provided in the section on the rights of one not a holder in due course (Section 3-306) his claim is not a defense to the obligor unless he himself defends the action.

3. Negotiation under this Article always includes delivery. (Section 3-202, and see Section 1-201(14)). Acquisition of possession by a thief can therefore never be negotiation under this section. But delivery by the thief to another person may be.

4. Nothing in this section is intended to impose any liability on the party negotiating. He may assert any defense available to him under Sections 3-305, 3-306 and 3-307.

5. A holder in due course takes the instrument free from all claims to it on the part of any person (Section 3-305(1)). Against him there can be no rescission or other remedy, even though the prior negotiation may have been fraudulent or illegal in its essence and entirely void. As against any other party the claimant may have any remedy permitted by law. This section is not intended to specify what that remedy may be, or to prevent any court from imposing conditions or limitations such as prompt action or return of the consideration received. All such questions are left to the law of the particular jurisdiction. Subsection (2) of Section 3-207 gives no right where it would not otherwise exist. The section is intended to mean that any remedies afforded by the local law are cut off only by a holder in due course, and that other parties, such as a bona fide purchaser with notice that the instrument is overdue, take it subject to the claim as provided in paragraph (a) of the section on the rights of one not a holder in due course (Section 3-306).

§ 3-208. Reacquisition.

Where an instrument is returned to or reacquired by a prior party he may cancel any indorsement which is not necessary to his title and reissue or further negotiate the instrument, but any intervening party is discharged as against the reacquiring party and subsequent holders not in due course and if his indorsement has been cancelled is discharged as against subsequent holders in due course as well.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 48, 50 and 121, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Parts of original sections combined and rephrased.

Purposes of Changes: No change in the substance of the law is intended. "Returned to or reacquired by" is substituted for "negotiated back to" in the original Section 50 in order to make it clear that the section applies to a return by an indorsee who does not himself indorse. "Discharged" is substituted for the original language to make it clear that the discharge of the intervening party is included within the rule of the section on effect of discharge against a holder in due course (Section 3-602) and is not effective against a subsequent holder in due course who takes without notice of it.

The reacquirer may keep the instrument himself or he may further negotiate it. On further negotiation he may or may not cancel intervening indorsements. In any case intervening indorsers are discharged as to the reacquirer, since if he attempted to enforce it against them they would have an action back against him. Where the reacquirer negotiates without cancelling the intervening indorsements, the section provides that such indorsers are discharged except against subsequent holders in due course. The intervening indorser whose indorsement is stricken is, in conformity with Section 3-605, discharged even as against subsequent holders in due course.

RIGHTS OF A HOLDER

§ 3-301. Rights of a Holder.

The holder of an instrument whether or not he is the owner may transfer or negotiate it and, except as otherwise provided in Section 3-603 on payment or satisfaction, discharge it or enforce payment in his own name.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 51, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Reworded. The provision in the original Section 51 as to discharge by payment is now covered by Section 3-603(1).

Purposes of Changes: The section is revised to state in one provision all the rights of a holder, and to make it clear that every holder has such rights. The only limitations are those found in Section 3-603 on payment or satisfaction. That section provides (with stated exceptions) that payment to a holder discharges the liability of the party paying even though made with knowledge of a claim of another person to the instrument, unless the adverse claimant posts indemnity or procures the issuance of appropriate legal process restraining the payment. Thus payment to a holder in an adverse claim situation would not give discharge if the adverse claimant had followed either of the procedures provided for in the "unless" clause of Section 3-603; nor would a discharge result from payment in two other specific situations described in Section 3-603.

§ 3-302. Holder in Due Course.

(1) A holder in due course is a holder who takes the instrument

(a) for value; and

(b) in good faith; and

(c) without notice that it is overdue or has been dishonored or of any defense against or claim to it on the part of any person.

(2) A payee may be a holder in due course.

(3) A holder does not become a holder in due course of an instrument:

(a) by purchase of it at judicial sale or by taking it under legal process; or

(b) by acquiring it in taking over an estate; or

(c) by purchasing it as part of a bulk transaction not in regular course of business of the transferor.

(4) A purchaser of a limited interest can be a holder in due course only to the extent of the interest purchased.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 52, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Reworded; new provisions.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter: The changes are intended to remove uncertainties arising under the original section.

1. The language "without notice that it is overdue" is substituted for that of the original subsection (2) in order to make it clear that the purchaser of an instrument which is in fact overdue may be a holder in due course if he takes it without notice that it is overdue. Such notice is covered by the section on notice to purchaser (Section 3-304).

2. Subsection (2) is intended to settle the long continued conflict over the status of the payee as a holder in due course. This conflict has turned very largely upon the word "negotiated" in the original Section 52(4), which is now eliminated. The position here taken is that the payee may become a holder in due course to the same extent and under the same circumstances as any other holder. This is true whether he takes the instrument by purchase from a third person or directly from the obligor. All that is necessary is that the payee meet the requirements of this section. In the following cases, among others, the payee is a holder in due course:

a. A remitter, purchasing goods from P, obtains a bank draft payable to P and forwards it to P, who takes it for value, in good faith and without notice as required by this section.

b. The remitter buys the bank draft payable to P, but it is forwarded by the bank directly to P, who takes it in good faith and without notice in payment of the remitter's obligation to him.

c. A and B sign a note as comakers. A induces B to sign by fraud, and without authority from B delivers the note to P, who takes it for value, in good faith and without notice.

d. A defrauds the maker into signing an instrument payable to P. P pays A for it in good faith and without notice, and the maker delivers the instrument directly to P.

e. D draws a check payable to P and gives it to his agent to be delivered to P in payment of D's debt. The agent delivers it to P, who takes it in good faith and without notice in payment of the agent's debt to P. But as to this case see Section 3-304(2), which may apply.

f. D draws a check payable to P but blank as to the amount, and gives it to his agent to be delivered to P. The agent fills in the check with an excessive amount, and P takes it for value, in good faith and without notice.

g. D draws a check blank as to the name of the payee, and gives it to his agent to be filled in with the name of A and delivered to A. The agent fills in the name of P, and P takes the check in good faith, for value and without notice.

3. Subsection (3) is intended to state existing case law. It covers a few situations in which the purchaser takes the instrument under unusual circumstances which indicate that he is merely a successor in interest to the prior holder and can acquire no better rights. (If such prior holder was himself a holder in due course, the purchaser succeeds to that status under Section 3-201 on Transfer.) The provision applies to a purchaser at an execution sale, a sale in bankruptcy or a sale by a state bank commissioner of the assets of an insolvent bank. It applies equally to an attaching creditor or any other person who acquires the instrument by legal process, even under an antecedent claim; and equally to a representative, such as an executor, administrator, receiver or assignee for the benefit of creditors, who takes over the instrument as part of an estate, even though he is representing antecedent creditors.

Subsection (3)(c) applies to bulk purchases lying outside of the ordinary course of business of the seller. It applies, for example, when a new partnership takes over for value all of the assets of an old one after a new member has entered the firm, or to a reorganized or consolidated corporation taking over in bulk the assets of a predecessor. It has particular application to the purchase by one bank of a substantial part of the paper held by another bank which is threatened with insolvency and seeking to liquidate its assets.

4. A purchaser of a limited interest—as a pledgee in a security transaction—may become a holder in due course, but he may enforce the instrument over defenses only to the extent of his interest, and defenses good against the pledgor remain available insofar as the pledgor retains an equity in the instrument. This is merely a special application of the general rule (Section 1-201) that a purchaser of a limited interest acquires rights only to the extent of the interest purchased. Section 27 of the original Act contained a similar provision.

§ 3-303. Taking for Value.

A holder takes the instrument for value

(a) to the extent that the agreed consideration has been performed or that he acquires a security interest in or a lien on the instrument otherwise than by legal process; or

(b) when he takes the instrument in payment of or as security for an antecedent claim against any person whether or not the claim is due; or

(c) when he gives a negotiable instrument for it or makes an irrevocable commitment to a third person.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 25, 26, 27 and 54, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded; original Section 26 omitted.

Purposes of Changes: The changes are intended to remove uncertainties arising under the original Act.

1. The original Section 26 which had reference to the liability of accommodation parties is omitted as erroneous and misleading, since a holder who does not himself give value cannot qualify as a holder in due course in his own right merely because value has previously been given for the instrument.

2. In this Article value is divorced from consideration (Section 3-408). The latter is important only on the question of whether the obligation of a party can be enforced against him; while value is important only on the question of whether the holder who has acquired that obligation qualifies as a particular kind of holder.

3. Paragraph (a) resolves an apparent conflict between the original Section 54 and the first sentence of the original Section 25, by requiring that the agreed consideration shall actually have been given. An executory promise to give value is not itself value, except as provided in paragraph (c). The underlying reason of policy is that when the purchaser learns of a defense against the instrument or of a defect in the title he is not required to enforce the instrument, but is free to rescind the transaction for breach of the transferor's warranty (Section 3-417). There is thus not the same necessity for giving him the status of a holder in due course, cutting off claims and defenses, as where he has actually paid value. A common illustration is the bank credit not drawn upon, which can be and is revoked when a claim or defense appears.

4. Paragraph (a) limits the language of the original Section 27, eliminating the attaching creditor or any other person who acquires a lien by legal process. Any such lienor has been uniformly held not to be a holder in due course.

5. Paragraph (b) restates the last sentence of the original Section 25. It adopts the generally accepted rule that the holder takes for value when he takes the instrument as security for an antecedent debt, even though there is no extension of time or other concession, and whether or not the debt is due. The provision extends the same rule to any claim against any person; there is no requirement that the claim arise out of contract. In particular the provision is intended to apply to an instrument given in payment of or as security for the debt of a third person, even though no concession is made in return.

6. Paragraph (c) is new, but states generally recognized exceptions to the rule that an executory promise is not value. A negotiable instrument is value because it carries the possibility of negotiation to a holder in due course, after which the party who gives it cannot refuse to pay. The same reasoning applies to any irrevocable commitment to a third person, such as a letter of credit issued when an instrument is taken.

§ 3-304. Notice to Purchaser.

(1) The purchaser has notice of a claim or defense if

(a) the instrument is so incomplete, bears such visible evidence of forgery or alteration, or is otherwise so irregular as to call into question its validity, terms or ownership or to create an ambiguity as to the party to pay; or

(b) the purchaser has notice that the obligation of any party is voidable in whole or in part, or that all parties have been discharged.

(2) The purchaser has notice of a claim against the instrument when he has knowledge that a fiduciary has negotiated the instrument in payment of or as security for his own debt or in any transaction for his own benefit or otherwise in breach of duty.

(3) The purchaser has notice that an instrument is overdue if he has reason to know

(a) that any part of the principal amount is overdue or that there is an uncured default in payment of another instrument of the same series; or

(b) that acceleration of the instrument has been made; or

(c) that he is taking a demand instrument after demand has been made or more than a reasonable length of time after its issue. A reasonable time for a check drawn and payable within the states and territories of the United States and the District of Columbia is presumed to be thirty days.

(4) Knowledge of the following facts does not of itself give the purchaser notice of a defense or claim

(a) that the instrument is antedated or postdated;

(b) that it was issued or negotiated in return for an executory promise or accompanied by a separate agreement, unless the purchaser has notice that a defense or claim has arisen from the terms thereof;

(c) that any party has signed for accommodation;

(d) that an incomplete instrument has been completed, unless the purchaser has notice of any improper completion;

(e) that any person negotiating the instrument is or was a fiduciary;

(f) that there has been default in payment of interest on the instrument or in payment of any other instrument, except one of the same series.

(5) The filing or recording of a document does not of itself constitute notice within the provisions of this Article to a person who would otherwise be a holder in due course.

(6) To be effective notice must be received at such time and in such manner as to give a reasonable opportunity to act on it.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 45, 52, 53, 55 and 56, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded; new provisions.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter: The original sections are expanded, with the addition of specific provisions intended to remove uncertainties in the existing law.

1. "Notice" is defined in Section 1-201.

2. Paragraph (a) of subsection (1) replaces the provision in the original Section 52(1) requiring that the instrument be "complete and regular on its face." An instrument may be blank as to some unnecessary particular, may contain minor erasures, or even have an obvious change in the date, as where "January 2, 1948" is changed to "January 2, 1949", without even exciting suspicion. Irregularity is properly a question of notice to the purchaser of something wrong, and is so treated here.

3. "Voidable" obligation in paragraph (b) of subsection (1) is intended to limit the provision to notice of defense which will permit any party to avoid his original obligation on the instrument, as distinguished from a set-off or counterclaim.

4. Notice that one party has been discharged is not notice to the purchaser of an infirmity in the obligation of other parties who remain liable on the instrument. A purchaser with notice that an indorser is discharged takes subject to that discharge as provided in the section on effect of discharge against a holder in due course (Section 3-602) but is not prevented from taking the obligation of the maker in due course. If he has notice that all parties are discharged he cannot be a holder in due course.

5. Subsection (2) follows the policy of Section 6 of the Uniform Fiduciaries Act, and specifies the same elements as notice of improper conduct of a fiduciary. Under paragraph (e) of subsection (4) mere notice of the existence of the fiduciary relation is not enough in itself to prevent the holder from taking in due course, and he is free to take the instrument on the assumption that the fiduciary is acting properly. The purchaser may pay cash into the hands of the fiduciary without notice of any breach of the obligation. Section 3-206 should be consulted for the effect of a restrictive indorsement.

6. Subsection (3) removes an uncertainty in the original Act by providing that reason to know of an overdue installment or other part of the principal amount is notice that the instrument is overdue and thus prevents the purchaser from taking in due course. On the other hand subsection (4)(f) makes notice that interest is overdue insufficient, on the basis of banking and commercial practice, the decisions under the original Act, and the frequency with which interest payments are in fact delayed. Notice of default in payment of any other instrument, except an uncured default in another instrument of the same series, is likewise insufficient.

7. Subsection (3) departs from the original Section 52(2) by providing that the purchaser may take accelerated paper, or a demand instrument on which demand has in fact been made, as a holder in due course if he takes without notice of the acceleration or demand. With this change the original Section 45 is eliminated, as the presumption that any negotiation has taken place before the instrument was in fact overdue is of importance only in aid of a holder in due course. Under this section it is not conclusive that the instrument was in fact overdue when it was negotiated, if the holder takes without notice of that fact.

The "reasonable time after issue" is retained from the original Section 53, but paragraph (c) adds a presumption, as that term is defined in this Act (Section 1-201), that a domestic check is stale after thirty days.

8. Paragraph (a) of subsection (4) rejects decisions holding that an instrument known to be antedated or postdated is not "regular." Such knowledge does not prevent a holder from taking in due course.

9. Paragraph (b) of subsection (4) is to be read together with the provisions of this Article as to when a promise or order is unconditional and as to other writings affecting the instrument (Sections 3-105 and 3-119). Mere notice of the existence of an executory promise or a separate agreement does not prevent the holder from taking in due course, and such notice may even appear in the instrument itself. If the purchaser has notice of any default in the promise or agreement which gives rise to a defense or claim against the instrument, he is on notice to the same extent as in the case of any other information as to the existence of a defense or claim.

10. Paragraph (d) of subsection (4) follows the policy of the original Section 14, under which any person in possession of an instrument has prima facie authority to fill blanks. It is intended to mean that the holder may take in due course even though a blank is filled in his presence, if he is without notice that the filling is improper. Section 3-407 on alteration should be consulted as to the rights of subsequent holders following such an alteration.

11. Subsection (5) is new. It removes an uncertainty arising under the original Act as to the effect of "constructive notice" through public filing or recording.

12. Subsection (6) is new. It means that notice must be received with a sufficient margin of time to afford a reasonable opportunity to act on it, and that a notice received by the president of a bank one minute before the bank's teller cashes a check is not effective to prevent the bank from becoming a holder in due course. See in this connection the provision on notice to an organization, Sec. 1-201(27).

§ 3-305. Rights of a Holder in Due Course.

To the extent that a holder is a holder in due course he takes the instrument free from

(1) all claims to it on the part of any person; and

(2) all defenses of any party to the instrument with whom the holder has not dealt except

(a) infancy, to the extent that it is a defense to a simple contract; and

(b) such other incapacity, or duress, or illegality of the transaction, as renders the obligation of the party a nullity; and

(c) such misrepresentation as has induced the party to sign the instrument with neither knowledge nor reasonable opportunity to obtain knowledge of its character or its essential terms; and

(d) discharge in insolvency proceedings; and

(e) any other discharge of which the holder has notice when he takes the instrument.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 15, 16 and 57, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded; new provisions; rule of original Section 15 reversed.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter:

1. The section applies to any person who is himself a holder in due course, and equally to any transferee who acquires the rights of one (Section 3-201). "Takes" is substituted for "holds" in the original Section 57 because a holder in due course may still be subject to any claims or defenses which arise against him after he has taken the instrument.

2. The language "all claims to it on the part of any person" is substituted for "any defect of title of prior parties" in the original Section 57 in order to make it clear that the holder in due course takes the instrument free not only from any claim of legal title but also from all liens, equities or claims of any other kind. This includes any claim for rescission of a prior negotiation, in accordance with the provisions of the section on reacquisition (Section 3-208).

3. "All defenses" includes nondelivery, conditional delivery or delivery for a special purpose. Under this Article such nondelivery or qualified delivery is a defense (Sections 3-306 and 3-307) and the defendant has the full burden of establishing it. Accordingly the "conclusive presumption" of the third sentence of the original Section 16 is abrogated in favor of a rule of law cutting off the defense.

The effect of this section, together with the sections dealing with incomplete instruments (Section 3-115) and alteration (Section 3-407) is to cut off the defense of nondelivery of an incomplete instrument against a holder in due course, and to change the rule of the original Section 15.

4. Paragraph (a) of subsection (2) is new. It follows the decisions under the original Act in providing that the defense of infancy may be asserted against a holder in due course, even though its effect is to render the instrument voidable but not void. The policy is one of protection of the infant against those who take advantage of him, even at the expense of occasional loss to an innocent purchaser. No attempt is made to state when infancy is available as a defense or the conditions under which it may be asserted. In some jurisdictions it is held that an infant cannot rescind the transaction or set up the defense unless he restores the holder to his former position, which in the case of a holder in due course is normally impossible. In other states an infant who has misrepresented his age may be estopped to assert his infancy. Such questions are left to the local law, as an integral part of the policy of each state as to the protection of infants.

5. Paragraph (b) of subsection (2) is new. It covers mental incompetence, guardianship, ultra vires acts or lack of corporate capacity to do business, any remaining incapacity of married women, or any other incapacity apart from infancy. Such incapacity is largely statutory. Its existence and effect is left to the law of each state. If under the local law the effect is to render the obligation of the instrument entirely null and void, the defense may be asserted against a holder in due course. If the effect is merely to render the obligation voidable at the election of the obligor, the defense is cut off.

6. Duress is a matter of degree. An instrument signed at the point of a gun is void, even in the hands of a holder in due course. One signed under threat to prosecute the son of the maker for theft may be merely voidable, so that the defense is cut off. Illegality is most frequently a matter of gambling or usury, but may arise in many other forms under a great variety of statutes. The statutes differ greatly in their provisions and the interpretations given them. They are primarily a matter of local concern and local policy. All such matters are therefore left to the local law. If under that law the effect of the duress or the illegality is to make the obligation entirely null and void, the defense may be asserted against a holder in due course. Otherwise it is cut off.

7. Paragraph (c) of subsection (2) is new. It follows the great majority of the decisions under the original Act in recognizing the defense of "real" or "essential" fraud, sometimes called fraud in the essence or fraud in the factum, as effective against a holder in due course. The common illustration is that of the maker who is tricked into signing a note in the belief that it is merely a receipt or some other document. The theory of the defense is that his signature on the instrument is ineffective because he did not intend to sign such an instrument at all. Under this provision the defense extends to an instrument signed with knowledge that it is a negotiable instrument, but without knowledge of its essential terms.

The test of the defense here stated is that of excusable ignorance of the contents of the writing signed. The party must not only have been in ignorance, but must also have had no reasonable opportunity to obtain knowledge. In determining what is a reasonable opportunity all relevant factors are to be taken into account, including the age and sex of the party, his intelligence, education and business experience; his ability to read or to understand English, the representations made to him and his reason to rely on them or to have confidence in the person making them; the presence or absence of any third person who might read or explain the instrument to him, or any other possibility of obtaining independent information; and the apparent necessity, or lack of it, for acting without delay.

Unless the misrepresentation meets this test, the defense is cut off by a holder in due course.

8. Paragraph (d) is also new. It is inserted to make it clear that any discharge in bankruptcy or other insolvency proceedings, as defined in this Article, is not cut off when the instrument is purchased by a holder in due course.

9. Paragraph (e) of subsection (2) is also new. Under the notice to purchaser section of this Article (Section 3-304), notice of any discharge which leaves other parties liable on the instrument does not prevent the purchaser from becoming a holder in due course. The obvious case is that of the cancellation of an indorsement, which leaves the maker and prior indorsers liable. As to such parties the purchaser may be a holder in due course, but he takes the instrument subject to the discharge of which he has notice. If he is without such notice, the discharge is not effective against him (Section 3-602).

§ 3-306. Rights of One Not Holder in Due Course.

Unless he has the rights of a holder in due course any person takes the instrument subject to

(a) all valid claims to it on the part of any person; and

(b) all defenses of any party which would be available in an action on a simple contract; and

(c) the defenses of want or failure of consideration, non-performance of any condition precedent, non-delivery, or delivery for a special purpose (Section 3-408); and

(d) the defense that he or a person through whom he holds the instrument acquired it by theft, or that payment or satisfaction to such holder would be inconsistent with the terms of a restrictive indorsement. The claim of any third person to the instrument is not otherwise available as a defense to any party liable thereon unless the third person himself defends the action for such party.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 16, 28, 58 and 59, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined, condensed and reworded.

Purposes of Changes: The changes are intended to remove the following uncertainties arising under the original sections:

1. Any transferee who acquires the rights of a holder in due course under the transfer section of this Article (Section 3-201) is included within the provisions of the preceding Section 305. This section covers any person who neither qualifies in his own right as a holder in due course nor has acquired the rights of one by transfer. In particular the section applies to a bona fide purchaser with notice that the instrument is overdue.

2. "All valid claims to it on the part of any person" includes not only claims of legal title, but all liens, equities, or other claims of right against the instrument or its proceeds. It includes claims to rescind a prior negotiation and to recover the instrument or its proceeds.

3. Paragraph (b) restates the first sentence of the original Section 58.

4. Paragraph (c) condenses the original Sections 16 and 28. Want or failure of consideration is specifically mentioned, as in the original Section 28, in order to make it clear that either is a defense which the defendant has the burden of establishing under the following section of this Article. The language as to an "ascertained or liquidated amount or otherwise" in the original Section 28 is omitted because it is believed to be superfluous. The third sentence of Section 16 is now covered by the preceding section. The fourth sentence is omitted in favor of the rule stated in the following section, which places the full burden of establishing the defense of non-delivery, conditional delivery or delivery for a special purpose upon the defendant, and makes any presumption unnecessary.

5. Paragraph (d) is substituted for the last sentence of the original Section 59, as a more detailed and explicit statement of the same policy, which is also found in the original Section 22. The contract of the obligor is to pay the holder of the instrument, and the claims of other persons against the holder are generally not his concern. He is not required to set up such a claim as a defense, since he usually will have no satisfactory evidence of his own on the issue; and the provision that he may not do so is intended as much for his protection as for that of the holder. The claimant who has lost possession of an instrument so payable or indorsed that another may become a holder has lost his rights on the instrument, which by its terms no longer runs to him. The provision includes all claims for rescission of a negotiation, whether based in incapacity, fraud, duress, mistake, illegality, breach of trust or duty or any other reason. It includes claims based on conditional delivery or delivery for a special purpose. It includes claims of legal title, lien, constructive trust or other equity against the instrument or its proceeds. The exception made in the case of theft is based on the policy which refuses to aid a proved thief to recover, and refuses to aid him indirectly by permitting his transferee to recover unless the transferee is a holder in due course. The exception concerning restrictive indorsements is intended to achieve consistency with Section 3-603 and related sections.

Nothing in this section is intended to prevent the claimant from intervening in the holder's action against the obligor or defending the action for the latter, and asserting his claim in the course of such intervention or defense. Nothing here stated is intended to prevent any interpleader, deposit in court or other available procedure under which the defendant may bring the claimant into court or be discharged without himself litigating the claim as a defense. Compare Section 3-803 on vouching in other parties alleged to be liable.

§ 3-307. Burden of Establishing Signatures, Defenses and Due Course.

(1) Unless specifically denied in the pleadings each signature on an instrument is admitted. When the effectiveness of a signature is put in issue

(a) the burden of establishing it is on the party claiming under the signature; but

(b) the signature is presumed to be genuine or authorized except where the action is to enforce the obligation of a purported signer who has died or become incompetent before proof is required.

(2) When signatures are admitted or established, production of the instrument entitles a holder to recover on it unless the defendant establishes a defense.

(3) After it is shown that a defense exists a person claiming the rights of a holder in due course has the burden of establishing that he or some person under whom he claims is in all respects a holder in due course.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 59, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.
Changes: Reworded; new provisions.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter:

1. Subsection (1) is new, although similar provisions are found in a number of states. The purpose of the requirement of a specific denial in the pleadings is to give the plaintiff notice that he must meet a claim of forgery or lack of authority as to the particular signature, and to afford him an opportunity to investigate and obtain evidence. Where local rules of pleading permit, the denial may be on information and belief, or it may be a denial of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief. It need not be under oath unless the local statutes or rules require verification. In the absence of such specific denial the signature stands admitted, and is not in issue. Nothing in this section is intended, however, to prevent amendment of the pleading in a proper case.

The question of the burden of establishing the signature arises only when it has been put in issue by specific denial. "Burden of establishing" is defined in the definitions section of this Act (Section 1-201). The burden is on the party claiming under the signature, but he is aided by the presumption that it is genuine or authorized [as] stated in paragraph (b). "Presumption" is also defined in this Act (Section 1-201). It means that until some evidence is introduced which would support a finding that the signature is forged or unauthorized the plaintiff is not required to prove that it is authentic. The presumption rests upon the fact that in ordinary experience forged or unauthorized signatures are very uncommon, and normally any evidence is within the control of the defendant or more accessible to him. He is therefore required to make some sufficient showing of the grounds for his denial before the plaintiff is put to his proof. His evidence need not be sufficient to require a directed verdict in his favor, but it must be enough to support his denial by permitting a finding in his favor. Until he introduces such evidence the presumption requires a finding for the plaintiff. Once such evidence is introduced the burden of establishing the signature by a preponderance of the total evidence is on the plaintiff.

Under paragraph (b) this presumption does not arise where the action is to enforce the obligation of a purported signer who has died or become incompetent before the evidence is required, and so is disabled from obtaining or introducing it. "Action" of course includes a claim asserted against the estate of a deceased or an incompetent.

2. Subsection (2) is substituted for the first clause of the original Section 59. Once signatures are proved or admitted, a holder makes out his case by mere production of the instrument, and is entitled to recover in the absence of any further evidence. The defendant has the burden of establishing any and all defenses, not only in the first instance but by a preponderance of the total evidence. The provision applies only to a holder, as defined in this Act (Section 1-201). Any other person in possession of an instrument must prove his right to it and account for the absence of any necessary indorsement. If he establishes a transfer which gives him the rights of a holder (Section 3-201), this provision becomes applicable, and he is then entitled to recover unless the defendant establishes a defense.

3. Subsection (3) rephrases the last clause of the first sentence of the original Section 59. Until it is shown that a defense exists the issue as to whether the holder is a holder in due course does not arise. In the absence of a defense any holder is entitled to recover and there is no occasion to say that he is deemed prima facie to be a holder in due course. When it is shown that a defense exists the plaintiff may, if he so elects, seek to cut off the defense by establishing that he is himself a holder in due course, or that he has acquired the rights of a prior holder in due course (Section 3-201). On this issue he has the full burden of proof by a preponderance of the total evidence. "In all respects" means that he must sustain this burden by affirmative proof that the instrument was taken for value, that it was taken in good faith, and that it was taken without notice (Section 3-302).

Nothing in this section is intended to say that the plaintiff must necessarily prove that he is a holder in due course. He may elect to introduce no further evidence, in which case a verdict may be directed for the plaintiff or the defendant, or the issue of the defense may be left to the jury, according to the weight and sufficiency of the defendant's evidence. He may elect to rebut the defense itself by proof to the contrary, in which case again a verdict may be directed for either party or the issue may be for the jury. This subsection means only that if the plaintiff claims the rights of a holder in due course against the defense he has the burden of proof upon that issue.

LIABILITY OF PARTIES

§ 3-401. Signature.

(1) No person is liable on an instrument unless his signature appears thereon.

(2) A signature is made by use of any name, including any trade or assumed name, upon an instrument, or by any word or mark used in lieu of a written signature.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 18, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.
Changes: Reworded.
Purposes of Changes: To make it clear that:

1. No one is liable on an instrument unless and until he has signed it. The chief application of the rule has been in cases holding that a principal whose name does not appear on an instrument signed by his agent is not liable on the instrument even though the payee knew when it was issued that it was intended to be the obligation of one who did not sign. The exceptions made as to collateral and virtual acceptances by the original Sections 134 and 135 are now abrogated by the definition of an acceptance and the rules governing its operation. An allonge is part of the instrument to which it is affixed. Section 3-202(2).

Nothing in this section is intended to prevent any liability arising apart from the instrument itself. The party who does not sign may still be liable on the original obligation for which the instrument was given, or for breach of any agreement to sign, or in tort for misrepresentation, or even on an oral guaranty of payment where the statute of frauds is satisfied. He may of course be liable under any separate writing. The provision is not intended to prevent an estoppel to deny that the party has signed, as where the instrument is purchased in good faith reliance upon his assurance that a forged signature is genuine.

2. A signature may be handwritten, typed, printed or made in any other manner. It need not be subscribed, and may appear in the body of the instrument, as in the case of "I, John Doe, promise to pay—" without any other signature. It may be made by mark, or even by thumbprint. It may be made in any name, including any trade name or assumed name, however false and fictitious, which is adopted for the purpose. Parol evidence is admissible to identify the signer, and when he is identified the signature is effective.

This section is not intended to affect any local statute or rule of law requiring a signature by mark to be witnessed, or any signature to be otherwise authenticated, or requiring any form of proof. It is to be read together with the provision under which a person paying or giving value for the instrument may require indorsement in both the right name and the wrong one; and with the provision that the absence of an indorsement in the right name may make an instrument so irregular as to call its ownership into question and put a purchaser upon notice which will prevent his taking as a holder in due course.

§ 3-402. Signature in Ambiguous Capacity.

Unless the instrument clearly indicates that a signature is made in some other capacity it is an indorsement.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 17(6) and 63, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded.

Purposes of Changes: The revised language is intended to say that any ambiguity as to the capacity in which a signature is made must be resolved by a rule of law that it is an indorsement. Parol evidence is not admissible to show any other capacity, except for the purpose of reformation of the instrument as it may be permitted under the rules of the particular jurisdiction. The question is to be determined from the face of the instrument alone, and unless the instrument itself makes it clear that he has signed in some other capacity the signer must be treated as an indorser.

The indication that the signature is made in another capacity must be clear without reference to anything but the instrument. It may be found in the language used. Thus if John Doe signs after "I, John Doe, promise to pay," he is clearly a maker; and "John Doe, witness" is not liable at all. The capacity may be found in any clearly evidenced purpose of the signature, as where a drawee signing in an unusual place on the paper has no visible reason to sign at all unless he is an acceptor. It may be found in usage or custom. Thus by long established practice judicially noticed or otherwise established a signature in the lower right hand corner of an instrument indicates an intent to sign as the maker of a note or the drawer of a draft. Any similar clear indication of an intent to sign in some other capacity may be enough to remove the signature from the application of this section.

§ 3-403. Signature by Authorized Representative.

(1) A signature may be made by an agent or other representative, and his authority to make it may be established as in other cases of representation. No particular form of appointment is necessary to establish such authority.

(2) An authorized representative who signs his own name to an instrument

(a) is personally obligated if the instrument neither names the person represented nor shows that the representative signed in a representative capacity;

(b) except as otherwise established between the immediate parties, is personally obligated if the instrument names the person represented but does not show that the representative signed in a representative capacity, or if the instrument does not name the person represented but does show that the representative signed in a representative capacity.

(3) Except as otherwise established the name of an organization preceded or followed by the name and office of an authorized individual is a signature made in a representative capacity.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 19, 20 and 21, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded; original Section 21 omitted.

Purposes of Changes:

1. The definition of "representative" in this Act (Section 1-201) includes an officer of a corporation or association, a trustee, an executor or administrator of an estate, or any person empowered to act for another. It is not intended to mean that a trust or an estate is necessarily a legal entity with the capacity to issue negotiable instruments, but merely that if it can issue them they may be signed by the representative.

The power to sign for another may be an express authority, or it may be implied in law or in fact, or it may rest merely upon apparent authority. It may be established as in other cases of representation, and when relevant parol evidence is admissible to prove or to deny it.

2. Subsection (2) applies only to the signature of a representative whose authority to sign for another is established. If he is not authorized his signature has the effect of an unauthorized signature (Section 3-404). Even though he is authorized the principal is not liable on the instrument, under the provisions (Section 3-401) relating to signatures, unless the instrument names him and clearly shows that the signature is made on his behalf.

3. Assuming that Peter Pringle is a principal and Arthur Adams is his agent, an instrument might, for example, bear the following signatures affixed by the agent—

(a) "Peter Pringle", or
(b) "Arthur Adams", or
(c) "Peter Pringle by Arthur Adams, Agent", or
(d) "Arthur Adams, Agent", or
(e) "Peter Pringle Arthur Adams".

A signature in form (a) does not bind Adams if authorized (Sections 3-401 and 3-404).

A signature as in (b) personally obligates the agent and parol evidence is inadmissible under subsection (2)(a) to disestablish his obligation.

The unambiguous way to make the representation clear is to sign as in (c). Any other definite indication is sufficient, as where the instrument reads "Peter Pringle promises to pay" and it is signed "Arthur Adams, Agent." Adams is not bound if he is authorized (Section 3-404).

Subsection 2(b) adopts the New York (minority) rule of Megowan v. Peterson, 173 N.Y. 1 (1902), in such a case as (d); and adopts the majority rule in such a case as (e). In both cases the section admits parol evidence in litigation between the immediate parties to prove signature by the agent in his representative capacity. [Paragraph 3 was amended in 1966].

4. The original Section 21, covering signatures by "procuration," is omitted. It was based on English practice under which the words "per procuration" added to any signature are understood to mean that the signer is acting under a power of attorney which the holder is free to examine. The holder is thus put on notice of the limited authority, and there can be no apparent authority extending beyond the power of attorney. This meaning of "per procuration" is almost unknown in the United States, and the words are understood by the ordinary banker or attorney to be merely the equivalent of "by." The omission is not intended to suggest that a signature "by procuration" can no longer have the effect which it had under the original Section 21, in any case where a party chooses to use the expression.

§ 3-404. Unauthorized Signatures.

(1) Any unauthorized signature is wholly inoperative as that of the person whose name is signed unless he ratifies it or is precluded from denying it; but it operates as the signature of the unauthorized signer in favor of any person who in good faith pays the instrument or takes it for value.

(2) Any unauthorized signature may be ratified for all purposes of this Article. Such ratification does not of itself affect any rights of the person ratifying against the actual signer.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 23, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.
Changes: Reworded; new provisions.
Purpose of Changes and New Matter: The changes are intended to remove uncertainties arising under the original section:

1. "Unauthorized signature" is a defined term (Section 1-201). It includes both a forgery and a signature made by an agent exceeding his actual or apparent authority.

2. The final clause of subsection (1) is new. It states the generally accepted rule that the unauthorized signature, while it is wholly inoperative as that of the person whose name is signed, is effective to impose liability upon the actual signer or to transfer any rights that he may have in the instrument. His liability is not in damages for breach of a warranty of his authority, but is full liability on the instrument in the capacity in which he has signed. It is, however, limited to parties who take or pay the instrument in good faith; and one who knows that the signature is unauthorized cannot recover from the signer on the instrument.

3. Subsection (2) is new. It settles the conflict which has existed in the decisions as to whether a forgery may be ratified. A forged signature may at least be adopted; and the word "ratified" is used in order to make it clear that the adoption is retroactive, and that it may be found from conduct as well as from express statements. Thus it may be found from the retention of benefits received in the transaction with knowledge of the unauthorized signature; and although the forger is not an agent, the ratification is governed by the same rules and principles as if he were.

This provision makes ratification effective only for the purposes of this Article. The unauthorized signature becomes valid so far as its effect as a signature is concerned. The ratification relieves the actual signer from liability on the signature. It does not of itself relieve him from liability to the person whose name is signed. It does not in any way affect the criminal law. No policy of the criminal law requires that the person whose name is forged shall not assume liability to others on the instrument; but he cannot affect the rights of the state. While the ratification may be taken into account with other relevant facts in determining punishment, it does not relieve the signer of criminal liability.

4. The words "or is precluded from denying it" are retained in subsection (1) to recognize the possibility of an estoppel against the person whose name is signed, as where he expressly or tacitly represents to an innocent purchaser that the signature is genuine; and to recognize the negligence which precludes a denial of the signature.

§ 3-405. Impostors; Signature in Name of Payee.

(1) An indorsement by any person in the name of a named payee is effective if

(a) an impostor by use of the mails or otherwise has induced the maker or drawer to issue the instrument to him or his confederate in the name of the payee; or

(b) a person signing as or on behalf of a maker or drawer intends the payee to have no interest in the instrument; or

(c) an agent or employee of the maker or drawer has supplied him with the name of the payee intending the latter to have no such interest.

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect the criminal or civil liability of the person so indorsing.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 9(3), Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.
Changes: Reworded; new provisions.
Purposes of Changes and New Matter:

1. This section enlarges the original subsection to include additional situations which it has not been held to cover. The words "fictitious or nonexisting person" have been eliminated as misleading, since the existence or nonexistence of the named payee is not decisive and is important only as it may bear on the intent that he shall have no interest in the instrument. The instrument is not made payable to bearer and indorsements are still necessary to negotiation. The section however recognizes as effective indorsement of the types of paper covered no matter by whom made. This solution is thought preferable to making such instruments bearer paper; on the face of things they are payable to order and a subsequent taker should require what purports to be a regular chain of indorsements. On the other hand it is thought to be unduly restrictive to require that the actual indorsement be made by the impostor or other fraudulent actor. In most cases the person whose fraud procured the instrument to be issued will himself indorse; when some other third person indorses it will most probably be a case of theft or a second independent fraud superimposed upon the original fraud. In neither case does there seem to be sufficient reason to reverse the rule of the section. To recapitulate: the instrument does not become bearer paper, a purportedly regular chain in indorsements is required, but any person—first thief, second impostor or third murderer—can effectively indorse in the name of the payee.

2. Subsection (1)(a) is new. It rejects decisions which distinguish between face-to-face imposture and imposture by mail and hold that where the parties deal by mail the dominant intent of the drawer is to deal with the name rather than with the person so that the resulting instrument may be negotiated only by indorsement of the payee whose name has been taken in vain. The result of the distinction has been under some prior law, to throw the loss in the mail imposture forward to a subsequent holder or to the drawee. Since the maker or drawer believes the two to be one and the same, the two intentions cannot be separated, and the "dominant intent" is a fiction. The position here taken is that the loss, regardless of the type of fraud which the particular impostor has committed, should fall upon the maker or drawer.

"Impostor" refers to impersonation, and does not extend to a false representation that the party is the authorized agent of the payee. The maker or drawer who takes the precaution of making the instrument payable to the principal is entitled to have his indorsement.

3. Subsection (1)(b) restates the substance of the original subsection 9(3). The test stated is not whether the named payee is "fictitious," but whether the signer intends that he shall have no interest in the instrument. The following situations illustrate the application of the subsection.

a. The drawer of a check, for his own reasons, makes it payable to P knowing that P does not exist.

b. The drawer makes the check payable in the name of P. A person named P exists, but the drawer does not know it.

c. The drawer makes the check payable to P, an existing person whom he knows, intending to receive the money himself and that P shall have no interest in the check.

d. The treasurer of a corporation draws its check payable to P, who to the knowledge of the treasurer does not exist.

e. The treasurer of a corporation draws its check payable to P. P exists but the treasurer has fraudulently added his name to the payroll intending that he shall not receive the check.

f. The president and the treasurer of a corporation both sign its check payable to P. P does not exist. The treasurer knows it but the president does not.

g. The same facts as f, except that P exists and the treasurer knows it, but intends that P shall have no interest in the check.

In all the cases stated an indorsement by any person in the name of P is effective.

4. Paragraph (c) is new. It extends the rule of the original Subsection 9(3) to include the padded payroll cases, where the drawer's agent or employee prepares the check for signature or otherwise furnishes the signing officer with the name of the payee. The principle followed is that the loss should fall upon the employer as a risk of his business enterprise rather than upon the subsequent holder or drawee. The reasons are that the employer is normally in a better position to prevent such forgeries by reasonable care in the selection or supervision of his employees, or, if he is not, is at least in a better position to cover the loss by fidelity insurance; and that the cost of such insurance is properly an expense of his business rather than of the business of the holder or drawee.

The provision applies only to the agent or employee of the drawer, and only to the agent or employee who supplies him with the name of the payee. The following situations illustrate its application.

a. An employee of a corporation prepares a padded payroll for its treasurer, which includes the name of P. P does not exist, and the employee knows it, but the treasurer does not. The treasurer draws the corporation's check payable to P.

b. The same facts as a, except that P exists and the employee knows it but intends him to have no interest in the check. In both cases an indorsement by any person in the name of P is effective and the loss falls on the corporation.

5. The section is not intended to affect criminal liability for forgery or any other crime, or civil liability to the drawer or to any other person. It is to be read together with the section under which an unauthorized signer is personally liable on the signature to any person who takes the instrument in good faith (3-404(1)).

§ 3-406. Negligence Contributing to Alteration or Unauthorized Signature.

Any person who by his negligence substantially contributes to a material alteration of the instrument or to the making of an unauthorized signature is precluded from asserting the alteration or lack of authority against a holder in due course or against a drawee or other payor who pays the instrument in good faith and in accordance with the reasonable commercial standards of the drawee's or payor's business.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. This section is new. It adopts the doctrine of Young v. Grote, 4 Bing. 253 (1827), which held that a drawer who so negligently draws an instrument as to facilitate its material alteration is liable to a drawee who pays the altered instrument in good faith. It should be noted that the rule as stated in the section requires that the negligence "substantially" contribute to the alteration.

2. The section extends the above principle to the protection of a holder in due course and of payors who may not technically be drawees. It rejects decisions which have held that the maker of a note owes no duty of care to the holder because at the time the instrument is drawn there is no contract between them. By drawing the instrument and "setting it afloat upon a sea of strangers" the maker or drawer voluntarily enters into a relation with later holders which justifies his responsibility. In this respect an instrument so negligently drawn as to facilitate alteration does not differ in principle from an instrument containing blanks which may be filled.

The holder in due course under the rules governing alteration (Section 3-407) may enforce the altered instrument according to its original tenor. Where negligence of the obligor has substantially contributed to the alteration, this section gives the holder the alternative right to enforce the instrument as altered.

3. No attempt is made to define negligence which will contribute to an alteration. The question is left to the court or the jury upon the circumstances of the particular cases. Negligence usually has been found where spaces are left in the body of the instrument in which words or figures may be inserted. No unusual precautions are required, and the section is not intended to change decisions holding that the drawer of a bill is under no duty to use sensitized paper, indelible ink or a protectograph; or that it is not negligence to leave spaces between the lines or at the end of the instrument in which a provision for interest or the like can be written.

4. The section applies only where the negligence contributes to the alteration. It must afford an opportunity of which advantage is in fact taken. The section approves decisions which have refused to hold the drawer responsible where he has left spaces in a check but the payee erased all the writing with chemicals and wrote in an entirely new check.

5. This section does not make the negligent party liable in tort for damages resulting from the alteration. Instead it estops him from asserting it against the holder in due course or drawee. The reason is that in the usual case the extent of the loss, which involves the possibility of ultimate recovery from the wrongdoer, cannot be determined at the time of litigation, and the decision would have to be made on the unsatisfactory basis of burden of proof. The holder or drawee is protected by an estoppel, and the task of pursuing the wrongdoer is left to the negligent party. Any amount in fact recovered from the wrongdoer must be held for the benefit of the negligent party under ordinary principles of equity.

6. The section protects parties who act not only in good faith, (Section 1-201) but also in observance of the reasonable standards of their business. Thus any bank which takes or pays an altered check which ordinary banking standards would require it to refuse cannot take advantage of the estoppel.

7. The section applies the same rule to negligence which contributes to a forgery or other unauthorized signature, as defined in this Act (Section 1-201). The most obvious case is that of the drawer who makes use of a signature stamp or other automatic signing device and is negligent in looking after it. The section extends, however, to cases where the party has notice that forgeries of his signature have occurred and is negligent in failing to prevent further forgeries by the same person. It extends to negligence which contributes to a forgery of the signature of another, as in the case where a check is negligently mailed to the wrong person having the same name as the payee. As in the case of alteration, no attempt is made to specify what is negligence, and the question is one for the court or the jury on the facts of the particular case.

§ 3-407. Alteration.

(1) Any alteration of an instrument is material which changes the contract of any party thereto in any respect, including any such change in

(a) the number or relations of the parties; or

(b) an incomplete instrument, by completing it otherwise than as authorized; or

(c) the writing as signed, by adding to it or by removing any part of it.

(2) As against any person other than a subsequent holder in due course.

(a) alteration by the holder which is both fraudulent and material discharges any party whose contract is thereby changed unless that party assents or is precluded from asserting the defense;

(b) no other alteration discharges any party and the instrument may be enforced according to its original tenor, or as to incomplete instruments according to the authority given.

(3) A subsequent holder in due course may in all cases enforce the instrument according to its original tenor, and when an incomplete instrument has been completed, he may enforce it as completed.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 14, 15, 124 and 125, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded; new provisions; rule of original Section 15 reversed.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter: The changes are intended to remove uncertainties arising under the original sections, and to modify the rules as to discharge:

1. Subsection (1) substitutes a general definition for the list of illustrations in the original Section 125. Any alteration is material only as it may change the contract of a party to the instrument; and the addition or deletion of words which do not in any way affect the contract of any previous signer is not material. But any change in the contract of a party, however slight, is a material alteration; and the addition of one cent to the amount payable, or an advance of one day in the date of payment, will operate as a discharge if it is fraudulent.

Specific mention is made of a change in the number or relations of the parties in order to make it clear that any such change is material only if it changes the contract of one who has signed. The addition of a co-maker or a surety does not change in most jurisdictions the contract of one who has already signed as maker and should not be held material as to him. The addition of the name of an alternative payee is material, since it changes his obligation. Paragraph (c) makes special mention of a change in the writing signed in order to cover occasional cases of addition of sticker clauses, scissoring or perforating instruments where the separation is not authorized.

2. Paragraph (b) of subsection (1) is to be read together with Section 3-115 on incomplete instruments. Where an instrument contains blanks or is otherwise incomplete, it may be completed in accordance with the authority given and is then valid and effective as completed. If the completion is unauthorized and has the effect of changing the contract of any previous signer, this provision follows the generally accepted rule in treating it as a material alteration which may operate as a discharge.

3. Subsection (2) modifies the very rigorous rule of the original Section 124. The changes made are as follows:

a. A material alteration does not discharge any party unless it is made by the holder. Spoliation by any meddling stranger does not affect the rights of the holder. It is of course intended that the acts of the holder's authorized agent or employee, or of his confederates, are to be attributed to him.

b. A material alteration does not discharge any party unless it is made for a fraudulent purpose. There is no discharge where a blank is filled in the honest belief that it is as authorized; or where a change is made with a benevolent motive such as a desire to give the obligor the benefit of a lower interest rate. Changes favorable to the obligor are unlikely to be made with any fraudulent intent; but if such an intent is found the alteration may operate as a discharge.

c. The discharge is a personal defense of the party whose contract is changed by the alteration, and anyone whose contract is not affected cannot assert it. The contract of any party is necessarily affected, however, by the discharge of any party against whom he has a right of recourse on the instrument. Assent to the alteration given before or after it is made will prevent the party from asserting the discharge. "Or is precluded from asserting the defense" is added in paragraph (a) to recognize the possibility of an estoppel or other ground barring the defense which does not rest on assent.

d. If the alteration is not material or if it is not made for a fraudulent purpose there is no discharge, and the instrument may be enforced according to its original tenor. Where blanks are filled or an incomplete instrument is otherwise completed there is no original tenor, but the instrument may be enforced according to the authority in fact given.

4. Subsection (3) combines the final sentences of the original Sections 14 and 124, and provides that a subsequent holder in due course takes free of the discharge in all cases. The provision is merely one form of the general rule governing the effect of discharge against a holder in due course (Section 3-602). The holder in due course may enforce the instrument according to its original tenor. In this connection reference should be made to the section giving the holder in due course the right, where the maker's or drawer's negligence has substantially contributed to the alteration, to enforce the instrument in its altered form (Section 3-406). Reference should also be made to Section 4-401 covering a bank's right to charge its customer's account in the case of altered instruments.

Where blanks are filled or an incomplete instrument is otherwise completed, this subsection follows the original Section 14 in placing the loss upon the party who left the instrument incomplete and permitting the holder to enforce it in its completed form. As indicated in the comment to Section 3-115 on incomplete instruments, this result is intended even though the instrument was stolen from the maker or drawer and completed after the theft; and the effect of this subsection, together with the section on incomplete instruments is to reverse the rule of the original Section 15.

There is no inconsistency between subsection (3) and paragraph (b) of subsection (2). The holder in due course may elect to enforce the instrument either as provided in that paragraph or as provided in subsection (3).

It should be noted that a purchaser who takes the instrument with notice of any material alteration, including the unauthorized completion of an incomplete instrument, takes with notice of a claim or defense and cannot be a holder in due course (Section 3-304).

§ 3-408. Consideration.

Want or failure of consideration is a defense as against any person not having the rights of a holder in due course (Section 3-305), except that no consideration is necessary for an instrument or obligation thereon given in payment of or as security for an antecedent obligation of any kind. Nothing in this section shall be taken to displace any statute outside this Act under which a promise is enforceable notwithstanding lack or failure of consideration. Partial failure of consideration is a defense pro tanto whether or not the failure is in an ascertained or liquidated amount.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 24, 25 and 28, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded.

Purposes of Changes:

1. "Consideration" is distinguished from "value" throughout this Article. "Consideration" refers to what the obligor has received for his obligation, and is important only on the question of whether his obligation can be enforced against him.

2. The "except" clause is intended to remove the difficulties which have arisen where a note or a draft, or an indorsement of either, is given as payment or as security for a debt already owed by the party giving it, or by a third person. The provision is intended to change the result of decisions holding that where no extension of time or other concession is given by the creditor the new obligation fails for lack of legal consideration. It is intended also to mean that an instrument given for more or less than the amount of a liquidated obligation does not fail by reason of the common law rule that an obligation for a lesser liquidated amount cannot be consideration for the surrender of a greater.

3. With respect to the necessity or sufficiency of consideration other obligations on an instrument are subject to the ordinary rules of contract law relating to contracts not under seal. Promissory estoppel or any other equivalent or substitute for consideration is to be recognized as in other contract cases. The provision of the original Section 28 as to absence or failure of consideration is now covered by the section dealing with the rights of one not a holder in due course; and the "presumption" of consideration in the original Section 24 is replaced by the provision relating to the burden of establishing defenses.

§ 3-409. Draft Not an Assignment.

(1) A check or other draft does not of itself operate as an assignment of any funds in the hands of the drawee available for its payment, and the drawee is not liable on the instrument until he accepts it.

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect any liability in contract, tort or otherwise arising from any letter of credit or other obligation or representation which is not an acceptance.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 127 and 189, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded; new provisions.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter:

The two original sections are combined, brought forward to appear in connection with acceptance, and reworded to remove uncertainties.

1. As under the original sections, a check or other draft does not of itself operate as an assignment in law or equity. The assignment may, however, appear from other facts, and particularly from other agreements, express or implied; and when the intent to assign is clear the check may be the means by which the assignment is effected.

2. The language of the original Section 189, that the drawee is not liable "to the holder", is changed as inaccurate and not intended. The drawee is not liable on the instrument until he accepts; but he remains subject to any other liability to the holder. In this connection reference should be made to Section 4-302 on the payor bank's liability for late return. Such a bank if it does not either make prompt settlement or return on an item received by it will become liable to a holder of the item.

3. Subsection (2) is new. It is intended to make it clear that this section does not in any way affect any liability which may arise apart from the instrument itself. The drawee who fails to accept may be liable to the drawer or to the holder for breach of the terms of a letter of credit or any other agreement by which he is obligated to accept. He may be liable in tort or upon any other basis because of his representation that he has accepted, or that he intends to accept. The section leaves unaffected any liability of any kind apart from the instrument.

§ 3-410. Definition and Operation of Acceptance.

(1) Acceptance is the drawee's signed engagement to honor the draft as presented. It must be written on the draft, and may consist of his signature alone. It becomes operative when completed by delivery or notification.

(2) A draft may be accepted although it has not been signed by the drawer or is otherwise incomplete or is overdue or has been dishonored.

(3) Where the draft is payable at a fixed period after sight and the acceptor fails to date his acceptance the holder may complete it by supplying a date in good faith.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 161–170, and 191, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined, reworded; original Sections 134, 135, 137 and 161–170 eliminated.

Purposes of Changes:

1. The original Sections 161–170 providing for acceptance for honor are omitted from this Article. This ancient practice developed at a time when communications were slow, and particularly in overseas transactions there might be a delay of several months before the drawer could be notified of dishonor by nonacceptance and take steps to protect his credit. The need for intervention by a third party has passed with the development of the cable transfer, the letter of credit, and numerous other devices by which a substitute arrangement is promptly made. The practice has been obsolete for many years, and the sections are therefore eliminated.

2. Under Section 3-417 a person obtaining acceptance gives a warranty against alteration of the instrument before acceptance.

3. Subsection (1) adopts the rule of Section 17 of the English Bills of Exchange Act that the acceptance must be written on the draft. It eliminates the original Sections 134 and 135, providing for "virtual" acceptance by a written promise to accept drafts to be drawn, and "collateral" acceptance by a separate writing. Both have been anomalous exceptions to the policy that no person is liable on an instrument unless his signature appears on it. Both are derived from a line of early American cases decided at a time when difficulties of communication, particularly overseas, might leave the holder in doubt for a long period whether the draft was accepted. Such conditions have long since ceased to exist, and the "virtual" or "collateral" acceptance is now almost entirely obsolete. Good commercial and banking practice does not sanction acceptance by any separate writing because of the dangers and uncertainties arising when it becomes separated from the draft. The instrument is now forwarded to the drawee for his acceptance upon it, or reliance is placed upon the obligation of the separate writing itself, as in the case of a letter of credit.

Nothing in this section is intended to eliminate any liability of the drawee in contract, tort or otherwise arising from the separate writing or any other obligation or representation, as provided in Section 3-409.

Subsection (1) likewise eliminates the original section 137, providing for acceptance by delay or refusal to return the instrument but the drawee may be liable for a conversion of the instrument under Section 3-419.

4. Subsection (1) states the generally recognized rule that the mere signature of the drawee on the instrument is a sufficient acceptance. Customarily the signature is written vertically across the face of the instrument; but since the drawee has no reason to sign for any other purpose his signature in any other place, even on the back of the instrument, is sufficient. It need not be accompanied by such words as "Accepted," "Certified," or "Good." It must not, however, bear any words indicating an intent to refuse to honor the bill; and nothing in this provision is intended to change such decisions as Norton v. Knapp, 64 Iowa 112, 19 N.W. 867 (1884), holding that the drawee's signature accompanied by the words "Kiss my foot" is not an acceptance.

5. The final sentence of subsection (1) expressly states the generally recognized rule, implied in the definition of acceptance in the original Section 191, that an acceptance written on the draft takes effect when the drawee notifies the holder or gives notice according to his instructions. Acceptance is thus an exception to the usual rule that no obligation on an instrument is effective until delivery.

6. Subsection (3) changes the last sentence of the original Section 138. The purpose of the provision is to provide a definite date of payment where none appears on the instrument. An undated acceptance of a draft payable "thirty days after sight" is incomplete; and unless the acceptor himself writes in a different date the holder is authorized to complete the acceptance according to the terms of the draft by supplying a date of presentment. Any date which the holder chooses to write in is effective providing his choice of date is made in good faith. Any different agreement not written on the draft is not effective, and parol evidence is not admissible to show it.

§ 3-411. Certification of a Check.

(1) Certification of a check is acceptance. Where a holder procures certification the drawer and all prior indorsers are discharged.

(2) Unless otherwise agreed a bank has no obligation to certify a check.

(3) A bank may certify a check before returning it for lack of proper indorsement. If it does so the drawer is discharged.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 187 and 188, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded; new provisions.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter:

1. The second sentence of subsection (1) continues the rule of original Section 188 that, while certification procured by a holder discharges the drawer and other prior parties, certification procured by the drawer leaves him liable. Under this provision any certification procured by a holder discharges the drawer and prior indorsers. Any indorsement made after a certification so procured remains effective; and where it is intended that any indorser shall remain liable notwithstanding certification, he may indorse with the words "after certification" to make his liability clear.

2. Subsection (2) is new. It states the generally recognized rule that in the absence of agreement a bank is under no obligation to certify a check, because it is a demand instrument calling for payment rather than acceptance. The bank may be liable for breach of any agreement with the drawer, the holder, or any other person by which it undertakes to certify. Its liability is not on the instrument, since the drawee is not so liable until acceptance (Section 3-409(1)). Any liability is for breach of the separate agreement.

3. Subsection (3) is new. It recognizes the banking practice of certifying a check which is returned for proper indorsement in order to protect the drawer against a longer contingent liability. It is consistent with the provision of Section 3-410(2) permitting certification although the check has not been signed or is otherwise incomplete.

§ 3-412. Acceptance Varying Draft.

(1) Where the drawee's proffered acceptance in any manner varies the draft as presented the holder may refuse the acceptance and treat the draft as dishonored in which case the drawee is entitled to have his acceptance cancelled.

(2) The terms of the draft are not varied by an acceptance to pay at any particular bank or place in the United States, unless the acceptance states that the draft is to be paid only at such bank or place.

(3) Where the holder assents to an acceptance varying the terms of the draft each drawer and indorser who does not affirmatively assent is discharged.

As amended in 1962.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 139, 140, 141 and 142, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded; law changed as to qualified acceptances.

Purposes of Changes:

1. The section applies to conditional acceptances, acceptances for part of the amount, acceptances to pay at a different time from that required by the draft, or to the acceptance of less than all of the drawees, all of which are covered by the original Section 141. It applies to any other engagement changing the essential terms of the draft.

2. Where the drawee offers such a varied engagement the holder has an election. He may reject the offer, insist on acceptance of the draft as presented, and treat the refusal to give it as a dishonor. In that event the drawee is not bound by his engagement, and is entitled to have it cancelled. After any necessary notice of dishonor and protest the holder may have his recourse against the drawer and indorsers.

If the holder elects to accept the offer, this section does not invalidate the drawee's varied engagement. It remains his effective obligation, which the holder may enforce against him. By his assent, however, the holder discharges any drawer or indorser who does not also assent. The rule of the original Section 142 is changed to require that the assent of the drawer or indorser be affirmatively expressed. Mere failure to object within a reasonable time is not assent which will prevent the discharge.

3. The rule of original Section 140 that an acceptance to pay at a particular place is an unqualified acceptance is modified by the provision of subsection (2) that the terms of the draft are not varied by an acceptance to pay at any particular bank or place in the United States unless the acceptance states that the draft is to be paid only at such bank or place. Section 3-504(4) provides that a draft accepted payable at a bank in the United States must be presented at the bank designated [As amended 1962].

§ 3-413. Contract of Maker, Drawer and Acceptor.

(1) The maker or acceptor engages that he will pay the instrument according to its tenor at the time of his engagement or as completed pursuant to Section 3-115 on incomplete instruments.

(2) The drawer engages that upon dishonor of the draft and any necessary notice of dishonor or protest he will pay the amount of the draft to the holder or to any indorser who takes it up. The drawer may disclaim this liability by drawing without recourse.

(3) By making, drawing or accepting the party admits as against all subsequent parties including the drawee the existence of the payee and his then capacity to indorse.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 60, 61 and 62, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded.

Purposes of Changes:

The original sections are combined for convenience and condensed to avoid duplication of language. This section should be read in connection with the sections on incomplete instruments (3-115), negligence contributing to alteration or unauthorized signature (3-406), alteration (3-407), acceptances varying a draft (3-412) and finality of payment or acceptance (3-418). Thus a maker who signs an incomplete note engages under this section to pay it according to its tenor at the time he signs it, but by virtue of Sections 3-115 and 3-407 the note may thereafter be completed and enforced against him. In the same way, if the maker's negligence substantially contributes to alteration of the instrument, he will become liable on his note as altered under Section 3-406. When a holder assents to an acceptance varying a draft (Section 3-412) he can of course hold the acceptor only according to the form of acceptance to which the holder agreed. Section 3-418 applies the rule of Price v. Neal both to acceptance and payment; thus an acceptor may not, after acceptance, assert that the drawer's signature is unauthorized.

Subsection (1) applies to all drafts (including checks) the rule that the acceptance relates to the instrument as it was at the time of its acceptance and not (in case of alteration before acceptance) to its original tenor. The cases on this point under the original act (all of which involved checks) have been in conflict. It should be noted that under Section 3-417 a person who obtains acceptance warrants to the acceptor that the instrument has not been materially altered.

Except as indicated in the foregoing comment the section makes no change in substance from the provision of the original act.

§ 3-414. Contract of Indorser; Order of Liability.

(1) Unless the indorsement otherwise specifies (as by such words as "without recourse") every indorser engages that upon dishonor and any necessary notice of dishonor and protest he will pay the instrument according to its tenor at the time of his indorsement to the holder or to any subsequent indorser who takes it up, even though the indorser who takes it up was not obligated to do so.

(2) Unless they otherwise agree indorsers are liable to one another in the order in which they indorse, which is presumed to be the order in which their signatures appear on the instrument.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 38, 44, 66, 67 and 68, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded.

Purposes of Changes:

1. Subsection (1) states the contract of indorsement—that if the instrument is dishonored and any protest or notice of dishonor which may be necessary under Section 3-501 is given, the indorser will pay the instrument. The indorser's engagement runs to any holder (whether or not for value) and to any indorser subsequent to him who has taken the instrument up. An indorser may disclaim his liability on the contract of indorsement, but only if the indorsement itself so specifies. Since the disclaimer varies the written contract of indorsement, the disclaimer itself must be written on the instrument and cannot be proved by parol. The customary manner of disclaiming the indorser's liability under this section is to indorse "without recourse". Apart from such a disclaimer all indorsers incur this liability, without regard to whether or not the indorser transferred the instrument for value or received consideration for his indorsement.

Original Section 44, permitting a representative to indorse in such terms as to exclude personal liability, is omitted as unnecessary and included in the broader right to disclaim any liability. No change in the law is intended by this omission.

2. In addition to his liability on the contract of indorsement, an indorser, if a transferor, gives the warranties stated in Section 3-417.

3. As in the case of acceptor's liability (Section 3-413), this section conditions the indorser's liability on the tenor of the instrument at the time of his indorsement. Thus if a person indorses an altered instrument he assumes liability as indorser on the instrument as altered.

4. Subsection (2) is intended to clarify existing law under original Section 68.

The section states two presumptions: One is that the indorsers are liable to one another in the order in which they have in fact indorsed. The other is that they have in fact indorsed in the order in which their names appear. Parol evidence is admissible to show that they have indorsed in another order, or that they have otherwise agreed as to their liability to one another.

The last sentence of the original Section 68 is now covered by Section 3-118(e) (Ambiguous Terms and Rules of Construction).

§ 3-415. Contract of Accommodation Party.

(1) An accommodation party is one who signs the instrument in any capacity for the purpose of lending his name to another party to it.

(2) When the instrument has been taken for value before it is due the accommodation party is liable in the capacity in which he has signed even though the taker knows of the accommodation.

(3) As against a holder in due course and without notice of the accommodation oral proof of the accommodation is not admissible to give the accommodation party the benefit of discharges dependent on his character as such. In other cases the accommodation character may be shown by oral proof.

(4) An indorsement which shows that it is not in the chain of title is notice of its accommodation character.

(5) An accommodation party is not liable to the party accommodated, and if he pays the instrument has a right of recourse on the instrument against such party.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 28, 29 and 64, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded; new provisions.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter: To make it clear that:

1. Subsection (1) recognizes that an accommodation party is always a surety (which includes a guarantor), and it is his only distinguishing feature. He differs from other sureties only in that his liability is on the instrument and he is a surety for another party to it. His obligation is therefore determined by the capacity in which he signs. An accommodation maker or acceptor is bound on the instrument without any resort to his principal, while an accommodation indorser may be liable only after presentment, notice of dishonor and protest. The subsection recognizes the defenses of a surety in accordance with the provisions subjecting one not a holder in due course to all simple contract defenses, as well as his rights against his principal after payment. Under subsection (3) except as against a holder in due course without notice of the accommodation, parol evidence is admissible to prove that the party has signed for accommodation. In any case, however, under subsection (4) an indorsement which is not in the chain of title (the irregular or anomalous indorsement) is notice to all subsequent takers of the instrument of the accommodation character of the indorsement.

2. Subsection (1) eliminates the language of the old Section 29 requiring that the accommodation party sign the instrument "without receiving value therefor." The essential characteristic is that the accommodation party is a surety, and not that he has signed gratuitously. He may be a paid surety, or receive other compensation from the party accommodated. He may even receive it from the payee, as where A and B buy goods and it is understood that A is to pay for all of them and that B is to sign a note only as a surety for A.

3. The obligation of the accommodation party is supported by any consideration for which the instrument is taken before it is due. Subsection (2) is intended to change occasional decisions holding that there is no sufficient consideration where an accommodation party signs a note after it is in the hands of a holder who has given value. The party is liable to the holder in such a case even though there is no extension of time or other concession. This is consistent with the provision as to antecedent obligations as consideration (Section 3-408). The limitation to "before it is due" is one of suretyship law, by which the obligation of the surety is terminated at the time limit unless in the meantime the obligation of the principal has become effective.

4. As a surety the accommodation party is not liable to the party accommodated; but he is otherwise liable on the instrument in the capacity in which he has signed. This general statement of the rule makes unnecessary the detailed provisions of the original Section 64, which is therefore eliminated, without any change in substance.

5. Subsection (5) is intended to change the result of such decisions as Quimby v. Varnum, 190 Mass. 211, 76 N.E. 671 (1906), which held that an accommodation indorser who paid the instrument could not maintain an action on it against the accommodated party since he had no "former rights" to which he was remitted. Under ordinary principles of suretyship the accommodation party who pays is subrogated to the rights of the holder paid, and should have his recourse on the instrument.

§ 3-416. Contract of Guarantor.

(1) "Payment guaranteed" or equivalent words added to a signature mean that the signer engages that if the instrument is not paid when due he will pay it according to its tenor without resort by the holder to any other party.

(2) "Collection guaranteed" or equivalent words added to a signature mean that the signer engages that if the instrument is not paid when due he will pay it according to its tenor, but only after the holder has reduced his claim against the maker or acceptor to judgment and execution has been returned unsatisfied, or after the maker or acceptor has become insolvent or it is otherwise apparent that it is useless to proceed against him.

(3) Words of guaranty which do not otherwise specify guarantee payment.

(4) No words of guaranty added to the signature of a sole maker or acceptor affect his liability on the instrument. Such words added to the signature of one of two or more makers or acceptors create a presumption that the signature is for the accommodation of the others.

(5) When words of guaranty are used presentment, notice of dishonor and protest are not necessary to charge the user.

(6) Any guaranty written on the instrument is enforcible notwithstanding any statute of frauds.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes: The section is new. It states the commercial understanding as to the meaning and effect of words of guaranty added to a signature.

An indorser who guarantees payment waives not only presentment, notice of dishonor and protest, but also all demand upon the maker or drawee. Words of guaranty do not affect the character of the indorsement as an indorsement (Section 3-202(4)); but the liability of the indorser becomes indistinguishable from that of a co-maker. A guaranty of collection likewise waives formal presentment, notice of dishonor and protest, but requires that the holder first proceed against the maker or acceptor by suit and execution, or show that such proceeding would be useless.

Subsection (6) is concerned chiefly with the type of statute of frauds which provides that no promise to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of another is enforceable unless it is evidenced by a writing which states the consideration for the promise. It is unusual to state any consideration when a guaranty is added to a signature on a negotiable instrument, which in itself sufficiently shows the nature of the transaction; and such statutes have commonly been held not to apply to such guaranties.

§ 3-417. Warranties on Presentment and Transfer.

(1) Any person who obtains payment or acceptance and any prior transferor warrants to a person who in good faith pays or accepts that

(a) he has a good title to the instrument or is authorized to obtain payment or acceptance on behalf of one who has a good title; and

(b) he has no knowledge that the signature of the maker or drawer is unauthorized, except that this warranty is not given by a holder in due course acting in good faith

(i) to a maker with respect to the maker's own signature; or

(ii) to a drawer with respect to the drawer's own signature, whether or not the drawer is also the drawee; or

(iii) to an acceptor of a draft if the holder in due course took the draft after the acceptance or obtained the acceptance without knowledge that the drawer's signature was unauthorized; and

(c) the instrument has not been materially altered, except that this warranty is not given by a holder in due course acting in good faith

(i) to the maker of a note; or

(ii) to the drawer of a draft whether or not the drawer is also the drawee; or

(iii) to the acceptor of a draft with respect to an alteration made prior to the acceptance if the holder in due course took the draft after the acceptance, even though the acceptance provided "payable as originally drawn" or equivalent terms; or

(iv) to the acceptor of a draft with respect to an alteration made after the acceptance.

(2) Any person who transfers an instrument and receives consideration warrants to his transferee and if the transfer is by indorsement to any subsequent holder who takes the instrument in good faith that

(a) he has a good title to the instrument or is authorized to obtain payment or acceptance on behalf of one who has a good title and the transfer is otherwise rightful; and

(b) all signatures are genuine or authorized; and

(c) the instrument has not been materially altered; and

(d) no defense of any party is good against him; and

(e) he has no knowledge of any insolvency proceeding instituted with respect to the maker or acceptor or the drawer of an unaccepted instrument.

(3) By transferring "without recourse" the transferor limits the obligation stated in subsection (2)(d) to a warranty that he has no knowledge of such a defense.

(4) A selling agent or broker who does not disclose the fact that he is acting only as such gives the warranties provided in this section, but if he makes such disclosure warrants only his good faith and authority.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 65 and 69, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded; new provisions added.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter:

1. The obligations imposed by this section are stated in terms of warranty. Warranty terms, which are not limited to sale transactions, are used with the intention of bringing in all the usual rules of law applicable to warranties, and in particular the necessity of reliance in good faith and the availability of all remedies for breach of warranty, such as rescission of the transaction or an action for damages. Like other warranties, those stated in this section may be disclaimed by agreement between the immediate parties. In the case of an indorser, disclaimer of his liability as a transferor, to be effective, must appear in the form of the indorsement, and no parol proof of "agreement otherwise" is admissible. For corresponding warranties in the case of items in the bank collection process, Section 4-207 should be consulted.

2. Subsection (1) is new. It is intended to state the undertaking to a party who accepts or pays of one who obtains payment or acceptance or of any prior transferor. It is closely connected with the following section on the finality of acceptance or payment (Section 3-418), and should be read together with it.

3. Subsection (1)(a) retains the generally accepted rule that the party who accepts or pays does not "admit" the genuineness of indorsements, and may recover from the person presenting the instrument when they turn out to be forged. The justification for the distinction between forgery of the signature of the drawer and forgery of an indorsement is that the drawee is in a position to verify the drawer's signature by comparison with one in his hands, but has ordinarily no opportunity to verify an indorsement.

4. Subsection (1)(b) recognizes and deals with competing equities of parties accepting or paying instruments bearing unauthorized maker's or drawer's signatures and those obtaining acceptances or receiving payment. The warranties prescribed and exceptions thereto follow closely principles established at common law, particularly, those under Price v. Neal, 3 Burr. 1354 (1762).

The basic warranty that the person obtaining payment or acceptance and any prior transferor warrants that he has no knowledge that the signature of the maker or drawer is unauthorized stems from the general principle that one who presents an instrument knowing that the signature of the maker or drawer is forged or unauthorized commits an obvious fraud upon the party to whom presentment is made. However, few cases present this simple fact situation. If the signature of a maker or drawer has been forged, the parties include the dishonest forger himself and usually one or more innocent holders taking from him. Frequently, the state of knowledge of a holder is difficult to determine and sometimes a holder takes such a forged instrument in perfect good faith but subsequently learns of the forgery. Since in different fact situations holders have equities of varying strength, it is necessary to have some exceptions to the basic warranty.

The exceptions apply only in favor of a holder in due course and, within the provisions of Section 3-201, to all subsequent transferees from a holder in due course. Since a condition of the status of a holder in due course under Section 3-302(1)(a) is that the holder takes the instrument without notice of any defense against it, this condition presupposes that at the time of taking such a holder had no knowledge of the unauthorized signature. Consequently, the warranty of subsection (1)(b) is pertinent in the case of a holder in due course only in the relatively few cases where he acquires knowledge of the forgery after the taking but before the presentment. In this situation the holder in due course must continue to act in good faith to be exempted from the basic warranty.

The first exemption from the warranty by such a holder, made by subparagraph (i), is that the warranty does not run to a maker of a note with respect to the maker's own signature. This codifies the rule of Price v. Neal, and related cases. Since a maker of a note is presumed to know his own signature, if he fails to detect a forgery of his own signature and pays the note, under the Price v. Neal principle he should not be permitted to recover such payment from a holder in due course acting in good faith. Similarly, under subparagraph (ii) a drawer of a draft is presumed to know his own signature and if he fails to detect a forgery of his signature and pays a draft he may not recover that payment from a holder in due course acting in good faith. This rule applies if the drawer pays the instrument as drawer and also if he pays the instrument as drawee in a case where he is both drawer and drawee.

Under the principle of Price v. Neal a drawee of a draft is presumed to know the signature of his customer, the drawer. However, under subsection (1)(b) and subparagraph (iii) of this subsection this presumption is not strong enough to deprive such a drawee (either in accepting or paying an instrument) of the warranty of no knowledge of the unauthorized drawer's signature, unless the holder in due course took the instrument and became such a holder after the drawee's acceptance; or obtained the acceptance without knowledge that the drawer's signature was unauthorized. In the former case, the holder taking after and thereby presumably in reliance on the acceptance should be protected as against the drawee who accepted without detecting the unauthorized signature. In the latter case the holder, having no knowledge of the unauthorized signature at the time of the drawee's acceptance, would not be charged with this warranty and would be entitled to enforce such acceptance under Section 3-418, even if thereafter he acquired knowledge of the unauthorized signature prior to enforcement of the acceptance. Such right of the holder to enforce the acceptance would be valueless if immediately upon enforcing it and obtaining payment the holder became obligated to return the payment by reason of breach of the warranty of no knowledge at the time of payment.

5. Subsection (1)(c) retains the common law rule, followed by several decisions under the original Act, which has permitted a party paying a materially altered instrument in good faith to recover, and a party who accepts such an instrument to avoid such acceptance. As in the case of subsection (1)(b) this warranty is not imposed against a holder in due course acting in good faith in favor of a maker of a note or a drawer of a draft on the ground that such maker or drawer should know the form and amount of the note or draft which he has signed. The exception made by subparagraph (iii) in the case of a holder in due course of a draft accepted after the alteration follows the decisions in National City Bank of Chicago v. National Bank of Republic of Chicago, 300 Ill. 103, 132 N.E. 832, 22 A.L.R. 1153 (1921), and Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Company v. Bank of Italy, 214 Cal. 156, 4 P.2d 781 (1931), and is based on the principle that an acceptance is an undertaking relied upon in good faith by an innocent party. The attempt to avoid this result by certifying checks "payable as originally drawn" leaves the subsequent purchaser in uncertainty as to the amount for which the instrument is certified, and so defeats the entire purpose of certification, which is to obtain the definite obligation of the bank to honor a definite instrument. Subparagraph (iii) accordingly provides that such language is not sufficient to impose on the holder in due course the warranty of no material alteration where the holder took the draft after the acceptance and presumably in reliance on it.

Subparagraph (iv) of subsection (1)(c) exempts a holder in due course from the warranty of no material alteration to the acceptor of a draft with respect to an alteration made after the acceptance. A drawee accepting a draft has an opportunity of ascertaining the form and particularly the amount of the draft accepted. If, thereafter, the draft is materially altered and is thereupon presented for payment to the acceptor, the acceptor has the necessary information in its records to verify the form and particularly the amount of the draft. If in spite of this available information it pays the draft, there is as much reason to leave the responsibility for such payment upon the acceptor (as against a holder in due course acting in good faith) as there is in the case of a maker or drawer paying a materially altered note or draft.

6. Under Section 3-201 parties taking from or holding under a holder in due course, within the limits of that section, will have the same rights under Section 3-417(1) as a holder in due course. Of course such parties claiming under a holder in due course must act in good faith and be free from fraud, illegality and notice as provided in Section 3-201.

7. The liabilities imposed by subsection (2) in favor of the immediate transferee apply to all persons who transfer an instrument for consideration whether or not the transfer is accompanied by indorsement. Any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract will support those warranties.

8. Subsection (2) changes the original Section 65 to extend the warranties of any indorser beyond the immediate transferee in all cases. Where there is an indorsement the warranty runs with the instrument and the remote holder may sue the indorser-warrantor directly and thus avoid a multiplicity of suits which might be interrupted by the insolvency of an intermediate transferor. The language of subsections (2)(b) and (2)(c) is substituted for "genuine and what it purports to be" in the original Section 65(1). The language of subsection (2)(a) is substituted for that of Section 65(2) in order to cover the case of the agent who transfers for another.

9. Subsection (2)(d) resolves a conflict in the decisions as to whether the transferor warrants that there are no defenses to the instrument good against him. The position taken is that the buyer does not undertake to buy an instrument incapable of enforcement, and that in the absence of contrary understanding the warranty is implied. Even where the buyer takes as a holder in due course who will cut off the defense, he still does not undertake to buy a lawsuit with the necessity of proving his status. Subsection (3) however provides that an indorsement "without recourse" limits the (2)(d) warranty to one that the indorser has no knowledge of such defenses. With this exception the liabilities of a "without recourse" in-dorser under this section are the same as those of any other transferor. Under Section 3-414 "without recourse" in an indorsement is effective to disclaim the general contract of the indorser stated in that section.

10. Subsection (2)(e) is substituted for Section 65(4). The transferor does not warrant against difficulties of collection, apart from defenses, or against impairment of the credit of the obligor or even his insolvency in the commercial sense. The buyer is expected to determine such questions for himself before he takes the obligation. If insolvency proceedings as defined in this Act (Section 1-201) have been instituted against the party who is expected to pay and the transferor knows it, the concealment of that fact amounts to a fraud upon the buyer, and the warranty against knowledge of such proceedings is provided accordingly.

11. Subsection (4) is substituted for Section 69 of the original Act. It applies only to a selling agent, as distinguished from an agent for collection. It follows the rule generally accepted that an agent who makes the disclosure warrants his good faith and authority and may not by contract assume a lesser warranty.

§ 3-418. Finality of Payment or Acceptance.

Except for recovery of bank payments as provided in the Article on Bank Deposits and Collections (Article 4) and except for liability for breach of warranty on presentment under the preceding section, payment or acceptance of any instrument is final in favor of a holder in due course, or a person who has in good faith changed his position in reliance on the payment.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 62, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Completely restated.

Purposes of Changes:

The rewording is intended to remove a number of uncertainties arising under the original section.

1. The section follows the rule of Price v. Neal, 3 Burr. 1354 (1762), under which a drawee who accepts or pays an instrument on which the signature of the drawer is forged is bound on his acceptance and cannot recover back his payment. Although the original Act is silent as to payment, the common law rule has been applied to it by all but a very few jurisdictions. The traditional justification for the result is that the drawee is in a superior position to detect a forgery because he has the maker's signature and is expected to know and compare it; a less fictional rationalization is that it is highly desirable to end the transaction on an instrument when it is paid rather than reopen and upset a series of commercial transactions at a later date when the forgery is discovered.

The rule as stated in the section is not limited to drawees, but applies equally to the maker of a note or to any other party who pays an instrument.

2. The section follows the decisions under the original Act applying the rule of Price v. Neal to the payment of overdrafts, or any other payment made in error as to the state of the drawer's account. The same argument for finality applies, with the additional reason that the drawee is responsible for knowing the state of the account before he accepts or pays.

3. The section follows decisions under the original Act, in making payment or acceptance final only in favor of a holder in due course, or a transferee who has the rights of a holder in due course under the shelter principle. If no value has been given for the instrument the holder loses nothing by the recovery of the payment or the avoidance of the acceptance, and is not entitled to profit at the expense of the drawee; and if he has given only an executory promise or credit he is not compelled to perform it after the forgery or other reason for recovery is discovered. If he has taken the instrument in bad faith or with notice he has no equities as against the drawee.

4. The section rejects decisions under the original Act permitting recovery on the basis of mere negligence of the holder in taking the instrument. If such negligence amounts to a lack of good faith as defined in this Act (Section 1-201) or to notice under the rules (Section 3-304) relating to notice to a purchaser of an instrument, the holder is not a holder in due course and is not protected; but otherwise the holder's negligence does not affect the finality of the payment or acceptance.

5. This section is to be read together with the preceding section, which states the warranties given by the person obtaining acceptance or payment. It is also limited by the bank collection provision (Section 4-301) permitting a payor bank to recover a payment improperly paid if it returns the item or sends notice of dishonor within the limited time provided in that section. But notice that the latter right is sharply limited in time, and terminates in any case when the bank has made final payment, as defined in Section 4-213.

(1) An instrument is converted when

(a) a drawee to whom it is delivered for acceptance refuses to return it on demand; or

(b) any person to whom it is delivered for payment refuses on demand either to pay or to return it; or

(c) it is paid on a forged indorsement.

(2) In an action against a drawee under subsection (1) the measure of the drawee's liability is the face amount of the instrument. In any other action under subsection (1) the measure of liability is presumed to be the face amount of the instrument.

(3) Subject to the provisions of this Act concerning restrictive indorsements a representative, including a depositary or collecting bank, who has in good faith and in accordance with the reasonable commercial standards applicable to the business of such representative dealt with an instrument or its proceeds on behalf of one who was not the true owner is not liable in conversion or otherwise to the true owner beyond the amount of any proceeds remaining in his hands.

(4) An intermediary bank or payor bank which is not a depositary bank is not liable in conversion solely by reason of the fact that proceeds of an item indorsed restrictively (Sections 3-205 and 3-206) are not paid or applied consistently with the restrictive indorsement of an indorser other than its immediate transferor.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 137, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.
Changes: Rule changed; new provisions.
Purposes of Changes and New Matter: To remove difficulties arising under the original section, and to cover additional situations:

1. The provision of the original Section 137 that refusal to return a bill presented for acceptance is deemed to be acceptance has led to difficulties. If the bill is accepted it is not dishonored, and the holder is left without recourse against the drawer and indorsers when he has most need for immediate recourse. The drawee does not in fact accept and does everything he can to display an intention not to accept; and the "acceptance" is useless to the holder for any purpose other than an action against the drawee, since he has nothing that he can negotiate. The original rule has therefore been changed (see Section 3-410).

2. A negotiable instrument is the property of the holder. It is a mercantile specialty which embodies rights against other parties, and a thing of value. This section adopts the generally recognized rule that a refusal to return it on demand is a conversion. The provision is not limited to drafts presented for acceptance, but extends to any instrument presented for payment, including a note presented to the maker. The action is not on the instrument, but in tort for its conversion.

The detention of an instrument voluntarily delivered is not wrongful unless and until there is demand for its return. Demand for a return at a particular time may, however, be made at the time of delivery; or it may be implied under the circumstances or understood as a matter of custom. If the holder is to call for the instrument and fails to do so, he is to be regarded as extending the time. "Refuses" is meant to cover any intentional failure to return the instrument, including its intentional destruction. It does not cover a negligent loss or destruction, or any other unintentional failure to return. In such a case the party may be liable in tort for any damage sustained as a result of his negligence, but he is not liable as a converter under this section.

3. Subsection (1)(c) is new. It adopts the prevailing view of decisions holding that payment on a forged indorsement is not an acceptance, but that even though made in good faith it is an exercise of dominion and control over the instrument inconsistent with the rights of the owner, and results in liability for conversion.

4. Subsection (2) is new. It adopts the rule generally applied to the conversion of negotiable instruments, that the obligation of any party on the instrument is presumed, in the sense that the term is defined in this Act (Section 1-201), to be worth its face value. Evidence is admissible to show that for any reason such as insolvency or the existence of a defense the obligation is in fact worth less, or even that it is without value. In the case of the drawee, however, the presumption is replaced by a rule of absolute liability.

5. Subsection (3), which is new, is intended to adopt the rule of decisions which has held that a representative, such as a broker or depositary bank, who deals with a negotiable instrument for his principal in good faith is not liable to the true owner for conversion of the instrument or otherwise, except that he may be compelled to turn over to the true owner the instrument itself or any proceeds of the instrument remaining in his hands. The provisions of subsection (3) are, however, subject to the provisions of this Act concerning restrictive indorsements (Sections 3-205, 3-206 and related sections).

6. The provisions of this section are not intended to eliminate any liability on warranties of presentment and transfer (Section 3-417). Thus a collecting bank might be liable to a drawee bank which had been subject to liability under this section, even though the collecting bank might not be liable directly to the owner of the instrument.

PART 5

PRESENTMENT, NOTICE OF DISHONOR AND PROTEST

§ 3-501. When Presentment, Notice of Dishonor, and Protest Necessary or Permissible.

(1) Unless excused (Section 3-511) presentment is necessary to charge secondary parties as follows:

(a) presentment for acceptance is necessary to charge the drawer and indorsers of a draft where the draft so provides, or is payable elsewhere than at the residence or place of business of the drawee, or its date of payment depends upon such presentment. The holder may at his option present for acceptance any other draft payable at a stated date;

(b) presentment for payment is necessary to charge any indorser;

(c) in the case of any drawer, the acceptor of a draft payable at a bank or the maker of a note payable at a bank, presentment for payment is necessary, but failure to make presentment discharges such drawer, acceptor or maker only as stated in Section 3-502(1)(b).

(2) Unless excused (Section 3-511)

(a) notice of any dishonor is necessary to charge any indorser;

(b) in the case of any drawer, the acceptor of a draft payable at a bank or the maker of a note payable at a bank, notice of any dishonor is necessary, but failure to give such notice discharges such drawer, acceptor or maker only as stated in Section 3-502(1)(b).

(3) Unless excused (Section 3-511) protest of any dishonor is necessary to charge the drawer and indorsers of any draft which on its face appears to be drawn or payable outside of the states, territories, dependencies and possessions of the United States, the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. The holder may at his option make protest of any dishonor of any other instrument and in the case of a foreign draft may on insolvency of the acceptor before maturity make protest for better security.

(4) Notwithstanding any provision of this section, neither presentment nor notice of dishonor nor protest is necessary to charge an indorser who has indorsed an instrument after maturity.

As amended in 1966.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 70, 89, 118, 129, 143, 144, 150, 151, 152, 157, 158 and 186, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and simplified.

Purposes of Changes:

1. Part 5 simplifies the requirements of the original Act as to presentment for acceptance or payment, notice of dishonor and protest. This section assembles in one place all provisions as to when any such proceeding is necessary. It eliminates some of the requirements and simplifies others. The effect of unexcused delay in any such proceeding as a discharge is covered by the next section, and the sections following prescribe the details of the proceedings.

2. The words "Necessary to charge" are retained from the original Act. They mean that the necessary proceeding is a condition precedent to any right of action against the drawer or indorser. He is not liable and cannot be sued without the proceedings however long delayed. Under some circumstances delay is excused. If it is not excused it may operate as a discharge under the next section. Under some circumstances the proceeding may be entirely excused and the drawer or indorser is then liable as if the proceeding had been duly taken. Section 3-511 states the circumstances under which delay may be excused or the proceeding entirely excused.

3. Subsection (1)(a) retains the substance of the original Sections 143, 144 and 150. The last sentence of the subsection states the rule of the decisions both at common law and under the original Act, that the holder may at his option present any time draft for acceptance, and is not required to wait until the due date to know whether the drawee will accept it; but that if he does make presentment and acceptance is refused he must give notice of dishonor. There is no similar right to present for acceptance a draft payable on demand, since a demand draft entitles the holder to immediate payment but not to acceptance.

4. Subsections (1)(b) and (1)(c) on presentment for payment follow Section 70 of the original Act with one important change. Under the original Act and under this section ((1)(b)) presentment for payment is necessary (unless excused) to charge any drawer. Under the original Act drawers of drafts other than checks were wholly discharged by a failure to make due presentment but drawers of checks (Section 70 in conjunction with Section 186) were discharged only "to the extent of the loss caused by the delay"—that is to say, when insolvency of the drawee bank occurred after the time when presentment was due. The check rule of the original Act (somewhat modified—see Section 3-502(1)(b) and Comment thereto) is by subsection (1)(c) extended to all drawers, and also to the acceptors and makers of domiciled—"payable at a bank"—drafts and notes. Thus drawers of drafts other than checks are not, as they were under Section 70, wholly discharged by failure to make due presentment but, like drawers of checks, are discharged only as they may have suffered loss as provided in Section 3-502(1)(b). As to domiciled paper original Section 70 provided that ability and willingness to pay at the place named at maturity were "equivalent to a tender of payment"—that is to say would stop the running of interest, but had no other effect. Accordingly cases have held that makers and acceptors of domiciled paper were not discharged to any extent by the holder's failure to make presentment even when the obligor had funds available in the paying bank on the date for presentment and the bank subsequently failed. Subsection (1)(c) applies the check rule to such makers and acceptors; the "tender" language of Section 70 is eliminated; and the result in the cases referred to in the preceding sentence is reversed. Under this section as under the original act presentment for payment is not necessary to charge primary parties (makers and acceptors of undomiciled paper).

5. Under subsection (2) the rules as to necessity of notice of dishonor run parallel with the rules as to necessity of presentment stated in subsection (1).

6. Under the original Sections 129 and 152 protest is required in the case of every "foreign draft", defined as a draft which on its face is not both drawn and payable "within this state." The result has been that upon dishonor in New York a check which appears on its face to be drawn in Jersey City must be protested in order to sue the drawer or any indorser. This has led to great inconvenience and expense of protest fees. The only function of protest is that of proof of dishonor, and it adds nothing to notice of dishonor as such.

Subsection (3) eliminates the requirement of protest except upon dishonor of a draft which on its face appears to be either drawn or payable outside of the states, territories, dependencies and possessions of the United States, the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. The requirement is left as to such international drafts because it is generally required by foreign law, which this Article cannot affect. The formalities of protest are covered by Section 3-509 on protest, and substitutes for protest as proof of dishonor are provided for in Section 3-510 on evidence of dishonor and of notice. [This paragraph was amended in 1966].

This provision retains from the original Section 118 the rule permitting the holder at his option to make protest of any dishonor of any other instrument. Even where not required protest may have definite convenience where process does not run to another state and the taking of depositions is a slow and expensive matter. Even where the instrument is drawn and payable entirely within a state there may be convenience in saving the trip of a witness from Buffalo to New York to testify to dishonor, where the substitute evidence of dishonor and notice of dishonor cannot be relied on. Either required or optional protest is presumptive evidence of dishonor. (Section 3-510.)

7. The permissible "protest for better security" of original Section 158 is retained in the case of a foreign draft, as the practice is common in certain foreign countries.

8. Under the final sentence of Section 7 of the original Act an instrument indorsed when overdue became payable on demand as to the indorser. That language has been deleted from this Article—see Section 3-108 and Comment. It meant, among other things and in view of the provisions of the original Act as to demand paper, that such an indorser was discharged unless the instrument was presented for payment within a reasonable time after his indorsement. Presentment of overdue paper for the purpose of charging an indorser is unusual and not an expected commercial practice; the rule has been little more than a trap for those not familiar with the Act. Subsection (4), reversing the original Act, provides that as to indorsers after maturity neither presentment nor notice of dishonor nor protest is necessary; like primary parties therefore they will remain liable on the instrument for the period of the applicable statute of limitations.

(2) Where without excuse a necessary protest is delayed beyond the time when it is due any drawer or indorser is discharged.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 7, 70, 89, 144, 150, 152 and 186, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and simplified.

Purposes of Changes:

This section is the complement of the preceding section. It covers in one section widely scattered provisions of the original Act:

1. The circumstances under which presentment or notice of dishonor or protest or delay therein are excused are stated in Section 3-511. When not excused delay operates as a discharge as provided in this section.

2. Subsection (1)(b) applies to any drawer, as well as to the makers and acceptors of drafts and notes payable at a bank, the rule of the original Section 186 providing for discharge only where the drawer of a check has sustained loss through the delay. This section expressly limits the rule to loss sustained through insolvency of the drawee or payor which was the only type of loss to which the Section 186 rule has ever been applied in the cases arising under it.

The purpose of the rule is to avoid hardship upon the holder through complete discharge, and unjust enrichment of the drawer or other party who normally has received goods or other consideration for the issue of the instrument. He is "deprived of funds" in any case where bank failure or other insolvency of the drawee or payor has prevented him from receiving the benefit of funds which would have paid the instrument if it had been duly presented.

The original language discharging the drawer "to the extent of the loss caused by the delay" has not worked out satisfactorily in the decided cases, since the amount of the loss caused by the failure of a bank is almost never ascertainable at the time of suit and may not be ascertained until some years later. The decisions have turned upon burden of proof, and the drawer has seldom succeeded in proving his discharge. Subsection (1)(b) therefore substitutes a right to discharge liability by written assignment to the holder of rights against the drawee or payor as to the funds which cover the particular instrument. The assignment is intended to give the holder an effective right to claim against the drawee or payor.

3. Subsection (2) retains the rule of the original Section 152, that any unexcused delay of a required protest is a complete discharge of all drawers and indorsers.

§ 3-503. Time of Presentment.

(1) Unless a different time is expressed in the instrument the time for any presentment is determined as follows:

(a) where an instrument is payable at or a fixed period after a stated date any presentment for acceptance must be made on or before the date it is payable;

(b) where an instrument is payable after sight it must either be presented for acceptance or negotiated within a reasonable time after date or issue whichever is later;

(c) where an instrument shows the date on which it is payable presentment for payment is due on that date;

(d) where an instrument is accelerated presentment for payment is due within a reasonable time after the acceleration;

(e) with respect to the liability of any secondary party presentment for acceptance or payment of any other instrument is due within a reasonable time after such party becomes liable thereon.

(2) A reasonable time for presentment is determined by the nature of the instrument, any usage of banking or trade and the facts of the particular case. In the case of an uncertified check which is drawn and payable within the United States and which is not a draft drawn by a bank the following are presumed to be reasonable periods within which to present for payment or to initiate bank collection:

(a) with respect to the liability of the drawer, thirty days after date or issue whichever is later; and

(b) with respect to the liability of an indorser, seven days after his indorsement.

(3) Where any presentment is due on a day which is not a full business day for either the person making presentment or the party to pay or accept, presentment is due on the next following day which is a full business day for both parties.

(4) Presentment to be sufficient must be made at a reasonable hour, and if at a bank during its banking day.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 71, 72, 75, 85, 86, 144, 145, 146, 186 and 193, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and simplified; new provisions.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter:

1. This section states in one place all of the rules applicable to the time of presentment. Excused delay is covered by Section 3-511 on waiver and excuse, and the effect of unexcused delay by Section 3-502 on discharge.

The original Section 86, as to the determination of the time of payment by calculation from the day the time is to run, is omitted as superfluous. It states a rule universally applied to all time calculations in the law of contracts, and has no special application to negotiable instruments. No change in the law is intended.

2. Subsection (1) contains new provisions stating the commercial understanding as to the presentment of instruments payable after sight, and of accelerated paper.

3. Subsection (2) retains the substance of the original Section 193 as to the determination of a reasonable time. It provides specific time limits which are presumed, as that term is defined in this Act (Section 1-201), to be reasonable for uncertified checks drawn and payable within the continental limits of the United States. The court-made time limit of one day after the receipt of the instrument found in decisions under the original Act has proved to be too short a time for some holders, such as the department store or other large business clearing many checks through its books shortly after the first of the month, as well as the farmer or other individual at a distance from a bank.

The time limit provided differs as to drawer and indorser. The drawer, who has himself issued the check and normally expects to have it paid and charged to his account is reasonably required to stand behind it for a longer period, especially in view of the protection now provided by Federal Deposit Insurance. The thirty days specified coincides with the time after which a purchaser has notice that a check has become stale (Section 3-304(3)(c)). The indorser, who has normally merely received the check and passed it on, and does not expect to have to pay it, is entitled to know more promptly whether it is to be dishonored, in order that he may have recourse against the person with whom he has dealt.

4. Subsection (3) replaces the original Sections 85 and 146. It is intended to make allowance for the increasing practice of closing banks or businesses on Saturday or other days of the week. It is not intended to mean that any drawee or obligor can avoid dishonor of instruments by extended closing.

5. Subsection (4) eliminates the provision of the original Section 75 permitting presentment "at any hour before the bank is closed" if the drawer has no funds in the bank. The change is made to avoid inconvenience to the bank.

"Banking day" is defined in Section 4-104.

§ 3-504. How Presentment Made.

(1) Presentment is a demand for acceptance or payment made upon the maker, acceptor, drawee or other payor by or on behalf of the holder.

(2) Presentment may be made

(a) by mail, in which event the time of presentment is determined by the time of receipt of the mail; or

(b) through a clearing house; or

(c) at the place of acceptance or payment specified in the instrument or if there be none at the place of business or residence of the party to accept or pay. If neither the party to accept or pay nor anyone authorized to act for him is present or accessible at such place presentment is excused.

(3) It may be made

(a) to any one of two or more makers, acceptors, drawees or other payors; or

(b) to any person who has authority to make or refuse the acceptance or payment.

(4) A draft accepted or a note made payable at a bank in the United States must be presented at such bank.

(5) In the cases described in Section 4-210 presentment may be made in the manner and with the result stated in that section.

As amended in 1962.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 72, 73, 77, 78 and 145, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and simplified.

Purposes of Changes:

1. This section is intended to simplify the rules as to how presentment is made and to make it clear that any demand upon the party to pay is a presentment no matter where or how. Former technical requirements of exhibition of the instrument and the like are not required unless insisted upon by the party to pay (Section 3-505).

2. Paragraph (a) of subsection (2) authorizes presentment by mail directly to the obligor. The presentment is sufficient and the instrument is dishonored by non-acceptance or nonpayment even though the party making presentment may be liable for improper collection methods. "Through a clearing-house" means that presentment is not made when the demand reaches the clearing-house, but when it reaches the obligor. Section 4-210 should also be consulted for the methods of presenting which may properly be employed by a collecting bank. Subsection (5) of this section makes it clear that presentment made under Section 4-210 is proper presentment.

3. Paragraph (a) of subsection (3) eliminates the requirement of the original Sections 78 and 145(1) that presentment be made to each of two or more makers, acceptors or drawees unless they are partners or one has authority to act for the others. The holder is entitled to expect that any one of the named parties will pay or accept, and should not be required to go to the trouble and expense of making separate presentment to a number of them.

4. Section 3-412 provides that an acceptance made payable at a bank in the United States does not vary the draft. Subsection (4) of this section makes it clear that a draft so accepted must be presented at the bank so designated. The same rule is applied to notes made payable at a bank. The rule of the subsection is in conformity with the provisions of Section 3-501 on presentment and Section 3-502 on the effect of failure to make presentment with reference to domiciled paper [This paragraph was amended in 1962].

§ 3-505. Rights of Party to Whom Presentment Is Made.

(1) The party to whom presentment is made may without dishonor require

(a) exhibition of the instrument; and

(b) reasonable identification of the person making presentment and evidence of his authority to make it if made for another; and

(c) that the instrument be produced for acceptance or payment at a place specified in it, or if there be none at any place reasonable in the circumstances; and

(d) a signed receipt on the instrument for any partial or full payment and its surrender upon full payment.

(2) Failure to comply with any such requirement invalidates the presentment but the person presenting has a reasonable time in which to comply and the time for acceptance or payment runs from the time of compliance.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 74, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.
Changes: Expanded and modified.
Purposes of Changes: To supplement the provisions as to how presentment is made, by permitting the party to whom it is made to insist on additional requirements:

1. In the first instance a mere demand for acceptance or payment is sufficient presentment, and if the payment is unqualifiedly refused nothing more is required. The party to whom presentment is made may, however, require exhibition of the instrument, its production at the proper place, identification of the party making presentment, and a signed receipt on the instrument, or its surrender on full payment. Failure to comply with any such requirement invalidates the presentment and means that the instrument is not dishonored. The time for presentment is, however, extended to give the person presenting a reasonable opportunity to comply with the requirements.

2. "Reasonable identification" means identification reasonable under all the circumstances. If the party on whom demand is made knows the person making presentment, no requirement of identification is reasonable, while if the circumstances are suspicious a great deal may be required. The requirement applies whether the instrument presented is payable to order or to bearer.

§ 3-506. Time Allowed for Acceptance or Payment.

(1) Acceptance may be deferred without dishonor until the close of the next business day following presentment. The holder may also in a good faith effort to obtain acceptance and without either dishonor of the instrument or discharge of secondary parties allow postponement of acceptance for an additional business day.

(2) Except as a longer time is allowed in the case of documentary drafts drawn under a letter of credit, and unless an earlier time is agreed to by the party to pay, payment of an instrument may be deferred without dishonor pending reasonable examination to determine whether it is properly payable, but payment must be made in any event before the close of business on the day of presentment.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 136, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.
Changes: Expanded.
Purposes of Changes: The original section covered only the time allowed to the drawee on presentment for acceptance. This section also covers the time allowed on presentment for payment.

Section 5-112 (Time Allowed for Honor) states the time, longer than here provided, during which a bank to which drafts are presented under a letter of credit may defer payment or acceptance without dishonor of the drafts. As to drafts drawn under a letter of credit Section 5-112 of course controls.

Section 4-301 on deferred posting should be consulted for the right of a payor bank to recover tentative settlements made by it on the day an item is received. That right does not survive final payment (Section 4-213).

§ 3-507. Dishonor; Holder's Right of Recourse; Term Allowing Re-presentment.

(1) An instrument is dishonored when

(a) a necessary or optional presentment is duly made and due acceptance or payment is refused or cannot be obtained within the prescribed time or in case of bank collections the instrument is seasonably returned by the midnight deadline (Section 4-301); or

(b) presentment is excused and the instrument is not duly accepted or paid.

(2) Subject to any necessary notice of dishonor and protest, the holder has upon dishonor an immediate right of recourse against the drawers and indorsers.

(3) Return of an instrument for lack of proper indorsement is not dishonor.

(4) A term in a draft or an indorsement thereof allowing a stated time for re-presentment in the event of any dishonor of the draft by nonacceptance if a time draft or by nonpayment if a sight draft gives the holder as against any secondary party bound by the term an option to waive the dishonor without affecting the liability of the secondary party and he may present again up to the end of the stated time.

Changes: Reworded.

Purposes of Changes:

1. The language of the section is changed in accordance with the provisions of the preceding section as to the time allowed for acceptance or payment.

2. Subsection (3) is new. It states general banking and commercial understanding. The time within which a payor bank must return items, and the methods of returning, are stated in Section 4-301. Under Section 3-411(3) a bank may certify an item so returned.

§ 3-508. Notice of Dishonor.

(1) Notice of dishonor may be given to any person who may be liable on the instrument by or on behalf of the holder or any party who has himself received notice, or any other party who can be compelled to pay the instrument. In addition an agent or bank in whose hands the instrument is dishonored may give notice to his principal or customer or to another agent or bank from which the instrument was received.

(2) Any necessary notice must be given by a bank before its midnight deadline and by any other person before midnight of the third business day after dishonor or receipt of notice of dishonor.

(3) Notice may be given in any reasonable manner. It may be oral or written and in any terms which identify the instrument and state that it has been dishonored. A misdescription which does not mislead the party notified does not vitiate the notice. Sending the instrument bearing a stamp, ticket or writing stating that acceptance or payment has been refused or sending a notice of debit with respect to the instrument is sufficient.

(4) Written notice is given when sent although it is not received.

(5) Notice to one partner is notice to each although the firm has been dissolved.

(6) When any party is in insolvency proceedings instituted after the issue of the instrument notice may be given either to the party or to the representative of his estate.

(7) When any party is dead or incompetent notice may be sent to his last known address or given to his personal representative.

(8) Notice operates for the benefit of all parties who have rights on the instrument against the party notified.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 90 through 108, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and simplified.

Purposes of Changes: To simplify notice of dishonor and eliminate many of the detailed requirements of the original Act:

1. Notice is normally given by the holder or by an indorser who has himself received notice. Subsection (1) is intended to encourage and facilitate notice of dishonor by permitting any party who may be compelled to pay the instrument to notify any party who may be liable on it. Thus an indorser may notify another indorser who is not liable to the one who gives notice, even when the latter has not received notice from any other party to the instrument.

2. Except as to collecting banks, as to whom Section 4-212 controls, the time within which necessary notice must be given is extended to three days after dishonor or receipt of notice from another party. In the case of individuals the one-day time limit of the original Act has proved too short in many cases. It is extended to give the party a margin of time within which to ascertain what is required of him and get out an ordinary business letter. This time leeway eliminates the elaborate provisions as to the time of mailing in the original Sections 103 and 104.

3. Subsection (3) retains the substance of the original Sections 95 and 96. The provision approves the bank practice of returning the instrument bearing a stamp, ticket or other writing, or a notice of debit of the account, as sufficient notice. Subsection (4) retains the substance of the original Section 105.

4. Subsection (7) permits notice to be sent to the last known address of a party who is dead or incompetent rather than to his personal representative. The provision is intended to save time, as the name of the personal representative often cannot easily be ascertained, and mail addressed to the original party will reach the representative.

§ 3-509. Protest; Noting for Protest.

(1) A protest is a certificate of dishonor made under the hand and seal of a United States consul or vice consul or a notary public or other person authorized to certify dishonor by the law of the place where dishonor occurs. It may be made upon information satisfactory to such person.

(2) The protest must identify the instrument and certify either that due presentment has been made or the reason why it is excused and that the instrument has been dishonored by non-acceptance or nonpayment.

(3) The protest may also certify that notice of dishonor has been given to all parties or to specified parties.

(4) Subject to subsection (5) any necessary protest is due by the time that notice of dishonor is due.

(5) If, before protest is due, an instrument has been noted for protest by the officer to make protest, the protest may be made at any time thereafter as of the date of the noting.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 153, 154, 155, 156, 158 and 160, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and simplified.

Purposes of Changes:

1. Protest is not necessary except on drafts drawn or payable outside of the United States. Section 3-501(3) which also permits the holder at his option to make protest on dishonor of any other instrument. This section is intended to simplify either necessary or optional protest when it is made.

2. "Protest" has been used to mean the act of making protest, and sometimes loosely to refer to the entire process of presentment, notice of dishonor and protest. In this Article it is given its original, technical meaning, that of the official certificate of dishonor.

3. Subsection (1) adds to the notary public the United States consul or vice consul, and any other person authorized to certify dishonor by the law of the place where dishonor occurs. It eliminates the requirement of the original Section 156 that protest must be made at the place of dishonor. It eliminates also the provision of the original Section 154 permitting protest by "any respectable resident of the place where the bill is dishonored, in the presence of two or more credible witnesses." This has at least left uncertainty as to the identity and credibility of the persons certifying, and has almost never been used. Any necessary delay in finding the proper officer to make protest is excused under Section 3-511.

4. "Information satisfactory to such person" does away with the requirement occasionally stated, that the person making protest must certify as of his own knowledge. The requirement has been more honored in the breach than in the observance, and in practice protest has been made upon hearsay which the officer regards as reliable, upon the admission of the person who has dishonored, or at most upon re-presentment, which is only indirect proof of the original dishonor. There is seldom any possible motive for false protest, and the basis on which it is made is never questioned. Subsection (1) leaves to the certifying officer the responsibility for determining whether he has satisfactory information. The provision is not intended to affect any personal liability of the officer for making a false certificate.

5. The protest need not be in any particular form, so long as it certifies the matters stated in Subsection (2). It need not be annexed to the instrument, and may be forwarded separately; but annexation may identify the instrument. If the instrument is lost, destroyed, or wrongfully withheld, protest is still sufficient if it identifies the instrument; but the owner must prove his rights as in any action under this Article on a lost, destroyed or stolen instrument (Section 3-804).

6. Subsection (3) recognizes the practice of including in the protest a certification that notice of dishonor has been given to all parties or to specified parties. The next section makes such a certification presumptive evidence that the notice has been given.

7. Protest is normally forwarded with notice of dishonor. Subsection (4) extends the time for making a necessary protest to coincide with the time for giving notice of dishonor. Any delay due to circumstances beyond the holder's control is excused under Section 3-511 on waiver or excuse. Any protest which is not necessary but merely optional with the holder may be made at any time before it is used as evidence.

8. Subsection (5) retains from the original Section 155 the provision permitting the officer to note the protest and extend it formally later.

§ 3-510. Evidence of Dishonor and Notice of Dishonor.

The following are admissible as evidence and create a presumption of dishonor and of any notice of dishonor therein shown:

(a) a document regular in form as provided in the preceding section which purports to be a protest;

(b) the purported stamp or writing of the drawee, payor bank or presenting bank on the instrument or accompanying it stating that acceptance or payment has been refused for reasons consistent with dishonor;

(c) any book or record of the drawee, payor bank, or any collecting bank kept in the usual course of business which shows dishonor, even though there is no evidence of who made the entry.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes: This section is new. It states the effect of protest as evidence, and provides two substitutes for protest as proof of dishonor:

1. Paragraph (a) states the generally accepted rule that a protest is not only admissible as evidence, but creates a presumption, as that term is defined in this Act (Section 1-201), of the dishonor which it certifies. The rule is extended to include the giving of any notice of dishonor certified by the protest. The provision also relieves the holder of the necessity of proving that a document regular in form which purports to be a protest is authentic, or that the person making it was qualified. Nothing in the provision is intended to prevent the obligor from overthrowing the presumption by evidence that there was in fact no dishonor, that notice was not given, or that the protest is not authentic or not made by a proper officer.

2. Paragraph (b) recognizes as the full equivalent of protest the stamp, ticket or other writing of the drawee, payor or presenting bank. The drawee's statement that payment is refused on account of insufficient funds always has been commercially acceptable as full proof of dishonor. It should be satisfactory evidence in any court. It is therefore made admissible, and creates a presumption of dishonor. The provision applies only where the stamp or writing states reasons for refusal which are consistent with dishonor. Thus the following reasons for refusal are not evidence of dishonor, but of justifiable refusal to pay or accept:

Indorsement missing
Signature missing
Signature illegible
Forgery
Payee altered
Date altered

Post dated
Not on us

On the other hand the following reasons are satisfactory evidence of dishonor, consistent with due presentment, and are within this provision:

Not sufficient funds
Account garnisheed
No account
Payment stopped

3. Paragraph (c) recognizes as the full equivalent of protest any books or records of the drawee, payor bank or any collecting bank kept in its usual course of business, even though there is no evidence of who made the entries. The provision, as well as that of paragraph (b), rests upon the inherent improbability that bank records, or those of the drawee, will show any dishonor which has not in fact occurred, or that the holder will attempt to proceed on the basis of dishonor if he could in fact have obtained payment.

§ 3-511. Waived or Excused Presentment, Protest or Notice of Dishonor or Delay Therein.

(1) Delay in presentment, protest or notice of dishonor is excused when the party is without notice that it is due or when the delay is caused by circumstances beyond his control and he exercises reasonable diligence after the cause of the delay ceases to operate.

(2) Presentment or notice or protest as the case may be is entirely excused when

(a) the party to be charged has waived it expressly or by implication either before or after it is due; or

(b) such party has himself dishonored the instrument or has countermanded payment or otherwise has no reason to expect or right to require that the instrument be accepted or paid; or

(c) by reasonable diligence the presentment or protest cannot be made or the notice given.

(3) Presentment is also entirely excused when

(a) the maker, acceptor or drawee of any instrument except a documentary draft is dead or in insolvency proceedings instituted after the issue of the instrument; or

(b) acceptance or payment is refused but not for want of proper presentment.

(4) Where a draft has been dishonored by nonacceptance a later presentment for payment and any notice of dishonor and protest for nonpayment are excused unless in the meantime the instrument has been accepted.

(5) A waiver of protest is also a waiver of presentment and of notice of dishonor even though protest is not required.

(6) Where a waiver of presentment or notice or protest is embodied in the instrument itself it is binding upon all parties; but where it is written above the signature of an indorser it binds him only.

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 79, 80, 81, 82, 109, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 130, 147, 148, 150, 151, 159, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and simplified.

Purposes of Changes: This section combines widely scattered sections of the original act, and is intended to simplify the rules as to when presentment, notice or protest is excused:

1. The single term "excused" is substituted for "excused," "dispensed with," "not necessary," "not required," as used variously in the original act. No change in meaning is intended.

2. Subsection (1) combines provisions found in the original Sections 81, 113, 147 and 159. Delay in making presentment either for payment or for acceptance, in giving notice of dishonor or in making protest is excused when the party has acted with reasonable diligence and the delay is not his fault. This is true where an instrument has been accelerated without his knowledge, or demand has been made by a prior holder immediately before his purchase. It is true under any other circumstances where the delay is beyond his control. The words "not imputable to his default, misconduct or negligence" found in the original Sections 81, 113 and 159 are omitted as superfluous, but no change in substance is intended.

3. Any waived presentment, notice or protest is excused, as under the original Sections 82, 109, 110 and 111. The waiver may be express or implied, oral or written, and before or after the proceeding waived is due. It may be, and often is, a term of the instrument when it is issued. Subsection (5) retains as standard commercial usage the meaning attached by the original Section 111 to "protest waived."

4. Paragraph (b) of subsection (2) combines the substance of provisions found in the original Sections 79, 80, 114, 115 and 130. A party who has no right to require or reason to expect that the instrument will be honored is not entitled to presentment, notice or protest. This is of course true where he has himself dishonored the instrument or has countermanded payment. It is equally true, for example, where he is an accommodated party and has himself broken the accommodation agreement.

5. Paragraph (c) of subsection (2) combines provisions found in the original Sections 82(1), 112 and 159. The excuse is established only by proof that reasonable diligence has been exercised without success, or that reasonable diligence would in any case have been unsuccessful.

6. Paragraph (a) of subsection (3) is new. It excuses presentment in situations where immediate payment or acceptance is impossible or so unlikely that the holder cannot reasonably be expected to make presentment. He is permitted instead to have his immediate recourse upon the drawer or indorser, and let the latter file any necessary claim in probate or insolvency proceedings. The exception for the documentary draft is to preserve any profit on the resale of goods for the creditors of the drawee if his representative can find the funds to pay.

7. Paragraph (b) of subsection (3) extends the original Section 148(3) to include any case where payment or acceptance is definitely refused and the refusal is not on the ground that there has been no proper presentment. The purpose of presentment is to determine whether or not the maker, acceptor or drawee will pay or accept; and when that question is clearly determined the holder is not required to go through a useless ceremony. The provision applies to a definite refusal stating no reasons.

8. Subsection (4) retains the rule of the original Sections 116 and 151.

9. Subsection (6) retains the rule of original Section 110.

PART 6
DISCHARGE

§ 3-601. Discharge of Parties.

(1) The extent of the discharge of any party from liability on an instrument is governed by the sections on

(a) payment or satisfaction (Section 3-603); or

(b) tender of payment (Section 3-604); or

(c) cancellation or renunciation (Section 3-605); or

(d) impairment of right of recourse or of collateral (Section 3-606); or

(e) reacquisition of the instrument by a prior party (Section 3-208); or

(f) fraudulent and material alteration (Section 3-407); or

(g) certification of a check (Section 3-411); or

(h) acceptance varying a draft (Section 3-412); or

(i) unexcused delay in presentment or notice of dishonor or protest (Section 3-502).

(2) Any party is also discharged from his liability on an instrument to another party by any other act or agreement with such party which would discharge his simple contract for the payment of money.

(3) The liability of all parties is discharged when any party who has himself no right of action or recourse on the instrument

(a) reacquires the instrument in his own right; or

(b) is discharged under any provision of this Article, except as otherwise provided with respect to discharge for impairment of recourse or of collateral (Section 3-606).

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 119, 120 and 121, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Portions of original sections combined and reworded; new provisions.

Purposes of Changes:

1. Subsection (1) contains an index referring to all of the sections of this Article which provide for the discharge of any party. The list is exclusive so far as the provisions of this Article are concerned, but it is not intended to prevent or affect any discharge arising apart from this statute, as for example a discharge in bankruptcy or a statutory provision for discharge if the instrument is negotiated in a gaming transaction.

2. A negotiable instrument is in itself merely a piece of paper bearing a writing, and strictly speaking is incapable of being discharged. The parties are rather discharged from liability on their contracts on the instrument. The language of the original Section 119 as to discharge of the instrument itself has left uncertainties as to the effect of the discharge upon the rights of a subsequent holder in due course. It is therefore eliminated, and this section now distinguishes instead between the discharge of a single party and the discharge of all parties.

So far as the discharge of any one party is concerned a negotiable instrument differs from any other contract only in the special rules arising out of its character to which paragraphs (a) to (i) of subsection (1) are an index, and in the effect of the discharge against a subsequent holder in due course (Section 3-602). Subsection (2) therefore retains from the original Section 119(4) the provision for discharge by "any other act which will discharge a simple contract for the payment of money," and specifically recognizes the possibility of a discharge by agreement.

The discharge of any party is a defense available to that party as provided in sections on rights of those who are and are not holders in due course (Sections 3-305 and 3-306). He has the burden of establishing the defense (Section 3-307).

3. Subsection (3) substitutes for the "discharge of the instrument" the discharge of all parties from liability on their contracts on the instrument. It covers a part of the substance of the original Section 119(1), (2) and (5), the original Section 120(1) and (3), and the original Section 121(1) and (2). It states a general principle in lieu of the original detailed provisions. The principle is that all parties to an instrument are discharged when no party is left with rights against any other party on the paper.

When any party reacquires the instrument in his own right his own liability is discharged; and any intervening party to whom he was liable is also discharged as provided in Section 3-208 on reacquisition. When he is left with no right of action against an intervening party and no right of recourse against any prior party, all parties are obviously discharged. The instrument itself is not necessarily extinct, since it may be reissued or renegotiated with a new and further liability; and if it subsequently reaches the hands of a holder in due course without notice of the discharge he may still enforce it as provided in Section 3-602 on effect of discharge against a holder in due course.

Under Section 3-606 on impairment of recourse or collateral, the discharge of any party discharges those who have a right of recourse against him, except in the case of a release with reservation of rights or a failure to give notice of dishonor. A discharge of one who has himself no right of action or recourse on the instrument may thus discharge all parties. Again the instrument itself is not necessarily extinct, and if it is negotiated to a subsequent holder in due course without notice of the discharge he may enforce it as provided in Section 3-602 on effect of discharge against a holder in due course.

4. The language "any party who has himself no right of action or recourse on the instrument" is substituted for "principal debtor," which is not defined by the original Act and has been misleading. This Article also omits the original Section 192, defining the "person primarily liable." Under Section 3-415 on accommodation parties an accommodation maker or acceptor, although he is primarily liable on the instrument in the sense that he is obligated to pay it without recourse upon another, has himself a right of recourse against the accommodated payee; and his reacquisition or discharge leaves the accommodated party liable to him. The accommodated payee, although he is not primarily liable to others, has no right of action or recourse against the accommodation maker, and his reacquisition or discharge may discharge all parties.

§ 3-602. Effect of Discharge Against Holder in Due Course.

No discharge of any party provided by this Article is effective against a subsequent holder in due course unless he has notice thereof when he takes the instrument.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

The section is intended to remove an uncertainty as to which the original Act is silent. It rests on the principle that any discharge of a party provided under any section of this Article is a personal defense of the party, which is cut off when a subsequent holder in due course takes the instrument without notice of the defense. Thus where an instrument is paid without surrender such a subsequent purchase cuts off the defense. This section applies only to discharges arising under the provisions of this Article, and it has no application to any discharge arising apart from it, such as a discharge in bankruptcy.

Under Section 3-304(1)(b) on notice to purchaser it is possible for a holder to take the instrument in due course even though he has notice that one or more parties have been discharged, so long as any party remains undischarged. Thus he may take with notice that an indorser of a note has been released, and still be a holder in due course as to the liability of the maker. In that event, the holder in due course is subject to the defense of the discharge of which he had notice when he took the instrument.

§ 3-603. Payment or Satisfaction.

(1) The liability of any party is discharged to the extent of his payment or satisfaction to the holder even though it is made with knowledge of a claim of another person to the instrument unless prior to such payment or satisfaction the person making the claim either supplies indemnity deemed adequate by the party seeking the discharge or enjoins payment or satisfaction by order of a court of competent jurisdiction in an action in which the adverse claimant and the holder are parties. This subsection does not, however, result in the discharge of the liability

(a) of a party who in bad faith pays or satisfies a holder who acquired the instrument by theft or who (unless having the rights of a holder in due course) holds through one who so acquired it; or

(b) of a party (other than an intermediary bank or a payor bank which is not a depositary bank) who pays or satisfies the holder of an instrument which has been restrictively indorsed in a manner not consistent with the terms of such restrictive indorsement.

(2) Payment or satisfaction may be made with the consent of the holder by any person including a stranger to the instrument. Surrender of the instrument to such a person gives him the rights of a transferee (Section 3-201).

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 51, 88, 119, 121 and 171–177, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Parts of original sections combined and reworded; law changed.

Purposes of Changes: This section changes the law as follows:

1. It eliminates the "payment in due course" found in the original Sections 51, 88 and 119. "Payment in due course" discharged all parties where it was made by one who has no right of recourse on the instrument; but this is true of any other discharge of such a party, and is now covered by Section 3-601(3) on discharge of parties. Such payment was effective as a discharge against a subsequent purchaser; but since it is made at or after maturity of the instrument a purchaser with notice of that fact cannot be a holder in due course, and one who takes without notice of the payment and the maturity should be protected against failure to take up the instrument. The matter is now covered by Section 3-602.

2. The original Sections 171–177 provide for payment of a draft "for honor" after protest. The practice originated at a time when communications were slow and difficult, and in overseas transactions there might be a delay of several months before the drawer could act upon any dishonor. It provided a method by which a third party might intervene to protect the credit of the drawer and at the same time preserve his own rights. Cable, telegraph and telephone have made the practice obsolete for nearly a century, and it is today almost entirely unknown. It has been replaced by the cable transfer, the letter of credit and numerous other devices by which a substitute arrangement is promptly made. "Payment for honor" is therefore eliminated; and subsection (2) now provides that any person may pay with the consent of the holder.

3. Payment to the holder discharges the party who makes it from his own liability on the instrument, and a part payment discharges him pro tanto. The same is true of any other satisfaction. Subsection (1) changes the law by eliminating the requirement of the original Section 88 that the payment be made in good faith and without notice that the title of the holder is defective. It adopts as a general principle the position that a payor is not required to obey an order to stop payment received from an indorser. However, this general principle is qualified by the provisions of subsection (1)(a) and (b) respecting persons who acquire an instrument by theft, or through a restrictive indorsement (Section 3-205). These provisions are thus consistent with Section 3-306 covering the rights of one not a holder in due course.

When the party to pay is notified of an adverse claim to the instrument he has normally no means of knowing whether the assertion is true. The "unless" clause of subsection (1) follows statutes which have been passed in many states on adverse claims to bank deposits. The paying party may pay despite notification of the adverse claim unless the adverse claimant supplies indemnity deemed adequate by the paying party or procures the issuance of process restraining payment in an action in which the adverse claimant and the holder of the instrument are both parties. If the paying party chooses to refuse payment and stand suit, even though not indemnified or enjoined, he is free to do so, although, under Section 3-306(d) on the rights of one not a holder in due course, except where theft or taking through a restrictive indorsement is alleged the payor must rely on the third party claimant to litigate the issue and may not himself defend on such a ground. His contract is to pay the holder of the instrument, and he performs it by making such payment. Except in cases of theft or restrictive indorsement there is no good reason to put him to inconvenience because of a dispute between two other parties unless he is indemnified or served with appropriate process.

4. With the elimination of "payment for honor", subsection (2) provides that with the consent of the holder payment may be made by anyone, including a stranger. The subsection omits the provision of the original Section 121 by which the payor is "remitted to his former rights". It rejects such decisions as Quimby v. Varnum, 190 Mass. 211, 76 N.E. 671 (1906), holding that an irregular indorser who makes payment cannot recover on the instrument. The same result is reached under Section 3-415(5) on accommodation parties. Upon payment and surrender of the paper the payor succeeds to the rights of the holder, subject to the limitation found in Section 3-201 on transfer that one who has himself been a party to any fraud or illegality affecting the instrument or who as a prior holder had notice of a defense or claim against it cannot improve his position by taking from a later holder in due course.

5. Payment discharges the liability of the person making it. It discharges the liability of other parties only as a. The discharge of the payor discharges others who have a right of recourse against him under Section 3-606; or

b. Reacquisition of the instrument discharges intervening parties under Section 3-208 on reacquisition; or

c. The discharge of one who has himself no right of recourse on the instrument discharges all parties under Section 3-601 on discharge of parties.

(1) Any party making tender of full payment to a holder when or after it is due is discharged to the extent of all subsequent liability for interest, costs and attorney's fees.

(2) The holder's refusal of such tender wholly discharges any party who has a right of recourse against the party making the tender.

(3) Where the maker or acceptor of an instrument payable otherwise than on demand is able and ready to pay at every place of payment specified in the instrument when it is due, it is equivalent to tender.

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 70 and 120, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Parts of original sections combined and reworded; new provisions.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter:

1. Subsection (1) is new. It states the generally accepted rule as to the effect of tender.

2. Subsection (2) rewords the original subsection 120(4). The party discharged is one who has a right of recourse against the party making tender, whether the latter be a prior party or a subsequent one who has been accommodated.

3. Subsection (3) rewords the final clause of the first sentence of the original Section 70. Where the instrument is payable at any one of two or more specified places, the maker or acceptor must be able and ready to pay at each of them. The language in original Section 70 was taken to mean that makers and acceptors of notes and drafts payable at a bank were not discharged by failure of a holder to make due presentment of such paper at the designated bank. This Article reverses that rule. See Sections 3-501 on necessity of presentment, 3-504 on how presentment is made, and 3-502 on effect of delay in presentment.

§ 3-605. Cancellation and Renunciation.

(1) The holder of an instrument may even without consideration discharge any party

(a) in any manner apparent on the face of the instrument or the indorsement, as by intentionally cancelling the instrument or the party's signature by destruction or mutilation, or by striking out the party's signature; or

(b) by renouncing his rights by a writing signed and delivered or by surrender of the instrument to the party to be discharged.

(2) Neither cancellation nor renunciation without surrender of the instrument affects the title thereto.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 48, 119(3), 120(2), 122 and 123, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded.

Purposes of Changes:

1. The original Act does not state how cancellation is to be effected, except as to striking indorsements under the original Section 48. It must be done in such a manner as to be apparent on the face of the instrument, and the methods stated, which are supported by the decisions, are exclusive.

2. Subsection (1)(b) restates the original Section 122. The provision as to "discharge of the instrument" is now covered by discharge, Section 3-601(3); that as to subsequent holders in due course by Section 3-602 on effect of discharge against a holder in due course.

3. Subsection (2) is new. It is intended to make it clear that the striking of an indorsement, or any other cancellation or renunciation, does not affect the title.

§ 3-606. Impairment of Recourse or of Collateral.

(1) The holder discharges any party to the instrument to the extent that without such party's consent the holder

(a) without express reservation of rights releases or agrees not to sue any person against whom the party has to the knowledge of the holder a right of recourse or agrees to suspend the right to enforce against such person the instrument or collateral or otherwise discharges such person, except that failure or delay in effecting any required presentment, protest or notice of dishonor with respect to any such person does not discharge any party as to whom presentment, protest or notice of dishonor is effective or unnecessary; or

(b) unjustifiably impairs any collateral for the instrument given by or on behalf of the party or any person against whom he has a right of recourse.

(2) By express reservation of rights against a party with a right of recourse the holder preserves

(a) all his rights against such party as of the time when the instrument was originally due; and

(b) the right of the party to pay the instrument as of that time; and

(c) all rights of such party to recourse against others.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Section 120, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Reworded; new provisions.

Purposes of Changes and New Matter: To make it clear that:

1. The words "any party to the instrument" remove an uncertainty arising under the original section. The suretyship defenses here provided are not limited to parties who are "secondarily liable," but are available to any party who is in the position of a surety, having a right of recourse either on the instrument or dehors it, including an accommodation maker or acceptor known to the holder to be so.

2. Consent may be given in advance, and is commonly incorporated in the instrument; or it may be given afterward. It requires no consideration, and operates as a waiver of the consenting party's right to claim his own discharge.

3. The words "to the knowledge of the holder" exclude the latent surety, as for example the accommodation maker where there is nothing on the instrument to show that he has signed for accommodation and the holder is ignorant of that fact. In such a case the holder is entitled to proceed according to what is shown by the face of the paper or what he otherwise knows, and does not discharge the surety when he acts in ignorance of the relation.

4. This section retains the right of the holder to release one party, or to postpone his time of payment, while expressly reserving rights against others. Subsection (2), which is new, states the generally accepted rule as to the effect of such an express reservation of rights. [Comment 4 was amended in 1966].

5. Paragraph (b) of subsection (1) is new. The suretyship defense stated has been generally recognized as available to indorsers or accommodation parties. As to when a holder's actions in dealing with collateral may be "unjustifiable", the section on rights and duties with respect to collateral in the possession of a secured party (Section 9-207) should be consulted.

PART 7
ADVICE OF INTERNATIONAL SIGHT DRAFT

§ 3-701. Letter of Advice of International Sight Draft.

(1) A "letter of advice" is a drawer's communication to the drawee that a described draft has been drawn.

(2) Unless otherwise agreed when a bank receives from another bank a letter of advice of an international sight draft the drawee bank may immediately debit the drawer's account and stop the running of interest pro tanto. Such a debit and any resulting credit to any account covering outstanding drafts leaves in the drawer full power to stop payment or otherwise dispose of the amount and creates no trust or interest in favor of the holder.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed and except where a draft is drawn under a credit issued by the drawee, the drawee of an international sight draft owes the drawer no duty to pay an unadvised draft but if it does so and the draft is genuine, may appropriately debit the drawer's account.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes: To recognize and clarify, in law, certain established practices of international banking.

1. Checks drawn by one international bank on the account it carries (in a currency foreign to itself) in another international bank are still handled under practices which reflect older conditions, but which have a real, continuing reason in the typical, European rule that a bank paying a check in good faith and in ordinary course can charge its depositor's account notwithstanding forgery of a necessary indorsement. To decrease the risk that forgery will prove successful, the practice is to send a letter of advice that a draft has been drawn and will be forthcoming. Subsection 3 recognizes that a drawer who sends no such letter forfeits any rights for improper dishonor, while still permitting the drawee to protect his delinquent drawer's credit.

2. Subsection (2) clears up for American courts, the meaning of another international practice: that of charging the drawer's account on receipt of the letter of advice. This practice involves no conception of trust or the like and the rule of Section 3-409(1) (Draft not an assignment) still applies. The debit has to do with the payment of interest only. The section recognizes the fact.

PART 8
MISCELLANEOUS

§ 3-801. Drafts in a Set.

(1) Where a draft is drawn in a set of parts, each of which is numbered and expressed to be an order only if no other part has been honored, the whole of the parts constitutes one draft but a taker of any part may become a holder in due course of the draft.

(2) Any person who negotiates, indorses or accepts a single part of a draft drawn in a set thereby becomes liable to any holder in due course of that part as if it were the whole set, but as between different holders in due course to whom different parts have been negotiated the holder whose title first accrues has all rights to the draft and its proceeds.

(3) As against the drawee the first presented part of a draft drawn in a set is the part entitled to payment, or if a time draft to acceptance and payment. Acceptance of any subsequently presented part renders the drawee liable thereon under subsection (2). With respect both to a holder and to the drawer payment of a subsequently presented part of a draft payable at sight has the same effect as payment of a check notwithstanding an effective stop order (Section 4-407).

(4) Except as otherwise provided in this section, where any part of a draft in a set is discharged by payment or otherwise the whole draft is discharged.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: Sections 178–183, Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law.

Changes: Combined and reworded.

Purposes of Changes:

The revised language makes no important change in substance, and is intended only as a clarification and supplementation of the original sections:

1. Drafts in a set customarily contain such language as "Pay _____ this first of exchange (second unpaid)," with equivalent language in the second part. Today a part also commonly bears conspicuous indication of its number. At least the first factor is necessary to notify the holder of his rights, and is therefore necessary in order to make this section apply. Subsection (1) so provides, thus stating in the statute a matter left previously to a commercial practice long uniform but expensive to establish in court.

2. The final sentence of subsection (3) is new. Payment of the part of the draft subsequently presented is improper and the drawee may not charge it to the account of the drawer, but some one has probably been unjustly enriched on the total transaction, at the expense of the drawee. So the drawee is like a bank which has paid a check over an effective stop payment order, and is subrogated as provided in that situation. Section 4-407.

3. A statement in a draft drawn in a set of parts to the effect that the order is effective only if no other part has been honored does not render the draft nonnegotiable as conditional. See Section 3-112(1)(g).

§ 3-802. Effect of Instrument on Obligation for Which It Is Given.

(1) Unless otherwise agreed where an instrument is taken for an underlying obligation

(a) the obligation is pro tanto discharged if a bank is drawer, maker or acceptor of the instrument and there is no recourse on the instrument against the underlying obligor; and

(b) in any other case the obligation is suspended pro tanto until the instrument is due or if it is payable on demand until its presentment. If the instrument is dishonored action may be maintained on either the instrument or the obligation; discharge of the underlying obligor on the instrument also discharges him on the obligation.

(2) The taking in good faith of a check which is not post-dated does not of itself so extend the time on the original obligation as to discharge a surety.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

1. The section is new. It is intended to settle conflicts as to the effect of an instrument as payment of the obligation for which it is given.

2. Where a holder procures certification of a check the drawer is discharged under Section 3-411 on check certification. Thereafter the original obligation is regarded as paid, and the holder must look to the certifying bank. The circumstances may indicate a similar intent in other transactions, and the question may be one of fact for the jury. Subsection (1)(a) states a rule discharging the obligation pro tanto when the instrument taken carries the obligation of a bank as drawer, maker or acceptor and there is no recourse on the instrument against the underlying obligor.

3. It is commonly said that a check or other negotiable instrument is "conditional payment." By this it is normally meant that taking the instrument is a surrender of the right to sue on the obligation until the instrument is due, but if the instrument is not paid on due presentment the right to sue on the obligation is "revived." Subsection (1)(b) states this result in terms of suspension of the obligation, which is intended to include suspension of the running of the statute of limitations. On dishonor of the instrument the holder is given his option to sue either on the instrument or on the underlying obligation. If, however, the original obligor has been discharged on the instrument (see Section 3-601) he is also discharged on the original obligation.

4. Subsection (2) is intended to remove any implication that a check given in payment of an obligation discharges a surety. The check is taken as a means of immediate payment; the thirty day period for presentment specified in Section 3-503 does not affect the surety's liability.

§ 3-803. Notice to Third Party.

Where a defendant is sued for breach of an obligation for which a third person is answerable over under this Article he may give the third person written notice of the litigation, and the person notified may then give similar notice to any other person who is answerable over to him under this Article. If the notice states that the person notified may come in and defend and that if the person notified does not do so he will in any action against him by the person giving the notice be bound by any determination of fact common to the two litigations, then unless after seasonable receipt of the notice the person notified does come in and defend he is so bound.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provisions: None.

Purposes:

The section is new. It is intended to supplement, not to displace existing procedures for interpleader or joinder of parties.

The section conforms to the analogous provision in Section 2-607. It extends to such liabilities as those arising from forged indorsements even though not "on the instrument," and is intended to make it clear that the notification is not effective until received. In Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. First Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 281 N.Y. 162, 22 N.E.2d 324, 123 A.L.R. 1149 (1939), the common-law doctrine of "vouching in" was held inapplicable where the party notified had no direct liability to the party giving the notice. In that case the drawer of a check, sued by the payee whose indorsement had been forged, gave notice to a collecting bank. In a second action the drawee was held liable to the drawer; but in an action by the drawee for judgment over against the collecting bank the determinations of fact in the first action were held not conclusive. This section does not disturb this result; the section is limited to cases where the person notified is "answerable over" to the person giving the notice.

§ 3-804. Lost, Destroyed or Stolen Instruments.

The owner of an instrument which is lost, whether by destruction, theft or otherwise, may maintain an action in his own name and recover from any party liable thereon upon due proof of his ownership, the facts which prevent his production of the instrument and its terms. The court may require security indemnifying the defendant against loss by reason of further claims on the instrument.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

This section is new. It is intended to provide a method of recovery on instruments which are lost, destroyed or stolen. The plaintiff who claims to be the owner of such an instrument is not a holder as that term is defined in this Act, since he is not in possession of the paper, and he does not have the holder's prima facie right to recover under the section on the burden of establishing signatures. He must prove his case. He must establish the terms of the instrument and his ownership, and must account for its absence.

If the claimant testifies falsely, or if the instrument subsequently turns up in the hands of a holder in due course, the obligor may be subjected to double liability. The court is therefore authorized to require security indemnifying the obligor against loss by reason of such possibilities. There may be cases in which so much time has elapsed, or there is so little possible doubt as to the destruction of the instrument and its ownership that there is no good reason to require the security. The requirement is therefore not an absolute one, and the matter is left to the discretion of the court.

§ 3-805. Instruments Not Payable to Order or to Bearer.

This Article applies to any instrument whose terms do not preclude transfer and which is otherwise negotiable within this Article but which is not payable to order or to bearer, except that there can be no holder in due course of such an instrument.

Official Comment

Prior Uniform Statutory Provision: None.

Purposes:

This section covers the "non-negotiable instrument." As it has been used by most courts, this term has been a technical one of art. It does not refer to a writing, such as a note containing an express condition, which is not negotiable and is entirely outside of the scope of this Article and to be treated as a simple contract. It refers to a particular type of instrument which meets all requirements as to form of a negotiable instrument except that it is not payable to order or to bearer. The typical example is the check reading merely "Pay John Doe."

Such a check is not a negotiable instrument under this Article. At the same time it is still a check, a mercantile specialty which differs in many respects from a simple contract. Commercial and banking practice treats it as a check, and a long line of decisions before and after the original Act have made it clear that it is subject to the law merchant as distinguished from ordinary contract law. Although the Negotiable Instruments Law has been held by its terms not to apply to such "non-negotiable instruments" it has been recognized as a codification and restatement of the law merchant, and has in fact been applied to them by analogy.

Thus the holder of the check reading "Pay A" establishes his case by production of the instrument and proof of signatures; and the burden of proving want of consideration or any other defense is upon the obligor. Such a check passes by indorsement and delivery without words of assignment, and the indorser undertakes greater liabilities than those of an assignor. This section resolves a conflict in the decisions as to the extent of that undertaking by providing in effect that the indorser of such an instrument is not distinguished from any indorser of a negotiable instrument. The indorser is entitled to presentment, notice of dishonor and protest, and the procedure and liabilities in bank collection are the same. The rules as to alteration, the filling of blanks, accommodation parties, the liability of signing agents, discharge, and the like are those applied to negotiable instruments.

In short, the "non-negotiable instrument" is treated as a negotiable instrument, so far as its form permits. Since it lacks words of negotiability there can be no holder in due course of such an instrument, and any provision of any section of this Article peculiar to a holder in due course cannot apply to it. With this exception, such instruments are covered by all sections of this Article.

APPENDIX H

1990 Article 1 Amendments Conforming to Revised Article 3

ARTICLE 1
GENERAL PROVISIONS

§ 1-201. General Definitions.

(20) "Holder," ~~means a person who is in possession of a document of title or an instrument or a certificated investment security drawn, issued, or indorsed to him or his order or to bearer or in blank~~ with respect to a negotiable instrument, means the person in possession if the instrument is payable to bearer or, in the case of an instrument payable to an identified person, if the identified person is in possession. "Holder" with respect to a document of title means the person in possession if the goods are deliverable to bearer or to the order of the person in possession.

(24) "Money" means a medium of exchange authorized or adopted by a domestic or foreign government ~~as a part of its currency~~ and includes a monetary unit of account established by an intergovernmental organization or by agreement between two or more nations.

(43) "Unauthorized" signature ~~or indorsement~~ means one made without actual, implied, or apparent authority and includes a forgery.

Official Comment

43. Under the former version of § 1-201(43), it was not clear whether a reference to an "unauthorized signature" in Articles 3 and 4 applied to indorsements. The words "or indorsement" are deleted so that references to "unauthorized signature" in § 3-406 and elsewhere will unambiguously refer to any signature.

§ 1-207. Performance or Acceptance Under Reservation of Rights.

(1) A party who, with explicit reservation of rights, performs or promises performance or assents to performance in a manner demanded or offered by the other party does not thereby prejudice the rights reserved. Such words as "without prejudice", "under protest" or the like are sufficient.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to an accord and satisfaction.

Official Comment

1. This section provides machinery for the continuation of performance along the lines contemplated by the contract despite a pending dispute, by adopting the mercantile device of going ahead with delivery, acceptance, or payment "without prejudice," "under protest," "under reserve," "with reservation of all our rights," and the like. All of these phrases completely reserve all rights within the meaning of this section. The section therefore contemplates that limited as well as general reservations and acceptance by a party may be made "subject to satisfaction of our purchaser," "subject to acceptance by our customers," or the like.

2. This section does not add any new requirement of language of reservation where not already required by law, but merely provides a specific measure on which a party can rely as that party makes or concurs in any interim adjustment in the course of performance. It does not affect or impair the provisions of this Act such as those under which the buyer's remedies for defect survive acceptance without being expressly claimed if notice of the defects is given within a reasonable time. Nor does it disturb the policy of those cases which restrict the effect of a waiver of a defect to reasonable limits under the circumstances, even though no such reservation is expressed.

The section is not addressed to the creation or loss of remedies in the ordinary course of performance but rather to a method of procedure where one party is claiming as of right something which the other believes to be unwarranted.

3. Judicial authority was divided on the issue of whether former Section 1-207 (present subsection (1)) applied to an accord and satisfaction. Typically the cases involved attempts to reach an accord and satisfaction by use of a check tendered in full satisfaction of a claim. Subsection (2) of revised Section 1-207 resolves this conflict by stating that Section 1-207 does not apply to an accord and satisfaction. Section 3-311 of revised Article 3 governs if an accord and satisfaction is attempted by tender of a negotiable instrument as stated in that section. If Section 3-311 does not apply, the issue of whether an accord and satisfaction has been effected is determined by the law of contract. Whether or not Section 3-311 applies, Section 1-207 has no application to an accord and satisfaction.

~~(4)~~(d) In addition, Article 1 contains general definitions and principles of construction and interpretation applicable throughout this Article.

Reason for 1990 Change

The definition of "account" is amended to make clear that it includes both asset accounts in which a customer has deposited money and accounts from which a customer may draw on a line of credit. The remainder of the definition is amended to bring it more into conformity with the definition of "deposit account" in Section 9-105(1)(e).

The definition of "documentary draft" is amended to recognize the existence of uncertificated securities. The reference to "accompanying documents" is deleted as obsolete. It is enough that the documents are to be received by the drawee or other payor before acceptance or payment of the draft.

The definition of "draft" is new and is explained in the Official Comment.

The definition of "drawee" is new and is explained in the Official Comment.

The definition of "item" is amended because the term "instrument" as defined in Section 3-104 and as used in Article 4 is narrower than the term "item." See the Official Comment.

The definition of "properly payable" is deleted. In former Article 4 there is no affirmative definition of the term "properly payable." Former Section 4-104(1)(i) merely implies that if the customer's account is insufficient to pay the item the item is not properly payable. The phrase is defined in proposed Section 4-401(1) in terms of the items authorized by the customer and in accordance with the bank-customer agreement. This is done to give meaning to "properly payable" in Sections 4-401(1) and 4-402(1). The latter provision makes clear that a bank that fails to pay an overdraft has not wrongfully dishonored unless it had agreed to pay the overdraft.

The definition of "settle" is amended in changing "instructed" to "agreed" to conform to Section 4-213.

The terms "remitting bank," "protest," and "second party" are deleted because they are not used in Article 4.

The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-105. "Bank"; "Depositary Bank"; "Payor Bank"; "Intermediary Bank"; "Collecting Bank"; "Presenting Bank"; ~~"Remitting Bank"~~.

In this Article ~~unless the context otherwise requires~~:

(1) "Bank" means a person engaged in the business of banking, including a savings bank, savings and loan association, credit union, or trust company.

~~(a)~~(2) "Depositary bank" means the first bank to ~~which~~ take an item ~~is transferred for collection~~ even though it is also the payor bank*, unless the item is presented for immediate payment over the counter*;

~~(b)~~(3) "Payor bank" means a bank ~~by which an item is payable as drawn or accepted~~ that is the drawee of a draft;

~~(c)~~(4) "Intermediary bank" means ~~any~~ a bank to which an item is transferred in course of collection except the depositary or payor bank;

~~(d)~~(5) "Collecting bank" means ~~any~~ a bank handling ~~the~~ an item for collection except the payor bank;

~~(e)~~(6) "Presenting bank" means ~~any~~ a bank presenting an item except a payor bank~~;~~.

~~(f) "Remitting bank" means any payor or intermediary bank remitting for an item.~~

Reason for 1990 Change

The definition of "bank" is added and is in conformity with that found in Section 4A-105(a)(2). See the Official Comment.

The definition of "depositary bank" is amended. The term "transferred for collection" is too limiting as the purpose for which the item is taken. The amendment makes clear that a payor bank is not also a depositary bank with respect to an item presented for immediate payment over the counter.

The definition of "payor bank" is amended to require that in order for a bank to be a payor bank it must be instructed rather than authorized to pay and that the instruction must be contained in the item. As explained in the Official Comment, this result follows from the use of the defined terms "drawee" and "draft."

The definition of "remitting bank" is deleted because the term is not used in Article 4.

The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-106. Payable Through or Payable at Bank; Collecting Bank.

(a) If an item states that it is "payable through" a bank identified in the item, (i) the item designates the bank as a collecting bank and does not by itself authorize the bank to pay the item, and (ii) the item may be presented for payment only by or through the bank.

Alternative A

(b) If an item states that it is "payable at" a bank identified in the item, the item is equivalent to a draft drawn on the bank.

Alternative B

(b) If an item states that it is "payable at" a bank identified in the item, (i) the item designates the bank as a collecting bank and does not by itself authorize the bank to pay the item, and (ii) the item may be presented for payment only by or through the bank.

(c) If a draft names a nonbank drawee and it is unclear whether a bank named in the draft is a co-drawee or a collecting bank, the bank is a collecting bank.

Reason for 1990 Change

New section. See the Official Comment.

§ ~~4-106~~ 4-107. Separate Office of Bank.

A branch or separate office of a bank ~~[maintaining its own deposit ledgers]~~ is a separate bank for the purpose of computing the time within which and determining the place at or to which action may be taken or notice or orders ~~shall~~ must be given under this Article and under Article 3.

Reason for 1990 Change

The bracketed language in former Section 4-106 is deleted. Today banks keep records on customer accounts by electronic data storage. This has led most banks with branches to centralize to some degree their record keeping. The place where records are kept has little meaning if the information is electronically stored and is instantly retrievable at all branches of the bank. Hence, the inference to be drawn from the deletion of the bracketed language is that where record keeping is done is no longer an important factor in determining whether a branch is a separate bank.

§ ~~4-107~~ 4-108. Time of Receipt of Items.

~~(1)~~(a) For the purpose of allowing time to process items, prove balances, and make the necessary entries on its books to determine its position for the day, a bank may fix an afternoon hour of 2 P.M. or later as a ~~cut-off~~ cutoff hour for the handling of money and items and the making of entries on its books.

~~(2)~~(b) ~~Any~~ An item or deposit of money received on any day after a ~~cut off~~ cutoff hour so fixed or after the close of the banking day may be treated as being received at the opening of the next banking day.

Reason for 1990 Change

Modified to conform with current drafting practices; no intent to change substance.

§ ~~4-108~~ 4-109. Delays.

~~(1)~~(a) Unless otherwise instructed, a collecting bank in a good faith effort to secure payment ~~may, in the case~~ of a specific ~~items~~ item drawn on a payor other than a bank, and with or without the approval of any person involved, may waive, modify, or extend time limits imposed or permitted by this [Act] for a period not ~~in excess of an~~ exceeding two additional banking ~~day~~ days without discharge of ~~secondary parties and without~~ drawers or indorsers or liability to its transferor or ~~any~~ a prior party.

~~(2)~~(b) Delay by a collecting bank or payor bank beyond time limits prescribed or permitted by this [Act] or by instructions is excused if (i) the delay is caused by interruption of communication or computer facilities, suspension of payments by another bank, war, emergency conditions, failure of equipment, or other circumstances beyond the control of the bank ~~provided it~~, and (ii) the bank exercises such diligence as the circumstances require.

Reason for 1990 Change

Subsection (a) is amended to exclude checks and other items drawn on banks from its application so that the provision will not impede the speedy collection of these items. The amended subsection authorizes a collecting bank to take additional time, not in excess of two days, in a good faith effort to collect drafts drawn on nonbank payors with or without the approval of any interested party. The term "secondary parties" is deleted because it is no longer used in Articles 3 and 4. Subsection (b) is amended to make clear that the delay is excused for one of the reasons stated only if the bank exercises such diligence as the circumstances require. With the addition of references to the interruption of computer facilities and the failure of equipment, the permissible reasons for delay enumerated are made to conform to those stated in Regulation CC Section 229.38(e). The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

~~§ 4-109. Process of Posting.~~

~~The "process of posting" means the usual procedure followed by a payor bank in determining to pay an item and in recording the payment including one or more of the following or other steps as determined by the bank:~~

~~(a) verification of any signature;~~

~~(b) ascertaining that sufficient funds are available;~~

~~(c) affixing a "paid" or other stamp;~~

~~(d) entering a charge or entry to a customer's account;~~

~~(e) correcting or reversing an entry or erroneous action with respect to the item.~~

Reason for 1990 Change

This section is deleted. In the former Article the process-of-posting test was a factor in determining when final payment of an item is made (former Section 4-213(1)) and the priority of the "four legals" (former Section 4-303(1)). Difficulties in determining when the events described in former Section 4-109 take place have led California, Nevada, and Texas to reject the process-of-posting test for these purposes. Abolition of the process-of-posting test in favor of more easily determinable time limits is more attuned to a system of automated check collection or electronic presentment.

§ 4-110. Electronic Presentment.

(a) "Agreement for electronic presentment" means an agreement, clearinghouse rule, or Federal Reserve regulation or operating circular, providing that presentment of an item may be made by transmission of an image of an item or information describing the item ("presentment notice") rather than delivery of the item itself. The agreement may provide for procedures governing retention, presentment, payment, dishonor, and other matters concerning items subject to the agreement.

(b) Presentment of an item pursuant to an agreement for presentment is made when the presentment notice is received.

(c) If presentment is made by presentment notice, a reference to "item" or "check" in this Article means the presentment notice unless the context otherwise indicates.

Reason for 1990 Change

New section. See Official Comment.

§ 4-111. Statute of Limitations.

An action to enforce an obligation, duty, or right arising under this Article must be commenced within three years after the [cause of action] accrues.

Reason for 1990 Change

New section. See Official Comment.

§ 4-201. ~~Presumption and Duration of Agency~~ Status of Collecting Banks as Agent and Provisional Status of Credits; Applicability of Article; Item Indorsed "Pay Any Bank".

~~(1)~~(a) Unless a contrary intent clearly appears and ~~prior to~~ before the time that a settlement given by a collecting bank for an item is or becomes final, ~~(subsection (3) of Section 4-211 and Sections 4-212 and 4-213)~~ the bank, with respect to the item, is an agent or sub-agent of the owner of the item and any settlement given for the item is provisional. This provision applies regardless of the form of indorsement or lack of indorsement and even though credit given for the item is subject to immediate withdrawal as of right or is in fact withdrawn; but the continuance of ownership of an item by its owner and any rights of the owner to proceeds of the item are subject to rights of a collecting bank, such as those resulting from outstanding advances on the item and ~~valid~~ rights of recoupment or setoff. ~~When~~ If an item is handled by banks for purposes of presentment, payment ~~and~~, collection, or return, the relevant provisions of this Article apply even though action of the parties clearly establishes that a particular bank has purchased the item and is the owner of it.

~~(2)~~(b) After an item has been indorsed with the words "pay any bank" or the like, only a bank may acquire the rights of a holder until the item has been:

~~(a)~~(1) ~~until the item has been~~ returned to the customer initiating collection; or

~~(b)~~(2) ~~until the item has been~~ specially indorsed by a bank to a person who is not a bank.

Reason for 1990 Change

Subsection (a) is amended to delete the cross references to former Sections 4-211, 4-212 and 4-213. The reason for the deletion is to remove any implication that final settlement is determined only by these provisions. Sections 4-213(c) and (d) and 4-215(c) provide when final settlement occurs with respect to certain kinds of settlements, but these provisions are not intended to be exclusive. Since it is impossible to contemplate all the kinds of settlements that will be utilized, no attempt is made in Article 4 to provide when settlement is final in all cases. "Recoupment" is added to the second sentence to clarify the collecting bank's rights against the item or its proceeds. Terms like "valid" or "binding" have been deleted entirely from Article 4 as superfluous. "Or return" is added to the third sentence to make clear that the effect of the provision is not restricted to the forward collection activities of banks but also extends to their acts in returning items. The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-202. Responsibility for Collection or Return; When Action ~~Seasonable~~ Timely.

~~(1)~~(a) A collecting bank must ~~use~~ exercise ordinary care in*:*

~~(a)~~(1) presenting an item or sending it for presentment; ~~and~~

~~(b)~~(2) sending notice of dishonor or nonpayment or returning an item other than a documentary draft to the bank's transferor ~~[or directly to the depositary bank under subsection (2) of Section 4-212] (see note to Section 4-212)~~ after learning that the item has not been paid or accepted, as the case may be; ~~and~~

~~(c)~~(3) settling for an item when the bank receives final settlement; and

~~(d) making or providing for any necessary protest; and~~

~~(c)~~(4) notifying its transferor of any loss or delay in transit within a reasonable time after discovery thereof.

~~(2) A collecting bank taking proper action before its midnight deadline following receipt of an item, notice or payment acts seasonably; taking proper action within a reasonably longer time may be seasonable but the bank has the burden of so establishing.~~

(b) A collecting bank exercises ordinary care under subsection (a) by taking proper action before its midnight deadline following receipt of an item, notice, or settlement. Taking proper action within a reasonably longer time may constitute the exercise of ordinary care, but the bank has the burden of establishing timeliness.

~~(3)~~(c) Subject to subsection ~~(1)(a)~~ (a)(1), a bank is not liable for the insolvency, neglect, misconduct, mistake*,* or default of another bank or person or for loss or destruction of an item in the possession of others or in transit ~~or in the possession of others~~.

Reason for 1990 Change

The term "timely" is substituted for "seasonable" throughout the section. The bracketed material in paragraph (2) of subsection (a) is deleted because the provision to which it refers in former Section 4-212 is deleted. Paragraph (d) of former subsection (1) is deleted because Article 4 has no requirement of protest. Subsection (b) is a restatement of former subsection (2). The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-203. Effect of Instructions.

Subject to ~~the provisions of~~ Article 3 concerning conversion of instruments (Section ~~3-419~~ 3-420) and ~~the provisions of both Article 3 and this Article concerning~~ restrictive indorsements (Section 3-206), only a collecting bank's transferor can give instructions ~~which~~ that affect the bank or constitute notice to it*,* and a collecting bank is not liable to prior parties for any action taken pursuant to ~~such~~ the instructions or in accordance with any agreement with its transferor.

Reason for 1990 Change

Article 4 no longer has provisions on restrictive indorsements; hence, the reference to "this Article" is deleted. The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-204. Methods of Sending and Presenting; Sending ~~Direct~~ Directly to Payor Bank.

~~(1)~~ (a) A collecting bank ~~must~~ shall send items by a reasonably prompt method*,* taking into consideration ~~any~~ relevant instructions, the nature of the item, the number of ~~such~~ those items on hand, ~~and~~ the cost of collection involved*,* and the method generally used by it or others to present ~~such~~ those items.

~~(2)~~(b) A collecting bank may send*:*

~~(a)~~(1) ~~any~~ an item ~~direct~~ directly to the payor bank;

~~(b)~~(2) ~~any~~ an item to ~~any~~ a nonbank payor if authorized by its transferor; and

~~(c)~~(3) ~~any~~ an item other than documentary drafts to ~~any~~ a nonbank payor, if authorized by Federal Reserve regulation or operating ~~letter~~ circular, ~~clearing house~~ clearing-house rule*,* or the like.

~~(3)~~(c) Presentment may be made by a presenting bank at a place where the payor bank or other payor has requested that presentment be made.

Reason for 1990 Change

Subsection (c) is amended to allow nonbank payors to request a place of payment. The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-205. ~~Supplying Missing Indorsement; No Notice from Prior Indorsement~~ Depositary Bank Holder of Unindorsed Item.

If a customer delivers an item to a depositary bank for collection:

(1) the depositary bank becomes a holder of the item at the time it receives the item for collection if the customer at the time of delivery was a holder of the item, whether or not the customer indorses the item, and, if the bank satisfies the other requirements of Section 3-302, it is a holder in due course; and

(2) the depositary bank warrants to collecting banks, the payor bank or other payor, and the drawer that the amount of the item was paid to the customer or deposited to the customer's account.

~~(1) A depositary bank which has taken an item for collection may supply any indorsement of the customer which is necessary to title unless the item contains the words "payee's indorsement required" or the like. In the absence of such a requirement a statement placed on the item by the depositary bank to the effect that the item was deposited by a customer or credited to his account is effective as the customer's indorsement.~~

~~(2) An intermediary bank, or payor bank which is not a depositary~~

~~bank, is neither given notice nor otherwise affected by a restrictive indorsement of any person except the bank's immediate transferor.~~

Reason for 1990 Change

New section. See Official Comment.

§ 4-206. Transfer Between Banks.

Any agreed method ~~which~~ that identifies the transferor bank is sufficient for the item's further transfer to another bank.

Reason for 1990 Change

Modified to conform with current drafting practices; no intent to change substance.

~~§ 4-207. Warranties of Customer and Collecting Bank on Transfer or Presentment of Items; Time for Claims.~~

~~(1) Each customer or collecting bank who obtains payment or acceptance of an item and each prior customer and collecting bank warrants to the payor bank or other payor who in good faith pays or accepts the item that~~

~~(a) he has a good title to the item or is authorized to obtain payment or acceptance on behalf of one who has a good title; and~~

~~(b) he has no knowledge that the signature of the maker or drawer is unauthorized, except that this warranty is not given by any customer or collecting bank that is a holder in due course and acts in good faith~~

~~(i) to a maker with respect to the maker's own signature; or~~

~~(ii) to a drawer with respect to the drawer's own signature, whether or not the drawer is also the drawee; or~~

~~(iii) to an acceptor of an item if the holder in due course took the item after the acceptance or obtained the acceptance without knowledge that the drawer's signature was unauthorized; and~~

~~(c) the item has not been materially altered, except that this warranty is not given by any customer or collecting bank that is a holder in due course and acts in good faith~~

~~(i) to the maker of a note; or~~

~~(ii) to the drawer of a draft whether or not the drawer is also the drawee; or~~

~~(iii) to the acceptor of an item with respect to an alteration made prior to the acceptance if the holder in due course took the item after the acceptance, even though the acceptance provided "payable as originally drawn" or equivalent terms; or~~

~~(iv) to the acceptor of an item with respect to an alteration made after the acceptance.~~

~~(2) Each customer and collecting bank who transfers an item and receives a settlement or other consideration for it warrants to his transferee and to any subsequent collecting bank who takes the item in good faith that~~

~~(a) he has a good title to the item or is authorized to obtain payment or acceptance on behalf of one who has a good title and the transfer is otherwise rightful; and~~

~~(b) all signatures are genuine or authorized; and~~

~~(c) the item has not been materially altered; and~~

~~(d) no defense of any party is good against him; and~~

~~(e) he has no knowledge of any insolvency proceeding instituted with respect to the maker or acceptor or the drawer of an unaccepted item.~~

~~In addition each customer and collecting bank so transferring an item and receiving a settlement or other consideration engages that upon dishonor and any necessary notice of dishonor and protest he will take up the item.~~

~~(3) The warranties and the engagement to honor set forth in the two preceding subsections arise notwithstanding the absence of indorsement or words of guaranty or warranty in the transfer or presentment and a collecting bank remains liable for their breach despite remittance to its transferor. Damages for breach of such warranties or engagement to honor shall not exceed the consideration received by the customer or collecting bank responsible plus finance charges and expenses related to the item, if any.~~

~~(4) Unless a claim for breach of warranty under this section is made within a reasonable time after the person claiming learns of the breach, the person liable is discharged to the extent of any loss caused by the delay in making claim.~~

Reason for 1990 Change

The section is replaced by Sections 4-207 (transfer warranties) and 4-208 (presentment warranties).

§ 4-207. Transfer Warranties.

(a) A customer or collecting bank that transfers an item and receives a settlement or other consideration warrants to the transferee and to any subsequent collecting bank that:

(1) the warrantor is a person entitled to enforce the item;

(2) all signatures on the item are authentic and authorized;

(3) the item has not been altered;

(4) the item is not subject to a defense or claim in recoupment (Section 3-305(a)) of any party that can be asserted against the warrantor; and

(5) the warrantor has no knowledge of any insolvency proceeding commenced with respect to the maker or acceptor or, in the case of an unaccepted draft, the drawer.

(b) If an item is dishonored, a customer or collecting bank transferring the item and receiving settlement or other consideration is obliged to pay the amount due on the item (i) according to the terms of the item at the time it was transferred, or (ii) if the transfer was of an incomplete item, according to its terms when completed as stated in Sections 3-115 and 3-407. The obligation of a transferor is owed to the transferee and to any subsequent collecting bank that takes the item in good faith. A transferor cannot disclaim its obligation under this subsection by an indorsement stating that it is made "without recourse" or otherwise disclaiming liability.

(c) A person to whom the warranties under subsection (a) are made and who took the item in good faith may recover from the warrantor as damages for breach of warranty an amount equal to the loss suffered as a result of the breach, but not more than the amount of the item plus expenses and loss of interest incurred as a result of the breach.

(d) The warranties stated in subsection (a) cannot be disclaimed with respect to checks. Unless notice of a claim for breach of warranty is given to the warrantor within 30 days after the claimant has reason to know of the breach and the identity of the warrantor, the warrantor is discharged to the extent of any loss caused by the delay in giving notice of the claim.

(e) A cause of action for breach of warranty under this section accrues when the claimant has reason to know of the breach.

Reason for 1990 Change

New section. See Official Comment.

§ 4-208. Presentment Warranties.

(a) If an unaccepted draft is presented to the drawee for payment or acceptance and the drawee pays or accepts the draft, (i) the person obtaining payment or acceptance, at the time of presentment, and (ii) a previous transferor of the draft, at the time of transfer, warrant to the drawee that pays or accepts the draft in good faith that:

(1) the warrantor is, or was, at the time the warrantor transferred the draft, a person entitled to enforce the draft or authorized to obtain payment or acceptance of the draft on behalf of a person entitled to enforce the draft;

(2) the draft has not been altered; and

(3) the warrantor has no knowledge that the signature of the purported drawer of the draft is unauthorized.

(b) A drawee making payment may recover from a warrantor damages for breach of warranty equal to the amount paid by the drawee less the amount the drawee received or is entitled to receive from the drawer because of the payment. In addition, the drawee is entitled to compensation for expenses and loss of interest resulting from the breach. The right of the drawee to recover damages under this subsection is not affected by any failure of the drawee to exercise ordinary care in making payment. If the drawee accepts the draft (i) breach of warranty is a defense to the obligation of the acceptor, and (ii) if the acceptor makes payment with respect to the draft, the acceptor is entitled to recover from a warrantor for breach of warranty the amounts stated in this subsection.

(c) If a drawee asserts a claim for breach of warranty under subsection (a) based on an unauthorized indorsement of the draft or an alteration of the draft, the warrantor may defend by proving that the indorsement is effective under Section 3-404 or 3-405 or the drawer is precluded under Section 3-406 or 4-406 from asserting against the drawee the unauthorized indorsement or alteration.

(d) If (i) a dishonored draft is presented for payment to the drawer or an indorser or (ii) any other item is presented for payment to a party obliged to pay the item, and the item is paid, the person obtaining payment and a prior transferor of the item warrant to the person making payment in good faith that the warrantor is, or was, at the time the warrantor transferred the item, a person entitled to enforce the item or authorized to obtain payment on behalf of a person entitled to enforce the item. The person making payment may recover from any warrantor for breach of warranty an amount equal to the amount paid plus expenses and loss of interest resulting from the breach.

(e) The warranties stated in subsections (a) and (d) cannot be disclaimed with respect to checks. Unless notice of a claim for breach of warranty is given to the warrantor within 30 days after the claimant has reason to know of the breach and the identity of the warrantor, the warrantor is discharged to the extent of any loss caused by the delay in giving notice of the claim.

(f) A cause of action for breach of warranty under this section accrues when the claimant has reason to know of the breach.

Reason for 1990 Change

New section. See Official Comment.

§ 4-209. Encoding and Retention Warranties.

(a) A person who encodes information on or with respect to an item after issue warrants to any subsequent collecting bank and to the payor bank or other payor that the information is correctly encoded. If the customer of a depositary bank encodes, that bank also makes the warranty.

(b) A person who undertakes to retain an item pursuant to an agreement for electronic presentment warrants to any subsequent collecting bank and to the payor bank or other payor that retention and presentment of the item comply with the agreement. If a customer of a depositary bank undertakes to retain an item, that bank also makes this warranty.

(c) A person to whom warranties are made under this section and who took the item in good faith may recover from the warrantor as damages for breach of warranty an amount equal to the loss suffered as a result of the breach, plus expenses and loss of interest incurred as a result of the breach.

Reason for 1990 Change

New section. See Official Comment.

§ ~~4-208~~ 4-210. Security Interest of Collecting Bank in Items, Accompanying Documents and Proceeds.

~~(1)~~(a) A collecting bank has a security interest in an item and any accompanying documents or the proceeds of either*:*

~~(a)~~(1) in case of an item deposited in an account*,* to the extent to which credit given for the item has been withdrawn or applied;

~~(b)~~(2) in case of an item for which it has given credit available for withdrawal as of right, to the extent of the credit given*,* whether or not the credit is drawn upon ~~and whether~~ or ~~not~~ there is a right of charge-back; or

~~(c)~~(3) if it makes an advance on or against the item.

~~(2)~~(b) ~~When~~ If credit ~~which has been~~ given for several items received at one time or pursuant to a single agreement is withdrawn or applied in part*,* the security interest remains upon all the items, any accompanying documents or the proceeds of either. For the purpose of this section, credits first given are first withdrawn.

~~(3)~~(c) Receipt by a collecting bank of a final settlement for an item is a realization on its security interest in the item, accompanying documents, and proceeds. ~~To the extent and so~~ So long as the bank does not receive final settlement for the item or give up possession of the item or accompanying documents for purposes other than collection, the security interest continues to that extent and is subject to ~~the provisions of~~ Article 9*,* ~~except that~~ but:

~~(a)~~(1) no security agreement is necessary to make the security interest enforceable (~~subsection (1)(a) of~~ Section 9-203*(1)(a)*); ~~and~~

~~(b)~~(2) no filing is required to perfect the security interest; and

~~(c)~~(3) the security interest has priority over conflicting perfected security interests in the item, accompanying documents~~,~~ or proceeds.

Reason for 1990 Change

The addition of "collecting" in subsection (a) is a clarification. The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ ~~4-209~~ 4-211. When Bank Gives Value for Purposes of Holder in Due Course.

For purposes of determining its status as a holder in due course, ~~the~~ a bank has given value to the extent ~~that~~ it has a security interest in an item*,* ~~provided that~~ if the bank otherwise complies with the requirements of Section 3-302 on what constitutes a holder in due course.

Reason for 1990 Change

Modified to conform with current drafting practices; no intent to change substance.

§ ~~4-210~~ 4-212. Presentment by Notice of Item Not Payable By, Through, or at Bank; Liability of ~~Secondary Parties~~ Drawer or Indorser.

~~(1)~~(a) Unless otherwise instructed, a collecting bank may present an item not payable by, through*,* or at a bank by sending to the party to accept or pay a written notice that the bank holds the item for acceptance or payment. The notice must be sent in time to be received on or before the day when presentment is due and the bank must meet any requirement of the party to accept or pay under Section ~~3-505~~ 3-501 by the close of the bank's next banking day after it knows of the requirement.

~~(2)~~(b) ~~Where~~ If presentment is made by notice and ~~neither honor~~ payment, acceptance, ~~nor~~ or request for compliance with a requirement under Section ~~3-505~~ 3-501 is not received by the close of business on the day after maturity or*,* in the case of demand items*,* by the close of business on the third banking day after notice was sent, the presenting bank may treat the item as dishonored and charge any ~~secondary party~~ drawer or indorser by sending ~~him~~ it notice of the facts.

Reason for 1990 Change

The term "secondary party" is no longer used in Articles 3 and 4. The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ ~~4-211~~ 4-213. ~~Media of Remittance; Provisional and Final Settlement in Remittance Cases~~ Medium and Time of Settlement by Bank.

~~(1) A collecting bank may take in settlement of an item~~

~~(a) a check of the remitting bank or of another bank on any bank except the remitting bank; or~~

~~(b) a cashier's check or similar primary obligation of a remitting bank which is a member of or clears through a member of the same clearing house or group as the collecting bank; or~~

~~(c) appropriate authority to charge an account of the remitting bank or of another bank with the collecting bank; or~~

~~(d) if the item is drawn upon or payable by a person other than a bank, a cashier's check, certified check or other bank check or obligation.~~

~~(2) If before its midnight deadline the collecting bank properly dishonors a remittance check or authorization to charge on itself or presents or forwards for collection a remittance instrument of or on another bank which is of a kind approved by subsection (1) or has not been authorized by it, the collecting bank is not liable to prior parties in the event of the dishonor of such check, instrument or authorization.~~

~~(3) A settlement for an item by means of a remittance instrument or authorization to charge is or becomes a final settlement as to both the person making and the person receiving the settlement~~

~~(a) if the remittance instrument or authorization to charge is of a kind approved by subsection (1) or has not been authorized by the person receiving the settlement and in either case the person receiving the settlement acts seasonably before its midnight deadline in presenting, forwarding for collection or paying the instrument or authorization, at the time the remittance instrument or authorization is finally paid by the payer by which it is payable;~~

~~(b) if the person receiving the settlement has authorized remittance by a non-bank check or obligation or by a cashier's check or similar primary obligation of or a check upon the payor or other remitting bank which is not of a kind approved by subsection (1)(b),—at the time of the receipt of such remittance check or obligation; or~~

~~(c) if in a case not covered by sub-paragraphs (a) or (b) the person receiving the settlement fails to seasonably present, forward for collection, pay or return a remittance instrument or authorization to it to charge before its midnight deadline,—at such midnight deadline.~~

(a) With respect to settlement by a bank, the medium and time of settlement may be prescribed by Federal Reserve regulations or circulars, clearing-house rules, and the like, or agreement. In the absence of such prescription:

(1) the medium of settlement is cash or credit to an account in a Federal Reserve bank of or specified by the person to receive settlement; and

(2) the time of settlement, is;

(i) with respect to tender of settlement by cash, a cashier's check, or teller's check, when the cash or check is sent or delivered;

(ii) with respect to tender of settlement by credit in an account in a Federal Reserve Bank, when the credit is made:

(iii) with respect to tender of settlement by a credit or debit to an account in a bank, when the credit or debit is made or, in the case of tender of settlement by authority to charge an account, when the authority is sent or delivered; or

(iv) with respect to tender of settlement by a funds transfer, when payment is made pursuant to Section 4A-406(a) to the person receiving settlement.

(b) If the tender of settlement is not by a medium authorized by subsection (a) or the time of settlement is not fixed by subsection (a), no settlement occurs until the tender of settlement is accepted by the person receiving settlement.

(c) If settlement for an item is made by cashier's check or teller's check and the person receiving settlement, before its midnight deadline:

(1) presents or forwards the check for collection, settlement is final when the check is finally paid; or

(2) fails to present or forward the check for collection, settlement is final at the midnight deadline of the person receiving settlement.

(d) If settlement for an item is made by giving authority to charge the account of the bank giving settlement in the bank receiving settlement, settlement is final when the charge is made by the bank receiving settlement if there are funds available in the account for the amount of the item.

Reason for 1990 Change

New section. See the Official Comment. Former Section 4-211 applied only to settlements by remittance instruments and authorities to charge which could be received in settlement by a collecting bank without the collecting bank's being responsible if the remittance wasn't paid. The new section is much broader in stating general rules for all types of settlements with respect to the time settlement is made and the medium which the person receiving settlement must accept. Subsections (c) and (d) apply to the issues treated in former Section 4-211.

§ ~~4-212~~ 4-214. Right of Charge-Back or Refund*; Liability of Collecting Bank; Return of Item.*

~~(1)~~(a) If a collecting bank has made provisional settlement with its customer for an item and ~~itself~~ fails by reason of dishonor, suspension of payments by a bank, or otherwise to receive ~~a~~ settlement for the item which is or becomes final, the bank may revoke the settlement given by it, charge back the amount of any credit given for the item to its customer's account, or obtain refund from its customer, whether or not it is able to return the item~~s~~, if by its midnight deadline or within a longer reasonable time after it learns the facts it returns the item or sends notification of the facts. If the return or notice is delayed beyond the bank's midnight deadline or a longer reasonable time after it learns the facts, the bank may revoke the settlement, charge back the credit, or obtain refund from its customer, but it is liable for any loss resulting from the delay. These rights to revoke, charge back, and obtain refund terminate if and when a settlement for the item received by the bank is or becomes final ~~(subsection (3) of Section 4-211 and subsections (2) and (3) of Section 4-213)~~.

~~[(2) Within the time and manner prescribed by this section and Section 4-301, an intermediary or payor bank, as the case may be, may return an unpaid item directly to the depositary bank and may send for collection a~~

~~draft on the depositary bank and obtain reimbursement. In such case, if the depositary bank has received provisional settlement for the item, it must reimburse the bank drawing the draft and any provisional credits for the item between banks shall become and remain final.]~~

(b) A collecting bank returns an item when it is sent or delivered to the bank's customer or transferor or pursuant to its instructions.

~~(3)~~(c) A depositary bank ~~which~~ that is also the payor may charge back the amount of an item to its customer's account or obtain refund in accordance with the section governing return of an item received by a payor bank for credit on its books (Section 4-301).

~~(4)~~(d) The right to charge back is not affected by*:*

~~(a)~~ (1) ~~prior~~ previous use of ~~the~~ a credit given for the item; or

~~(b)~~ (2) failure by any bank to exercise ordinary care with respect to the item*,* but ~~any~~ a bank so failing remains liable.

~~(5)~~(e) A failure to charge back or claim refund does not affect other rights of the bank against the customer or any other party.

~~(6)~~(f) If credit is given in dollars as the equivalent of the value of an item payable in ~~a~~ foreign ~~currency~~ money, the dollar amount of any charge-back or refund ~~shall~~ must be calculated on the basis of the ~~buying sight~~ bank-offered spot rate for the foreign ~~currency~~ money prevailing on the day when the person entitled to the charge-back or refund learns that it will not receive payment in ordinary course.

Reason for 1990 Change

Subsection (a) is amended by the addition of the second sentence which adopts the view of Appliance Buyers Credit Corp. v. Prospect National Bank, 708 F.2d 290 (7th Cir.1983), that if the midnight deadline for returning an item or giving notice is not met, a collecting bank loses its rights only to the extent of damages for any loss resulting from the delay. The cross references to former Sections 4-211 and 4-213 are deleted. The reason for the deletion is to remove any implication that final settlement is determined by only these provisions. See Reasons for 1990 Change for Section 4-201.

Former subsection (2) is replaced by subsection (b). Former subsection (2) broadly allowed for direct return of all types of unpaid items. The purpose of the amendment is to limit the right of direct return with respect to noncheck items. This purpose is accomplished by subsection (b) when read against the background of Regulation CC Section 229.31 which allows for the direct return of checks but does not apply to noncheck items. Since Regulation CC preempts subsection (b) with respect to checks, the result is that the limitation on direct return found in subsection (b) applies only to noncheck items.

Subsection (f) is amended to conform to the terminology ("bank-offered spot rate") used in Section 3-107.

The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ ~~4-213~~ 4-215. Final Payment of Item by Payor Bank; When Provisional Debits and Credits Become Final; When Certain Credits Become Available For Withdrawal.

~~(1)~~(a) An item is finally paid by a payor bank when the bank has first done any of the following~~, whichever happens first:~~

~~(a)~~(1) paid the item in cash; ~~or~~

~~(b)~~(2) settled for the item without ~~reserving~~ having a right to revoke the settlement ~~and without having such right~~ under statute, ~~clearing house~~ clearing-house rule*,* or agreement; or

(e) completed the process of posting the item to the indicated account of the drawer, maker or other person to be charged therewith; or

(d)(3) made a provisional settlement for the item and failed to revoke the settlement in the time and manner permitted by statute, clearing house clearing-house rule*,* or agreement. Upon a final payment under subparagraph (b), (c) or (d) the payor bank shall be accountable for the amount of the item.

(b) If provisional settlement for an item does not become final, the item is not finally paid.

(2)(c) If provisional settlement for an item between the presenting and payor banks is made through a clearing house or by debits or credits in an account between them, then to the extent that provisional debits or credits for the item are entered in accounts between the presenting and payor banks or between the presenting and successive prior collecting banks seriatim, they become final upon final payment of the items by the payor bank.

(3)(d) If a collecting bank receives a settlement for an item which is or becomes final*,* (subsection (3) of Section 4-211, subsection (2) of Section 4-213) the bank is accountable to its customer for the amount of the item and any provisional credit given for the item in an account with its customer becomes final.

(4)(e) Subject to (i) applicable law stating a time for availability of funds and (ii) any right of the bank to apply the credit to an obligation of the customer, credit given by a bank for an item in an account with its customer a customer's account becomes available for withdrawal as of right*;*

(a)(1) in any case where if the bank has received a provisional settlement for the item, when such the settlement becomes final and the bank has had a reasonable time to learn that the settlement is final receive return of the item and the item has not been received within that time;

(b)(2) in any case where if the bank is both a the depositary bank and a the payor bank*,* and the item is finally paid, at the opening of the bank's second banking day following receipt of the item.

(5)(f) A deposit of money in a bank is final when made but, subject Subject to applicable law stating a time for availability of funds and any right of the a bank to apply the a deposit to an obligation of the customer depositor, the a deposit of money becomes available for withdrawal as of right at the opening of the bank's next banking day following after receipt of the deposit.

Reason for 1990 Change

Subsection (a)(2) is amended to provide that a payor bank cannot make settlement provisional by unilaterally reserving a right to revoke the settlement. The right to revoke must come from a statute (e.g., Section 4-301), clearing-house rule or other agreement. Former subsection (1)(c) is deleted for the reason stated in the Reason for 1990 Change for former Section 4-109. Subsection (a)(3) is amended to remove the final sentence as an unnecessary source of confusion. Initially the view that payor bank may be accountable for, that is, liable for the amount of, an item that it has already paid seems incongruous. This is particularly true in the light of the language formerly found in former Section 4-302 stating that the payor bank can defend against liability for accountability by showing that it has already settled for the item. But, at least with respect to former Section 4-213(1)(c), such a provision was needed because under the process-of-posting test a payor bank may have paid an item without settling for it. Now that Article 4 has abandoned the process-of-posting test, the sentence is no longer needed. If the payor bank has neither paid the item not returned it within its midnight deadline, the payor bank is accountable under Section 4-302.

Subsection (b) was added to clarify the relationship of final settlement to final payment under Section 4-215. For example, if a payor bank makes provisional settlement for an item by sending a cashier's or teller's check and that settlement fails to become final under Section 4-213(c), subsection (b) provides that final payment has not occurred. Under Section 4-302(a) the payor bank is accountable unless it has returned the item before its midnight deadline. In this regard, subsection (b) is an exception to subsection (a)(3). Even if the payor bank has not returned an item by its midnight deadline there is still no final payment if provisional settlement had been made and settlement failed to become final. However, if presentment of the item was over the counter for immediate payment, final payment has occurred under Section 4-215(a)(2). Subsection (b) does not apply because the settlement was not provisional. Section 4-301(a). In this case the presenting person, often the payee of the item, has the right to demand cash or the cash equivalent of federal reserve credit. If the presenting person accepts another medium of settlement such as a cashier's or teller's check, the presenting person takes the risk that the payor bank may fail to pay a cashier's check because of insolvency or that the drawee of a teller's check may dishonor it.

Subsection (d) is amended to delete the cross references to former Sections 4-211 and 4-213. The reason for the deletion is to remove any implication that final settlement is determined by only those provisions. See Reasons for 1990 Change for Section 4-201.

The preamble to subsection (e), as well as subsection (f), is amended to recognize that Regulation CC Sections 229.10–229.13 and the laws of several states (Regulation CC Section 229.20) prescribe times for availability of a depositor's funds. Subsections (e) and (f) are expressly made subject to these funds availability laws. Paragraph (1) of subsection (e) is amended to delete the test that a customer may withdraw funds after the bank has had a reasonable time to "learn that the settlement is final." The depositary bank may never affirmatively learn that a settlement is final. The substituted test is that the bank may delay making funds available to a customer until it has had a reasonable time to receive return of the item and the item has not been returned. The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ ~~4-214~~ 4-216. Insolvency and Preference.

~~(1)~~(a) ~~Any~~ If an item is in or ~~coming~~ comes into the possession of a payor or collecting bank ~~which~~ that suspends payment and ~~which~~ the item ~~is~~ has not been finally paid*, the item* ~~shall~~ must be returned by the receiver, trustee*,* or agent in charge of the closed bank to the presenting bank or the closed bank's customer.

~~(2)~~(b) If a payor bank finally pays an item and suspends payments without making a settlement for the item with its customer or the presenting bank which settlement is or becomes final, the owner of the item has a preferred claim against the payor bank.

~~(3)~~(c) If a payor bank gives or a collecting bank gives or receives a provisional settlement for an item and thereafter suspends payments, the suspension does not prevent or interfere with the settlement*'s* becoming final if ~~such~~ the finality occurs automatically upon the lapse of certain time or the happening of certain events ~~(subsection (3) of Section 4-211, subsections (1)(d), (2) and (3) of Section 4-213)~~.

~~(4)~~(d) If a collecting bank receives from subsequent parties settlement for an item*,* which settlement is or becomes final and the bank suspends payments without making a settlement for the item with its customer which settlement is or becomes final, the owner of the item has a preferred claim against ~~such~~ the collecting bank.

Reason for 1990 Change

Subsection (c) is amended to delete the cross references to former Sections 4-211 and 4-213. The reason for the deletion is to remove any implication that final settlement is determined by only those provisions. See Reasons for 1990 Change for Section 4-201. The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-301. Deferred Posting; Recovery of Payment by Return of Items; Time of Dishonor*; Return of Items by Payor Bank*.

~~(1)~~(a) ~~Where an authorized settlement~~ If a payor bank settles for a demand item ~~(~~other than a documentary draft~~)~~ ~~received by a payor bank~~ presented otherwise than for immediate payment over the counter ~~has been made~~ before midnight of the banking day of receipt, the payor bank may revoke the settlement and recover ~~any payment~~ the settlement if, before it has made final payment ~~(subsection (1) of Section 4-213)~~ and before its midnight deadline, it

~~(a)~~(1) returns the item; or

~~(b)~~(2) sends written notice of dishonor or non-payment if the item is ~~held for protest or is otherwise~~ unavailable for return.

~~(2)~~(b) If a demand item is received by a payor bank for credit on its books, it may return ~~such~~ the item or send notice of dishonor and may revoke any credit given or recover the amount thereof withdrawn by its customer, if it acts within the time limit and in the manner specified in ~~the preceding~~ subsection (a).

~~(3)~~(c) Unless previous notice of dishonor has been sent, an item is dishonored at the time when for purposes of dishonor it is returned or notice sent in accordance with this section.

~~(4)~~(d) An item is returned:

~~(a)~~(1) as to an item ~~received~~ presented through a clearing house, when it is delivered to the presenting or last collecting bank or to the clearing house or is sent or delivered in accordance with clearing-house rules; or

~~(b)~~(2) in all other cases, when it is sent or delivered to the bank's customer or transferor or pursuant to ~~his~~ instructions.

Reason for 1990 Change

The term "authorized settlement" is deleted in subsection (a) because Section 4-213 makes the term superfluous. That section prescribes the medium of settlement that a bank must accept. References to settlement throughout Article 4 assume that settlement was made by tender of the proper medium; hence, the word "settles" in subsection (a) means an authorized settlement. Substitution of "settlement" for "payment" in subsection (a) is consistent with the usage throughout Article 4 in distinguishing the act of settlement from the issue of whether the settlement constitutes final payment. The cross reference to former Section 4-213 is deleted. The reason for the deletion is to remove any implication that final settlement is determined only by that provision. See Reason for 1990 Change for Section 4-201. The reference to protest is deleted in paragraph (2) of subsection (a) because Article 4 no longer deals with protest. The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-302. Payor Bank's Responsibility for Late Return of Item.

~~In the absence of a valid defense such as breach of a presentment warranty (subsection (1) of Section 4-207), settlement effected or the like; if~~

(a) If an item is presented to ~~on~~ and received by a payor bank, the bank is accountable for the amount of*:*

~~(a)~~(1) a demand item*,* other than a documentary draft*,* whether properly payable or not*,* if the bank, in any case ~~where~~ in which it is not also the depositary bank, retains the item beyond midnight of the banking day of receipt without settling for it or, ~~regardless of~~ whether or not it is also the depositary bank, does not pay or return the item or send notice of dishonor until after its midnight deadline; or

~~(b)~~(2) any other properly payable item unless*,* within the time allowed for acceptance or payment of that item*,* the bank either accepts or pays the item or returns it and accompanying documents.

(b) The liability of a payor bank to pay an item pursuant to subsection (a) is subject to defenses based on breach of a presentment warranty (Section 4-208) or proof that the person seeking enforcement of the liability presented or transferred the item for the purpose of defrauding the payor bank.

Reason for 1990 Change

Subsection (b) is added to clarify the deleted introductory language of former Section 4-302: "In the absence of a valid defense such as breach of a presentment warranty (subsection (1) of Section 4-207), settlement effected or the like . . .." A payor bank can defend an action against it based on accountability by showing that the item contained a forged indorsement or a fraudulent alteration. Section 4-208. Proposed subsection (b) drops the ambiguous "or the like" language and provides that the payor bank may also raise the defense of fraud. Decisions that hold an accountable bank's liability to be "absolute" are rejected. A payor bank that makes a late return of an item should not be liable to a defrauder operating a check kiting scheme. In Bank Leumi Trust Co. v. Balley's Park Place Inc., 528 F.Supp. 349 (S.D.N.Y.1981), and American National Bank v. Foodbasket, 497 P.2d 546 (Wyo.1972), banks that were accountable under Section 4-302 for missing their midnight deadline were successful in defending against parties who initiated collection knowing that the check would not be paid. The "settlement effected" language is deleted as unnecessary. If a payor bank is accountable for an item it is liable to pay it. If it has made final payment for an item, it is no longer accountable for the item. The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-303. When Items Subject to Notice, ~~Stop Order~~ Stop-Payment Order, Legal Process*,* or Setoff; Order in Which Items May be Charged or Certified.

~~(1)~~(a) Any knowledge, notice*,* or ~~stop order~~ stop-payment order received by, legal process served upon*,* or setoff exercised by a payor bank~~, whether or not effective under other rules of law~~ comes too late to terminate, suspend*,* or modify the bank's right or duty to pay an item or to charge its customer's account for the item~~, comes too late to so terminate, suspend or modify such right or duty~~ if the knowledge, notice, ~~stop order~~ stop-payment order, or legal process is received or served and a reasonable time for the bank to act thereon expires or the setoff is exercised after the ~~bank has done any~~ earliest of the following:

~~(a)~~(1) ~~accepted or certified~~ the bank accepts or certifies the item;

~~(b)~~(2) ~~paid~~ the bank pays the item in cash;

~~(c)~~(3) the bank settles ~~settled~~ for the item without ~~reserving~~ having a right to revoke the settlement ~~and without having such right~~ under statute, ~~clearing house~~ clearing-house rule*,* or agreement;

~~(d) completed the process of posting the item to the indicated account of the drawer, maker or other person to be charged therewith or~~

~~otherwise has evidenced by examination of such indicated account and by action its decision to pay the item; or~~

~~(e)~~(4) ~~become~~ the bank becomes accountable for the amount of the item under ~~subsection (1)(d) of Section 4-213 and~~ Section 4-302 dealing with the payor bank's responsibility for late return of items~~.~~; or

(5) with respect to checks, a cutoff hour no earlier than one hour after the opening of the next banking day after the banking day on which the bank received the check and no later than the close of that next banking day or, if no cutoff hour is fixed, the close of the next banking day after the banking day on which the bank received the check.

~~(2)~~(b) Subject to ~~the provisions of~~ subsection ~~(1)~~ (a), items may be accepted, paid, certified, or charged to the indicated account of its customer in any order ~~convenient to the bank~~.

Reason for 1990 Change

The preamble of subsection (a) is restated in order to improve comprehension. Paragraphs (1)–(4) of subsection (a) are restated to accommodate the addition of paragraph (5) which is stated in terms of the reaching of a cutoff hour rather than the doing of an act. Subsection (a)(3) is amended to conform to Section 4-215(a)(2) which provides that a payor bank cannot make settlement provisional by unilaterally reserving a right to revoke the settlement. The right to revoke must come from a statute (e.g. Section 4-301), a clearing-house rule or other agreement. Former subsection (1)(d) is deleted for the reason stated in the Reason for 1990 Change for former Section 4-109. The reference to former Section 4-213 is deleted from subsection (a)(4) because the reference to accountability in former Section 4-213 is deleted from what is now Section 4-215.

Subsection (a)(5) is added to allow payor banks, under time pressure to return checks to meet Regulation CC deadlines, to fix a cutoff hour earlier than the close of the next banking day after the banking day on which the checks are received. Banks must have time after receiving an attachment or effecting a setoff to return a check if the attachment or setoff renders the customer's account insufficient to pay the check. Since banks are now returning checks earlier during the next banking day after the banking day of receipt owing to Regulation CC, they need a cutoff hour earlier than the close of the banking day after that of receipt because they may be returning their checks before the close of that banking day.

Subsection (b) is amended to delete "convenient to the bank" as being superfluous. The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-401. When Bank May Charge Customer's Account.

~~(1)~~(a) ~~As against its customer, a~~ A bank may charge against ~~his~~ the account ~~any~~ of a customer an item ~~which~~ that is ~~otherwise~~ properly payable from that account even though the charge creates an overdraft. An item is properly payable if it is authorized by the customer and is in accordance with any agreement between the customer and bank.

(b) A customer is not liable for the amount of an overdraft if the customer neither signed the item nor benefited from the proceeds of the item.

(c) A bank may charge against the account of a customer a check that is otherwise properly payable from the account, even though payment was made before the date of the check, unless the customer has given notice to the bank of the postdating describing the check with reasonable certainty. The notice is effective for the period stated in Section 4-403(b) for stop-payment orders, and must be received at such time and in such manner as to afford the bank a reasonable opportunity to act on it before the bank takes any action with respect to the check described in Section 4-303. If a bank charges against the account of a customer a check before the date stated in the notice of postdating, the bank is liable for damages for the loss resulting from its act. The loss may include damages for dishonor of subsequent items under Section 4-402.

~~(2)~~(d) A bank ~~which~~ that in good faith makes payment to a holder may charge the indicated account of its customer according to*:*

~~(a)~~(1) the original ~~tenor~~ terms of ~~his~~ the altered item; or

~~(b)~~(2) the ~~tenor~~ terms of ~~his~~ the completed item, even though the bank knows the item has been completed unless the bank has notice that the completion was improper.

Reason for 1990 Change

Subsection (a) is amended by the addition of the second sentence which provides a more general definition of "properly payable" than the narrow definition that was contained in former Section 4-104(1)(i). An item is properly payable from a customer's account if the customer has authorized the payment and the payment does not violate the customer-bank agreement concerning the account. An item drawn for more than the balance of the customer's account may be properly payable.

Subsection (b) is added to adopt the view of case authority holding that if there is more than one customer who can draw on an account, the nonsigning customer is not liable for an overdraft unless that person benefits from the proceeds of the item.

Subsection (c) is added because the automated check collection system cannot accommodate postdated checks. A check is usually paid upon presentment without respect to the date of the check. Under the former law, if a payor bank paid a postdated check before its stated date, it could not charge the customer's account because the check was not "properly payable." Hence, the bank might have been liable for wrongfully dishonoring subsequent checks of the drawer that would have been paid had the postdated check not been prematurely paid. Under subsection (c) a customer wishing to postdate a check must notify the payor bank of its post-dating in time to allow the bank to act on the customer's notice before the bank has to commit itself to pay the check. If the bank fails to act on the customer's timely notice, it may be liable for damages for the resulting loss which may include damages for dishonor of subsequent items.

The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-402. Bank's Liability to Customer for Wrongful Dishonor*; Time of Determining Insufficiency of Account*.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this Article, a payor bank wrongfully dishonors an item if it dishonors an item that is properly payable, but a bank may dishonor an item that would create an overdraft unless it has agreed to pay the overdraft.

(b) A payor bank is liable to its customer for damages proximately caused by the wrongful dishonor of an item. ~~When the dishonor occurs through mistake liability~~ Liability is limited to actual damages proved~~. If so proximately caused and proved damages~~ and may include damages for an arrest or prosecution of the customer or other consequential damages. Whether any consequential damages are proximately caused by the wrongful dishonor is a question of fact to be determined in each case.

(c) A payor bank's determination of the customer's account balance on which a decision to dishonor for insufficiency of available funds is based may be made at any time between the time the item is received by the payor bank and the time that the payor bank returns the item or gives notice in lieu of return, and no more than one determination need be made. If, at the election of the payor bank, a subsequent balance determination is made for the purpose of reevaluating the bank's decision to dishonor the item, the account balance at that time is determinative of whether a dishonor for insufficiency of available funds is wrongful.

Reason for 1990 Change

Subsection (a) is added for the purpose of stating positively what has been assumed under the original Article: that if a bank fails to honor a properly payable item it may be liable to its customer for wrongful dishonor. Subsection (b) is amended for clarification. Under this subsection the payor bank's wrongful dishonor of an item gives rise to a statutory cause of action. Damages may include consequential damages. Confusion has resulted from the attempts of courts to reconcile the first and second sentences of former Section 4-402. The second sentence implied that the bank was liable for some form of damages other than those proximately caused by the dishonor if the dishonor was other than by mistake. But nothing in the section described what these noncompensatory damages might be. Some courts have held that in distinguishing between mistaken dishonors and nonmistaken dishonors, the so-called "trader" rule has been retained that allowed a "merchant or trader" to recover substantial damages for wrongful dishonor without proof of damages actually suffered. Comment 3 to former Section 4-402 indicated that this was not the intent of the drafters. White & Summers, Uniform Commercial Code, Section 18-4 (1988), states: "The negative implication is that when wrongful dishonors occur not 'through mistake' but willfully, the court may impose damages greater than 'actual damages' . . .. Certainly the reference to 'mistake' in the second sentence of 4-402 invites a court to adopt the relevant pre-Code distinction." Subsection (b) by deleting the reference to mistake in the second sentence precludes any inference that Section 4-402 retains the "trader" rule. Whether a bank is liable for noncompensatory damages, such as punitive damages, must be decided by Section 1-103 and Section 1-106 ("by other rule of law").

Subsection (c) is added for clarification. Banks commonly determine whether there are sufficient funds in an account to pay an item after the close of banking hours on the day of presentment when they post debit and credit items to the account. The determination is made on the basis of credits available for withdrawal as of right or made available for withdrawal by the bank as an accommodation to its customer. When it is determined that payment of the item would overdraw the account, the item may be returned at any time before the bank's midnight deadline the following day. Before the item is returned new credits that are withdrawable as of right may have been added to the account. Subsection (c) eliminates uncertainty under Article 4 as to whether the failure to make a second determination before the item is returned on the day following presentment is a wrongful dishonor if new credits were added to the account on that day that would have covered the amount of the check.

§ 4-403. Customer's Right to Stop Payment; Burden of Proof of Loss.

~~(1)~~(a) A customer ~~may by order to his bank stop payment of any item payable for his account but the order must be~~ or any person authorized to draw on the account if there is more than one person may stop payment of any item drawn on the customer's account or close the account by an order to the bank describing the item or account with reasonable certainty received at ~~such~~ a time and in ~~such~~ a manner ~~as to~~ that affords the bank a reasonable opportunity to act on it ~~prior to~~ before any action by the bank with respect to the item described in Section 4-303. If the signature of more than one person is required to draw on an account, any of these persons may stop payment or close the account.

~~(2) An oral order is binding upon the bank only for fourteen calendar days unless confirmed in writing within that period. A written order is effective for only six months unless renewed in writing.~~ calendar days if the original order was oral and was not confirmed in writing within that period. A stop-payment order may be renewed for additional six-month periods by a writing given to the bank within a period during which the stop-payment order is effective.

(b) A stop-payment order is effective for six months, but it lapses after 14

~~(3)~~(c) The burden of establishing the fact and amount of loss resulting from the payment of an item contrary to a ~~binding stop payment~~ stop-payment order or order to close an account is on the customer. The loss from payment of an item contrary to a stop-payment order may include damages for dishonor of subsequent items under Section 4-402.

Reason for 1990 Change

Subsection (a) removes any ambiguity that may have been present under former subsection (1) by making clear that if there is more than one person authorized to draw on a customer's account any one of them can stop payment of any check drawn on the account or can order the account closed. Moreover, if there is a customer, such as a corporation, that requires its checks to bear the signatures of more than one person, any of these persons may stop payment on a check. In describing the item, the customer, in the absence of a contrary agreement, must meet the standard of what information allows the bank under the technology then existing to identify the item with reasonable certainty. An order to close an account is assimilated to an order to stop payment in this section and in Section 4-407.

Subsection (b) restates and clarifies former subsection (2). Subsection (c) is amended by the addition of the last sentence to provide expressly for what was only assumed under the former section: that a customer's damages for payment contrary to a stop-payment order may include damages for wrongful dishonor of subsequent items. The word "binding" is deleted as superfluous.

The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-405. Death or Incompetence of Customer.

~~(1)~~(a) A payor or collecting bank's authority to accept, pay*,* or collect an item or to account for proceeds of its collection*,* if otherwise effective*,* is not rendered ineffective by incompetence of a customer of either bank existing at the time the item is issued or its collection is undertaken if the bank does not know of an adjudication of incompetence. Neither death nor incompetence of a customer revokes ~~such~~ the authority to accept, pay, collect*,* or account until the bank knows of the fact of death or of an adjudication of incompetence and has reasonable opportunity to act on it.

~~(2)~~(b) Even with knowledge*,* a bank may for 10 days after the date of death pay or certify checks drawn on or ~~prior to~~ before that date unless ordered to stop payment by a person claiming an interest in the account.

Reason for 1990 Change

Modified to conform with current drafting practices; no intent to change substance.

§ 4-406. Customer's Duty to Discover and Report Unauthorized Signature or Alteration.

~~(1) When a bank sends to its customer a statement of account accompanied by items paid in good faith in support of the debit entries or holds the statement and items pursuant to a request for instructions of its customer or otherwise in a reasonable manner makes the statement and items available to the customer, the customer must exercise reasonable care and promptness to examine the statement and items to discover his unauthorized signature or any alteration on an item and must notify the bank promptly after discovery thereof.~~

(a) A bank that sends or makes available to a customer a statement of account showing payment of items for the account shall either return or make available to the customer the items paid or provide information in the statement of account sufficient to allow the customer reasonably to identify the items paid. The statement of account provides sufficient information if the item is described by item number, amount, and date of payment.

(b) If the items are not returned to the customer, the person retaining the items shall either retain the items or, if the items are destroyed, maintain the capacity to furnish legible copies of the items until the expiration of seven years after receipt of the items. A customer may request an item from the bank that paid the item, and that bank must provide in a reasonable time either the item or, if the item has been destroyed or is not otherwise obtainable, a legible copy of the item.

(c) If a bank sends or makes available a statement of account or items pursuant to subsection (a), the customer must exercise reasonable promptness in examining the statement or the items to determine whether any payment was not authorized because of an alteration of an item or because a purported signature by or on behalf of the customer was not authorized. If, based on the statement or items provided, the customer should reasonably have discovered the unauthorized payment, the customer must promptly notify the bank of the relevant facts.

~~(2)~~(d) If the bank ~~establishes~~ proves that the customer failed, with respect to an item, to comply with the duties imposed on the customer by subsection ~~(1)~~ (c), the customer is precluded from asserting against the bank*;*

~~(a)~~(1) ~~his~~ the customer's unauthorized signature or any alteration on the item, if the bank also ~~establishes~~ proves that it suffered a loss by reason of ~~such~~ the failure; and

~~(b)~~(2) ~~an~~ the customer's unauthorized signature or alteration by the same wrongdoer on any other item paid in good faith by the bank ~~after the first item and statement was available to the customer for a reasonable period not exceeding fourteen calendar days and before the bank receives notification from the customer of any such unauthorized signature or alteration~~ if the payment was made before the bank received notice from the customer of the unauthorized signature or alteration and after the customer had been afforded a reasonable period of time, not exceeding 30 days, in which to examine the item or statement of account and notify the bank.

~~(3) The preclusion under subsection (2) does not apply if the customer establishes lack of ordinary care on the part of the bank in paying the item(s).~~

(e) If subsection (d) applies and the customer proves that the bank failed to exercise ordinary care in paying the item and that the failure substantially contributed to loss, the loss is allocated between the customer precluded and the bank asserting the preclusion according to the extent to which the failure of the customer to comply with subsection (c) and the failure of the bank to exercise ordinary care contributed to the loss. If the customer proves that the bank did not pay the item in good faith, the preclusion under subsection (d) does not apply.

~~(4)~~(f) Without regard to care or lack of care of either the customer or the bank, a customer who does not within one year ~~from the time~~ after the statement ~~and~~ or items are made available to the customer (subsection ~~(1)~~ (a)) discover and report ~~his~~ the customer's unauthorized signature on or any alteration ~~on the face or back of the item or does not within 3 years from that time discover and report any unauthorized indorsement~~ on the item is precluded from asserting against the bank ~~such~~ the unauthorized signature ~~or indorsement~~ or ~~such~~ alteration. If there is a preclusion under this subsection, the payor bank may not recover for breach or warranty under Section 4-208 with respect to the unauthorized signature or alteration to which the preclusion applies.

~~(5) If under this section a payor bank has a valid defense against a claim of a customer upon or resulting from payment of an item and waives or fails upon request to assert the defense the bank may not assert against any collecting bank or other prior party presenting or transferring the item a claim based upon the unauthorized signature or alteration giving rise to the customer's claim.~~

Subsections (a), (b) and (c) restate and enlarge on former subsection (1). Subsection (a) recognizes that the parties may agree that the payor, a collecting bank or other person may retain the items drawn on the customer's account. In these cases the payor bank must provide sufficient information in a statement of account to allow the customer to reasonably identify the items paid. A safe harbor rule is stated that provides that the payor bank has satisfied its obligation if the item is described by item number, amount and the date of payment. This information is selected because it can be captured by the payor bank by automation without manual processing of the item.

Subsection (b) allows the bank retaining the item to destroy the item so long as it maintains the capacity to furnish legible copies for seven years. During this period the customer is entitled to demand from its payor bank the item or a copy of it. If the item is being retained by a collecting bank or other person, the payor bank must obtain the item or copy from that bank for its customer.

Subsection (c) continues the rule of former subsection (1) of requiring the customer to exercise reasonable promptness in examining the statement or items for an unauthorized signature of the customer or an alteration and to notify the bank promptly.

Subsection (d)(2) restates the conditions of the customer's preclusion and extends the 14-day period under former subsection (2) to a 30-day period. Although the 14-day period may have been sufficient when the original version of Article 4 was drafted, given the huge increase in the volume of checks, a longer period is viewed as more appropriate today.

Subsection (e) replaces former subsection (3) and poses a modified comparative negligence test for determining liability. See the discussion on this point in the Official Comments to Sections 3-404, 3-405 and 3-406. The term "good faith" is defined in Section 3-103(a)(4) as including "observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing." The connotation of this standard is fairness and not absence of negligence. The term "ordinary care" used in subsection (e) is defined in Section 3-103(a)(7) to provide that sight examination by a payor bank is not required if its procedure is reasonable and is commonly followed by other comparable banks in the area. The case law is divided on this issue. The definition of "ordinary care" in Section 3-103 rejects those authorities that hold, in effect, that failure to use sight examination is negligence as a matter of law.

Subsection (f) amends former subsection (4) to delete the reference to a three-year period to discover an unauthorized indorsement. Section 4-406 imposes no duty on a customer to discover a forged indorsement. Section 4-111 sets out a statute of limitations allowing a customer a three-year period to seek a credit to an account improperly charged by payment of an item bearing an unauthorized indorsement. The final sentence added to subsection (f) incorporates the substance of former subsection (5).

The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-407. Payor Bank's Right to Subrogation on Improper Payment.

If a payor bank has paid an item over the ~~stop payment~~ order of the drawer or maker to stop payment, or after an account has been closed, or otherwise under circumstances giving a basis for objection by the drawer or maker, to prevent unjust enrichment and only to the extent necessary to prevent loss to the bank by reason of its payment of the item, the payor bank ~~shall be~~ is subrogated to the rights

~~(a)~~(1) of any holder in due course on the item against the drawer or maker; ~~and~~

~~(b)~~(2) of the payee or any other holder of the item against the drawer or maker either on the item or under the transaction out of which the item arose; and

~~(c)~~(3) of the drawer or maker against the payee or any other holder of the item with respect to the transaction out of which the item arose.

Reason for 1990 Change

An order to close an account is assimilated to an order to stop payment in this section and in Section 4-403. The other modifications are made to conform with current legislative drafting practices, with no intent to change substance.

§ 4-501. Handling of Documentary Drafts; Duty to Send for Presentment and to Notify Customer of Dishonor.

A bank ~~which~~ that takes a documentary draft for collection ~~must~~ shall present or send the draft and accompanying documents for presentment and*,* upon learning that the draft has not been paid or accepted in due course*,* ~~must~~ shall seasonably notify its customer of ~~such~~ the fact even though it may have discounted or bought the draft or extended credit available for withdrawal as of right.

Reason for 1990 Change

Modified to conform with current drafting practices; no intent to change substance.

§ 4-502. Presentment of "On Arrival" Drafts.

~~When~~ If a draft or the relevant instructions require presentment "on arrival", "when goods arrive" or the like, the collecting bank need not present until in its judgment a reasonable time for arrival of the goods has expired. Refusal to pay or accept because the goods have not arrived is not dishonor; the bank must notify its transferor of ~~such~~ the refusal but need not present the draft again until it is instructed to do so or learns of the arrival of the goods.

Reason for 1990 Change

Modified to conform with current drafting practices; no intent to change substance.

§ 4-503. Responsibility of Presenting Bank for Documents and Goods; Report of Reasons for Dishonor; Referee in Case of Need.

Unless otherwise instructed and except as provided in Article 5*,* a bank presenting a documentary draft*:*

~~(a)~~(1) must deliver the documents to the drawee on acceptance of the draft if it is payable more than three days after presentment; otherwise, only on payment; and

~~(b)~~(2) upon dishonor, either in the case of presentment for acceptance or presentment for payment, may seek and follow instructions from any referee in case of need designated in the draft or*,* if the presenting bank does not choose to utilize ~~his~~ the referee's services*,* it must use diligence and good faith to ascertain the reason for dishonor, must notify its transferor of the dishonor and of the results of its effort to ascertain the reasons therefor*,* and must request instructions.

~~But~~ However the presenting bank is under no obligation with respect to goods represented by the documents except to follow any reasonable instructions seasonably received; it has a right to reimbursement for any expense incurred in following instructions and to prepayment of or indemnity for ~~such~~ those expenses.

Reason for 1990 Change

Modified to conform with current drafting practices; no intent to change substance.

§ 4-504. Privilege of Presenting Bank to Deal with Goods; Security Interest for Expenses.

~~(1)~~(a) A presenting bank ~~which~~ that, following the dishonor of a documentary draft, has seasonably requested instructions but does not receive them within a reasonable time may store, sell, or otherwise deal with the goods in any reasonable manner.

~~(2)~~(b) For its reasonable expenses incurred by action under subsection ~~(1)~~(a), the presenting bank has a lien upon the goods or their proceeds, which may be foreclosed in the same manner as an unpaid seller's lien.

Reason for 1990 Change

Modified to conform with current drafting practices; no intent to change substance.

APPENDIX J

1994 Amendments to Uniform Commercial Code

As Approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws

July 31, 1994

Amendment 1

Section 1-201 of the Act is corrected to read:

§ 1-201. General Definitions.

Subject to additional definitions contained in the subsequent Articles of this Act which are applicable to specific Articles or Parts thereof, and unless the context otherwise requires, in this Act:

(1) "Action" in the sense of a judicial proceeding includes recoupment, counterclaim, set-off, suit in equity and any other proceedings in which rights are determined.

(2) "Aggrieved party" means a party entitled to resort to a remedy.

(3) "Agreement" means the bargain of the parties in fact as found in their language or by implication from other circumstances including course of dealing or usage of trade or course of performance as provided in this Act (Sections 1-205 ~~and~~, 2-208*, and 2A-207*). Whether an agreement has legal consequences is determined by the provisions of this Act, if applicable; otherwise by the law of contracts (Section 1-103). (Compare "Contract".)

(4) "Bank" means any person engaged in the business of banking.

(5) "Bearer" means the person in possession of an instrument, document of title, or certificated security payable to bearer or indorsed in blank.

(6) "Bill of lading" means a document evidencing the receipt of goods for shipment issued by a person engaged in the business of transporting or forwarding goods, and includes an airbill. "Airbill" means a document serving for air transportation as a bill of lading does for marine or rail transportation, and includes an air consignment note or air waybill.

(7) "Branch" includes a separately incorporated foreign branch of a bank.

(8) "Burden of establishing" a fact means the burden of persuading the triers of fact that the existence of the fact is more probable than its nonexistence.

(9) "Buyer in ordinary course of business" means a person who in good faith and without knowledge that the sale to him is in violation of the ownership rights or security interest of a third party in the goods buys in ordinary course from a person in the business of selling goods of that kind but does not include a pawnbroker. All persons who sell minerals or the like (including oil and gas) at wellhead or minehead shall be deemed to be persons in the business of selling goods of that kind. "Buying" may be for cash or by exchange of other property or on secured or unsecured credit and includes receiving goods or documents of title under a pre-existing contract for sale but does not include a transfer in bulk or as security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a money debt.

(10) "Conspicuous": A term or clause is conspicuous when it is so written that a reasonable person against whom it is to operate ought to have noticed it. A printed heading in capitals (as: Non-Negotiable Bill of Lading) is conspicuous. Language in the body of a form is "conspicuous" if it is in larger or other contrasting type or color. But in a telegram any stated term is "conspicuous". Whether a term or clause is "conspicuous" or not is for decision by the court.

(11) "Contract" means the total legal obligation which results from the parties' agreement as affected by this Act and any other applicable rules of law. (Compare "Agreement".)

(12) "Creditor" includes a general creditor, a secured creditor, a lien creditor and any representative of creditors, including an assignee for the benefit of creditors, a trustee in bankruptcy, a receiver in equity and an executor or administrator of an insolvent debtor's or assignor's estate.

(13) "Defendant" includes a person in the position of defendant in a cross-action or counterclaim.

(14) "Delivery" with respect to instruments, documents of title, chattel paper, or certificated securities means voluntary transfer of possession.

(15) "Document of title" includes bill of lading, dock warrant, dock receipt, warehouse receipt or order for the delivery of goods, and also any other document which in the regular course of business or financing is treated as adequately evidencing that the person in possession of it is entitled to receive, hold and dispose of the document and the goods it covers. To be a document of title a document must purport to be issued by or addressed to a bailee and purport to cover goods in the bailee's possession which are either identified or are fungible portions of an identified mass.

(16) "Fault" means wrongful act, omission or breach.

(17) "Fungible" with respect to goods or securities means goods or securities of which any unit is, by nature or usage of trade, the equivalent of any other like unit. Goods which are not fungible shall be deemed fungible for the purposes of this Act to the extent that under a particular agreement or document unlike units are treated as equivalents.

(18) "Genuine" means free of forgery or counterfeiting.

(19) "Good faith" means honesty in fact in the conduct or transaction concerned.

(20) "Holder," with respect to a negotiable instrument, means the person in possession if the instrument is payable to bearer or, in the case of an instrument payable to an identified person, if the identified person is in possession. "Holder" with respect to a document of title means the person in possession if the goods are deliverable to bearer or to the order of the person in possession.

(21) To "honor" is to pay or to accept and pay, or where a credit so engages to purchase or discount a draft complying with the terms of the credit.

(22) "Insolvency proceedings" includes any assignment for the benefit of creditors or other proceedings intended to liquidate or rehabilitate the estate of the person involved.

(23) A person is "insolvent" who either has ceased to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business or cannot pay his debts as they become due or is insolvent within the meaning of the federal bankruptcy law.

(24) "Money" means a medium of exchange authorized or adopted by a domestic or foreign government and includes a monetary unit of account established by an intergovernmental organization or by agreement between two or more nations.

(25) A person has "notice" of a fact when

(a) he has actual knowledge of it; or

(b) he has received a notice or notification of it; or

(c) from all the facts and circumstances known to him at the time in question he has reason to know that it exists.

A person "knows" or has "knowledge" of a fact when he has actual knowledge of it. "Discover" or "learn" or a word or phrase of similar import refers to knowledge rather than to reason to know. The time and circumstances under which a notice or notification may cease to be effective are not determined by this Act.

(26) A person "notifies" or "gives" a notice or notification to another by taking such steps as may be reasonably required to inform the other in ordinary course whether or not such other actually comes to know of it. A person "receives" a notice or notification when

(a) it comes to his attention; or

(b) it is duly delivered at the place of business through which the contract was made or at any other place held out by him as the place for receipt of such communications.

(27) Notice, knowledge or a notice or notification received by an organization is effective for a particular transaction from the time when it is brought to the attention of the individual conducting that transaction, and in any event from the time when it would have been brought to his attention if the organization had exercised due diligence. An organization exercises due diligence if it maintains reasonable routines for communicating significant information to the person conducting the transaction and there is reasonable compliance with the routines. Due diligence does not require an individual acting for the organization to communicate information unless such communication is part of his regular duties or unless he has reason to know of the transaction and that the transaction would be materially affected by the information.

(28) "Organization" includes a corporation, government or governmental subdivision or agency, business trust, estate, trust, partnership or association, two or more persons having a joint or common interest, or any other legal or commercial entity.

(29) "Party", as distinct from "third party", means a person who has engaged in a transaction or made an agreement within this Act.

(30) "Person" includes an individual or an organization (See Section 1-102).

(31) "Presumption" or "presumed" means that the trier of fact must find the existence of the fact presumed unless and until evidence is introduced which would support a finding of its non-existence.

(32) "Purchase" includes taking by sale, discount, negotiation, mortgage, pledge, lien, issue or re-issue, gift or any other voluntary transaction creating an interest in property.

(33) "Purchaser" means a person who takes by purchase.

(34) "Remedy" means any remedial right to which an aggrieved party is entitled with or without resort to a tribunal.

(35) "Representative" includes an agent, an officer of a corporation or association, and a trustee, executor or administrator of an estate, or any other person empowered to act for another.

(36) "Rights" includes remedies.

(37) "Security interest" means an interest in personal property or fixtures which secures payment or performance of an obligation. The retention or reservation of title by a seller of goods notwithstanding shipment or delivery to the buyer (Section 2-401) is limited in effect to a reservation of a "security interest". The term also includes any interest of a buyer of accounts or chattel paper which is subject to Article 9. The special property interest of a buyer of goods on identification of those goods to a contract for sale under Section 2-401 is not a "security interest", but a buyer may also acquire a "security interest" by complying with Article 9. Unless a consignment is intended as security, reservation of title thereunder is not a "security interest", but a consignment in any event is subject to the provisions on consignment sales (Section 2-326).

Whether a transaction creates a lease or security interest is determined by the facts of each case; however, a transaction creates a security interest if the consideration the lessee is to pay the lessor for the right to possession and use of the goods is an obligation for the term of the lease not subject to termination by the lessee, and

(a) the original term of the lease is equal to or greater than the remaining economic life of the goods,

(b) the lessee is bound to renew the lease for the remaining economic life of the goods or is bound to become the owner of the goods,

(c) the lessee has an option to renew the lease for the remaining economic life of the goods for no additional consideration or nominal additional consideration upon compliance with the lease agreement, or

(d) the lessee has an option to become the owner of the goods for no additional consideration or nominal additional consideration upon compliance with the lease agreement.

A transaction does not create a security interest merely because it provides that

(a) the present value of the consideration the lessee is obligated to pay the lessor for the right to possession and use of the goods is substantially equal to or is greater than the fair market value of the goods at the time the lease is entered into,

(b) the lessee assumes risk of loss of the goods, or agrees to pay taxes, insurance, filing, recording, or registration fees, or service or maintenance costs with respect to the goods,

(c) the lessee has an option to renew the lease or to become the owner of the goods,

(d) the lessee has an option to renew the lease for a fixed rent that is equal to or greater than the reasonably predictable fair market rent for the use of the goods for the term of the renewal at the time the option is to be performed, or

(e) the lessee has an option to become the owner of the goods for a fixed price that is equal to or greater than the reasonably predictable fair market value of the goods at the time the option is to be performed.

For purposes of this subsection (37):

(x) Additional consideration is not nominal if (i) when the option to renew the lease is granted to the lessee the rent is stated to be the fair market rent for the use of the goods for the term of the renewal determined at the time the option is to be performed, or (ii) when the option to become the owner of the goods is granted to the lessee the price is stated to be the fair market value of the goods determined at the time the option is to be performed. Additional consideration is nominal if it is less than the lessee's reasonably predictable cost of performing under the lease agreement if the option is not exercised;

(y) "Reasonably predictable" and "remaining economic life of the goods" are to be determined with reference to the facts and circumstances at the time the transaction is entered into; and

(z) "Present value" means the amount as of a date certain of one or more sums payable in the future, discounted to the date certain. The discount is determined by the interest rate specified by the parties if the rate is not manifestly unreasonable at the time the transaction is entered into; otherwise, the discount is determined by a commercially reasonable rate that takes into account the facts and circumstances of each case at the time the transaction was entered into.

(38) "Send" in connection with any writing or notice means to deposit in the mail or deliver for transmission by any other usual means of communication with postage or cost of transmission provided for and properly addressed and in the case of an instrument to an address specified thereon or otherwise agreed, or if there be none to any address reasonable under the circumstances. The receipt of any writing or notice within the time at which it would have arrived if properly sent has the effect of a proper sending.

(39) "Signed" includes any symbol executed or adopted by a party with present intention to authenticate a writing.

(40) "Surety" includes guarantor.

(41) "Telegram" includes a message transmitted by radio, teletype, cable, any mechanical method of transmission, or the like.

(42) "Term" means that portion of an agreement which relates to a particular matter.

(43) "Unauthorized" signature means one made without actual, implied, or apparent authority and includes a forgery.

(44) "Value". Except as otherwise provided with respect to negotiable instruments and bank collections (Sections 3-303, ~~4-208~~ 4-210, and ~~4-209~~ 4-211) a person gives "value" for rights if he acquires them

(a) in return for a binding commitment to extend credit or for the extension of immediately available credit whether or not drawn upon and whether or not a charge-back is provided for in the event of difficulties in collection; or

(b) as security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a pre-existing claim; or

(c) by accepting delivery pursuant to a pre-existing contract for purchase; or

(d) generally, in return for any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract.

(45) "Warehouse receipt" means a receipt issued by a person engaged in the business of storing goods for hire.

(46) "Written" or "writing" includes printing, typewriting or any other intentional reduction to tangible form.

fied in the credit. A credit may be either revocable or irrevocable. The engagement may be either an agreement to honor or a statement that the bank or other person is authorized to honor.

(b) A "documentary draft" or a "documentary demand for payment" is one honor of which is conditioned upon the presentation of a document or documents. "Document" means any paper including document of title, security, invoice, certificate, notice of default and the like.

Amendment 5

Section 9-203 of the Act is corrected to read:

§ 9-203. Attachment and Enforceability of Security Interest; Proceeds; Formal Requisites.

(1) Subject to the provisions of Section ~~4-208~~ 4-210 on the security interest of a collecting bank, Section 8-321 on security interests in securities and Section 9-113 on a security interest arising under the ~~Article~~ Articles on Sales and Leases, a security interest is not enforceable against the debtor or third parties with respect to the collateral and does not attach unless:

(a) the collateral is in the possession of the secured party pursuant to agreement, or the debtor has signed a security agreement which contains a description of the collateral and in addition, when the security interest covers crops growing or to be grown or timber to be cut, a description of the land concerned;

(b) value has been given; and

(c) the debtor has rights in the collateral.

(2) A security interest attaches when it becomes enforceable against the debtor with respect to the collateral. Attachment occurs as soon as all of the events specified in subsection (1) have taken place unless explicit agreement postpones the time of attaching.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed a security agreement gives the secured party the rights to proceeds provided by Section 9-306.

(4) A transaction, although subject to this Article, is also subject to _____ *, and in the case of conflict between the provisions of this Article and any such statute, the provisions of such statute control. Failure to comply with any applicable statute has only the effect which is specified therein.

Note: *At * in subsection (4) insert reference to any local statute regulating small loans, retail installment sales and the like.*

The foregoing subsection (4) is designed to make it clear that certain transactions, although subject to this Article, must also comply with other applicable legislation.

This Article is designed to regulate all the "security" aspects of transactions within its scope. There is, however, much regulatory legislation, particularly in the consumer field, which supplements this Article and should not be repealed by its enactment. Examples are small loan acts, retail installment selling acts and the like. Such acts may provide for licensing and rate regulation and may prescribe particular forms of contract. Such provisions should remain in force despite the enactment of this Article. On the other hand if a retail installment selling act contains provisions on filing, rights on default, etc., such provisions should be repealed as inconsistent with this Article except that inconsistent provisions as to deficiencies, penalties, etc., in the Uniform Consumer Credit Code and other recent related legislation should remain because those statutes were drafted after the substantial enactment of the Article and with the intention of modifying certain provisions of this Article as to consumer credit.

Amendment 6

Section 9-206 of the Act is corrected to read:

§ 9-206. Agreement Not to Assert Defenses Against Assignee; Modification of Sales Warranties Where Security Agreement Exists.

(1) Subject to any statute or decision which establishes a different rule for buyers or lessees of consumer goods, an agreement by a buyer or lessee that he will not assert against an assignee any claim or defense which he may have against the seller or lessor is enforceable by an assignee who takes his assignment for value, in good faith and without notice of a claim or defense, except as to defenses of a type which may be asserted against a holder in due course of a negotiable instrument under the Article on ~~Commercial Paper~~ Negotiable Instruments (Article 3). A buyer who as part of one transaction signs both a negotiable instrument and a security agreement makes such an agreement.

(2) When a seller retains a purchase money security interest in goods the Article on Sales (Article 2) governs the sale and any disclaimer, limitation or modification of the seller's warranties.

Amendment 7

Section 9-302 of the Act is corrected to read:

§ 9-302. When Filing is Required to Perfect Security Interest; Security Interests to Which Filing Provisions of This Article Do Not Apply.

(1) A financing statement must be filed to perfect all security interests except the following:

(a) a security interest in collateral in possession of the secured party under Section 9-305;

(b) a security interest temporarily perfected in instruments or documents without delivery under Section 9-304 or in proceeds for a 10 day period under Section 9-306;

(c) a security interest created by an assignment of a beneficial interest in a trust or a decedent's estate;

(d) a purchase money security interest in consumer goods; but filing is required for a motor vehicle required to be registered; and fixture filing is required for priority over conflicting interests in fixtures to the extent provided in Section 9-313;

(e) an assignment of accounts which does not alone or in conjunction with other assignments to the same assignee transfer a significant part of the outstanding accounts of the assignor;

(f) a security interest of a collecting bank (Section ~~4-208~~ 4-210) or in securities (Section 8-321) or arising under the ~~Article~~ Articles on Sales and Leases (see Section 9-113) or covered in subsection (3) of this section;

(g) an assignment for the benefit of all the creditors of the transferor, and subsequent transfers by the assignee thereunder.

(2) If a secured party assigns a perfected security interest, no filing under this Article is required in order to continue the perfected status of the security interest against creditors of and transferees from the original debtor.

(3) The filing of a financing statement otherwise required by this Article is not necessary or effective to perfect a security interest in property subject to

(a) a statute or treaty of the United States which provides for a national or international registration or a national or international certificate of title or which specifies a place of filing different from that specified in this Article for filing of the security interest; or

(b) the following statutes of this state; [list any certificate of title statute covering automobiles, trailers, mobile homes, boats, farm tractors, or the like, and any central filing statute*.]; but during any period in which collateral is inventory held for sale by a person who is in the business of selling goods of that kind, the filing provisions of this Article (Part 4) apply to a security interest in that collateral created by him as debtor; or

(c) a certificate of title statute of another jurisdiction under the law of which indication of a security interest on the certificate is required as a condition of perfection (subsection (2) of Section 9-103).

(4) Compliance with a statute or treaty described in subsection (3) is equivalent to the filing of a financing statement under this Article, and a security interest in property subject to the statute or treaty can be perfected only by compliance therewith except as provided in Section 9-103 on multiple state transactions. Duration and renewal of perfection of a security interest perfected by compliance with the statute or treaty are governed by the provisions of the statute or treaty; in other respects the security interest is subject to this Article.

Amendment 8

Section 9-312 of the Act is corrected to read:

§ 9-312. Priorities Among Conflicting Security Interests in the Same Collateral.

(1) The rules of priority stated in other sections of this Part and in the following sections shall govern when applicable: Section ~~4-208~~ 4-210 with respect to the security interests of collecting banks in items being collected, accompanying documents and proceeds; Section 9-103 on security interests related to other jurisdictions; Section 9-114 on consignments.

(2) A perfected security interest in crops for new value given to enable the debtor to produce the crops during the production season and given not more than three months before the crops become growing crops by planting or otherwise takes priority over an earlier perfected security interest to the extent that such earlier interest secures obligations due more than six months before the crops become growing crops by planting or otherwise, even though the person giving new value had knowledge of the earlier security interest.

(3) A perfected purchase money security interest in inventory has priority over a conflicting security interest in the same inventory and also has priority in identifiable cash proceeds received on or before the delivery of the inventory to a buyer if

(a) the purchase money security interest is perfected at the time the debtor receives possession of the inventory; and

(b) the purchase money secured party gives notification in writing to the holder of the conflicting security interest if the holder had filed a financing statement covering the same types of inventory (i) before the date of the filing made by the purchase money secured party, or (ii) before the beginning of the 21 day period where the purchase money security interest is temporarily perfected without filing or possession (subsection (5) of Section 9-304); and

(c) the holder of the conflicting security interest receives the notification within five years before the debtor receives possession of the inventory; and

(d) the notification states that the person giving the notice has or expects to acquire a purchase money security interest in inventory of the debtor, describing such inventory by item or type.

(4) A purchase money security interest in collateral other than inventory has priority over a conflicting security interest in the same collateral or its proceeds if the purchase money security interest is perfected at the time the debtor receives possession of the collateral or within ten days thereafter.

(5) In all cases not governed by other rules stated in this section (including cases of purchase money security interests which do not qualify for the special priorities set forth in subsections (3) and (4) of this section), priority between conflicting security interests in the same collateral shall be determined according to the following rules:

(a) Conflicting security interests rank according to priority in time of filing or perfection. Priority dates from the time a filing is first made covering the collateral or the time the security interest is first perfected, whichever is earlier, provided that there is no period thereafter when there is neither filing nor perfection.

(b) So long as conflicting security interests are unperfected, the first to attach has priority.

(6) For the purposes of subsection (5) a date of filing or perfection as to collateral is also a date of filing or perfection as to proceeds.

(7) If future advances are made while a security interest is perfected by filing, the taking of possession, or under Section 8-321 on securities, the security interest has the same priority for the purposes of subsection (5) with respect to the future advances as it does with respect to the first advance. If a commitment is made before or while the security interest is so perfected, the security interest has the same priority with respect to advances made pursuant thereto. In other cases a perfected security interest has priority from the date the advance is made.

§ 9-103. Perfection of Security Interest in Multiple State Transactions.

(6) ~~Uncertificated securities~~ Investment property.

~~The law (including the conflict of laws rules) of the jurisdiction of organization of the issuer governs the perfection and the effect of perfection or non-perfection of a security interest in uncertificated securities.~~

(a) This subsection applies to investment property.

(b) Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (f), during the time that a security certificate is located in a jurisdiction, perfection of a security interest, the effect of perfection or non-perfection, and the priority of a security interest in the certificated security represented thereby are governed by the local law of that jurisdiction.

(c) Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (f), perfection of a security interest, the effect of perfection or non-perfection, and the priority of a security interest in an uncertificated security are governed by the local law of the issuer's jurisdiction as specified in Section 8-110(d).

(d) Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (f), perfection of a security interest, the effect of perfection or non-perfection, and the priority of a security interest in a security entitlement or securities account are governed by the local law of the securities intermediary's jurisdiction as specified in Section 8-110(e).

(e) Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (f), perfection of a security interest, the effect of perfection or non-perfection, and the priority of a security interest in a commodity contract or commodity account are governed by the local law of the commodity intermediary's jurisdiction. The following rules determine a "commodity intermediary's jurisdiction" for purposes of this paragraph:

(i) If an agreement between the commodity intermediary and commodity customer specifies that it is governed by the law of a particular jurisdiction, that jurisdiction is the commodity intermediary's jurisdiction.

(ii) If an agreement between the commodity intermediary and commodity customer does not specify the governing law as provided in subparagraph (i), but expressly specifies that the commodity account is maintained at an office in a particular jurisdiction, that jurisdiction is the commodity intermediary's jurisdiction.

(iii) If an agreement between the commodity intermediary and commodity customer does not specify a jurisdiction as provided in subparagraphs (i) or (ii), the commodity intermediary's jurisdiction is the jurisdiction in which is located the office identified in an account statement as the office serving the commodity customer's account.

(iv) If an agreement between the commodity intermediary and commodity customer does not specify a jurisdiction as provided in subparagraphs (i) or (ii) and an account statement does not identify an office serving the commodity customer's account as provided in subparagraph (iii), the commodity intermediary's jurisdiction is the jurisdiction in which is located the chief executive office of the commodity intermediary.

(f) Perfection of a security interest by filing, automatic perfection of a security interest in investment property granted by a broker or securities intermediary, and automatic perfection of a security interest in a commodity contract or commodity account granted by a commodity intermediary are governed by the local law of the jurisdiction in which the debtor is located.

The term "at wellhead" is intended to encompass arrangements based on sale of the product as soon as it issues from the ground and is measured, without technical distinctions as to whether title passes at the "Christmas tree" or the far side of a gathering tank or at some other point. The term "at minehead" is a comparable concept.

9. Subsection (6) of Section 9-103 specifies choice of law rules for perfection of security interests in investment property. Paragraph (b) covers security interests in certificated securities. Paragraph (c) covers security interests in uncertificated securities. Paragraph (d) covers security interests in security entitlements and securities accounts. Paragraph (e) covers security interests in commodity contracts and commodity accounts. The approach of each of these paragraphs is essentially the same. They identify the jurisdiction's law that governs questions of perfection and priority on the basis of the same principles that are used in Article 8 to determine other questions concerning that form of investment property. Thus, for certificated securities, the law of the jurisdiction where the certificate is located governs. Cf. Section 8-110(c). For uncertificated securities, the law of the issuer's jurisdiction governs. Cf. Section 8-110(a). For security entitlements and securities accounts, the law of the securities intermediary's jurisdiction governs. Cf. Section 8-110(b). For commodity contracts and commodity accounts, the law of the commodity intermediary's jurisdiction governs. Since commodity contracts and commodity accounts are not governed by Article 8, paragraph (e) contains rules that specify the commodity intermediary's jurisdiction. These are analogous to the rules in Section 8-110(e) specifying a securities intermediary's jurisdiction.

Under this subsection, if litigation about perfection or priority arises in this State, the relevant choice of law rule of paragraphs (b) through (e) may point to the law of this State or to the law of another State. If the litigation were in a tribunal of a jurisdiction that has not enacted this section, it would follow its own choice of law rules. The choice of law rules prescribed here by statute conform to generally accepted principles of choice of law. The simplicity and clarity in the choice of law rules, coupled with the explicit recognition that the parties to some securities transactions may agree on a governing law, are intended to assure that there will be one clear choice of law regardless of forum.

Paragraph (f) adapts the general choice of law principles of this subsection to cases where a secured party claims perfection on the basis of filing, or by virtue of the automatic perfection rules in Section 9-115(4)(c) and (d). In such a case, the law of the debtor's jurisdiction determines whether the requirements for that form of perfection have been satisfied. The rules in Section 9-103(3) on the debtor's location ~~can be looked to in applying subsection (f)~~ and effect of change of location apply to cases governed by paragraph (f). The main reason for the paragraph (f) rule is to specify the proper filing office. Under the substantive rules of this Act, a security interest in investment property perfected only by filing is enforceable against the debtor or lien creditors, but not against most other claimants. See Sections 9-115(5) and (6), 8-105(e), 8-303, and 8-502. Because the choice of law rules in this section may, in some circumstances, have the effect of directing a court in a jurisdiction that has adopted this Act to look to the law of another jurisdiction, it is possible that the jurisdiction so specified will be one that has not adopted rules concerning the effect of filing as a method of perfection for investment property. In such cases, or other circumstances where the governing substantive law is not this Act, the effect of filing on the rights of other parties should be interpreted in light of the role of that form of perfection under this Act; that is, the rights of a secured party in investment property as determined under this Act perfected only by filing against another secured party or any other person who purchases or otherwise deals with the investment property should be interpreted to be no greater than the rights of that secured party under this Act. Amendments in italics approved by the Permanent Editorial Board for Uniform Commercial Code November 4, 1995.

The following examples illustrate these rules:

Example 1. A customer residing in New Jersey maintains a securities account with Able & Co. The agreement between the customer and Able specifies that it is governed by Pennsylvania law. Through the account the customer holds securities of a Massachusetts corporation, which Able holds through a clearing corporation located in New York. The customer obtains a margin loan from Able. Subsection (6)(d) provides that Pennsylvania law—the law of the securities intermediary's jurisdiction—governs perfection and priority of the security interest.*

Example 2. A customer residing in New Jersey maintains a securities account with Able & Co. The agreement between the customer and Able specifies that it is governed by Pennsylvania law. Through the account the customer holds securities of a Massachusetts corporation, which Able holds through a clearing corporation located in New York. The customer obtains a loan from a lender located in Illinois. The lender takes a security interest and perfects by obtaining an agreement among the debtor, itself, and Able, which satisfies the requirement of Section 8-106(d)(2) to give the lender control. Subsection (6)(d) provides that Pennsylvania law—the law of the securities intermediary's jurisdiction—governs perfection and priority of the security interest.*

Example 3. A customer residing in New Jersey maintains a securities account with Able & Co. The agreement between the customer and Able specifies that it is governed by Pennsylvania law. Through the account, the customer holds securities of a Massachusetts corporation, which Able holds through a clearing corporation located in New York. The customer borrows from SP1, and SP1 files a financing statement in New Jersey. Later, the customer obtains a loan from SP2. SP2 takes a security interest and perfects by obtaining an agreement among the debtor, itself, and Able, which satisfies the requirement of Section 8-106(d)(2) to give the SP2 control. Subsection (6)(f) provides that perfection of SP1's security interest by filing is governed by the location of the debtor, so the filing in New Jersey was appropriate—assuming New Jersey has adopted the revisions of Article 9 permitting perfection of security interests in investment property by filing. Subsection (6)(d), however, provides that Pennsylvania law—the law of the securities intermediary's jurisdiction—governs all other questions of perfection and priority. Thus, Pennsylvania law governs perfection of SP2's security interest, and Pennsylvania law also governs the priority of the security interests of SP1 and SP2.*

"Instrument": the term as defined in paragraph (1)(i) includes not only negotiable instruments ~~and certificated securities~~ but also any other intangibles evidenced by writings which are in ordinary course of business transferred by delivery. As in the case of chattel paper "delivery" is only the minimum stated and may be accompanied by other steps. Amendment approved by the Permanent Editorial Board for Uniform Commercial Code November 4, 1995.

§ 9-106. Definitions: "Account"; "General Intangibles."

"Account" means any right to payment for goods sold or leased or for services rendered which is not evidenced by an instrument or chattel paper, whether or not it has been earned by performance. "General intangibles" means any personal property (including things in action) other than goods, accounts, chattel paper, documents, instruments, investment property, and money. All rights to payment earned or unearned under a charter or other contract involving the use or hire of a vessel and all rights incident to the charter or contract are accounts.

§ 9-115. Investment Property.

(1) In this Article:

(a) "Commodity account" means an account maintained by a commodity intermediary in which a commodity contract is carried for a commodity customer.

(b) "Commodity contract" means a commodity futures contract, an option on a commodity futures contract, a commodity option, or other contract that, in each case, is:

(i) traded on or subject to the rules of a board of trade that has been designated as a contract market for such a contract pursuant to the federal commodities laws; or

(ii) traded on a foreign commodity board of trade, exchange, or market, and is carried on the books of a commodity intermediary for a commodity customer.

(c) "Commodity customer" means a person for whom a commodity intermediary carries a commodity contract on its books.

(d) "Commodity intermediary" means:

(i) a person who is registered as a futures commission merchant under the federal commodities laws; or

(ii) a person who in the ordinary course of its business provides clearance or settlement services for a board of trade that has been designated as a contract market pursuant to the federal commodities laws.

(e) "Control" with respect to a certificated security, uncertificated security, or security entitlement has the meaning specified in Section 8-106. A secured party has control over a commodity contract if by agreement among the commodity customer, the commodity intermediary, and the secured party, the commodity intermediary has agreed that it will apply any value distributed on account of the commodity contract as directed by the secured party without further consent by the commodity customer. If a commodity customer grants a security interest in a commodity contract to its own commodity intermediary, the commodity intermediary as secured party has control. A secured party has control over a securities account or commodity account if the secured party has control over all security entitlements or commodity contracts carried in the securities account or commodity account.

(f) "Investment property" means:

(i) a security, whether certificated or uncertificated;

(ii) a security entitlement;

(iii) a securities account;

(iv) a commodity contract; or

(v) a commodity account.

(2) Attachment or perfection of a security interest in a securities account is also attachment or perfection of a security interest in all security entitlements carried in the securities account. Attachment or perfection of a security interest in a commodity account is also attachment or perfection of a security interest in all commodity contracts carried in the commodity account.

(3) A description of collateral in a security agreement or financing statement is sufficient to create or perfect a security interest in a certificated security, uncertificated security, security entitlement, securities account, commodity contract, or commodity account whether it describes the collateral by those terms, or as investment property, or by description of the underlying security, financial asset, or commodity contract. A description of investment property collateral in a security agreement or financing statement is sufficient if it identifies the collateral by specific listing, by category, by quantity, by a computational or allocational formula or procedure, or by any other method, if the identity of the collateral is objectively determinable.

(4) Perfection of a security interest in investment property is governed by the following rules:

(a) A security interest in investment property may be perfected by control.

(b) Except as otherwise provided in paragraphs (c) and (d), a security interest in investment property may be perfected by filing.

(c) If the debtor is a broker or securities intermediary a security interest in investment property is perfected when it attaches. The filing of a financing statement with respect to a security interest in investment property granted by a broker or securities intermediary has no effect for purposes of perfection or priority with respect to that security interest.

(d) If a debtor is a commodity, intermediary, a security interest in a commodity contract or a commodity account is perfected when it attaches. The filing of a financing statement with respect to a security interest in a commodity contract or a commodity account granted by a commodity intermediary has no effect for purposes of perfection or priority with respect to that security interest.

(5) Priority between conflicting security interests in the same investment property is governed by the following rules:

(a) A security interest of a secured party who has control over investment property has priority over a security interest of a secured party who does not have control over the investment property.

(b) Except as otherwise provided in paragraphs (c) and (d), conflicting security interests of secured parties each of whom has control rank equally.

(c) Except as otherwise agreed by the securities intermediary, a security interest in a security entitlement or a securities account granted to the debtor's own securities intermediary has priority over any security interest granted by the debtor to another secured party.

(d) Except as otherwise agreed by the commodity intermediary, a security interest in a commodity contract or a commodity account granted to the debtor's own commodity intermediary has priority over any security interest granted by the debtor to another secured party.

(e) Conflicting security interests granted by a broker, a securities intermediary, or a commodity intermediary which are perfected without control rank equally.

(f) In all other cases, priority between conflicting security interests in investment property is governed by Section 9-312(5), (6), and (7). Section 9-312(4) does not apply to investment property.

(6) If a security certificate in registered form is delivered to a secured party pursuant to agreement, a written security agreement is not required for attachment or enforceability of the security interest, delivery suffices for perfection of the security interest, and the security interest has priority over a conflicting security interest perfected by means other than control, even if a necessary indorsement is lacking.

Official Comment

1. Overview. This section sets out the principal rules on security interests in investment property. Investment property, defined in subsection (1)(f) is a new term for a category of collateral that includes securities, whether held directly or through intermediaries, and commodity futures. The term investment property is used in Article 9 as one of the general categories of collateral, such as goods or instruments. Investment property is excluded from the definitions of goods, instruments, and general intangibles. See Sections 9-105(1)(h), 9-105(1)(i), and 9-106.

This section is added as part of the revision of Article 8 on investment securities. It relies in part on terms and concepts defined in Revised Article 8. For an overview of Revised Article 8, see the Prefatory Note to that Article. Prior to the 1978 amendments to Article 8, the rules on security interests in securities were included in Article 9. The 1978 amendments moved the key rules to Article 8. The revision of Article 8 returns these matters to Article 9. In order to avoid disruption of section numbering, the new rules on security interests in investment property are collected in this section, rather than being distributed among the various sections of Article 9 dealing with corresponding issues for other categories of collateral. On matters not covered by rules set out in this section, security interests in investment property are governed by the general rules in other sections of this Article.

The distinction between the direct and indirect holding systems plays an important role in the rules on security interests in securities. Consider two investors, X and Y, each of whom owns 1000 shares of XYZ Co. common stock. X has a certificate representing 1000 shares and is registered on the books maintained by XYZ Co.'s transfer agent as the holder of record of those 1000 shares. X has a direct relationship with the issuer, and receives dividends, distributions, and proxies directly from the issuer. In Revised Article 8 terminology, X has a direct claim to a "certificated security." If X wishes to use the investment position as collateral for a loan, X would grant the lender a security interest in the "certificated security." The Article 9 rules for such transactions are explained in Comment 2. XYZ Co. might not issue certificates, but register investors such as X directly on its stockholder books. In that case, X's interest would be an "uncertificated security." The Article 9 rules for uncertificated securities are explained in Comment 3. By contrast to these direct relationships, Y holds the securities through an account with Y's broker. Y does not have a certificate and is not registered on XYZ Co.'s stock books as a holder of record. Rather, Y holds the securities through a chain of securities intermediaries. Under Revised Article 8, Y's interest in XYZ common stock is described as a "securities entitlement." If Y wishes to use the investment position as collateral for a loan, Y would grant the lender a security interest in the "securities entitlement." The Article 9 rules for security entitlements are explained in Comment 4.

A commercial setting in which security interests in investment property play a most economically significant role is the "wholesale" level, that is, finance of securities firms and security interests that support the extension of credit in the settlement system. Comments 6 and 7 deal with these transactions. The rules on security interests in investment property also apply to commodity futures. Comment 8 deals with these transactions.

The rules on security interests in investment property are based on the concept of "control," defined in Sections 8-106 and 9-115(1)(e). If the secured party has control the security interest can attach even without a written security agreement. See Section 9-203. A security interest in investment property can also be created by a written security agreement pursuant to Section 9-203. Security interests in investment property can be perfected by control. See subsection (4)(a). Although other methods of perfection are also permitted, the basic priority rule, set out in subsection (5)(a), is that a secured party who obtains control has priority over a secured party who relies on some other method of perfection. The control priority rule is explained in Comment 5.

2. Security interests in certificated securities. A security interest in a certificated security can be created by conferring control on the secured party. Section 8-106 provides that a secured party has control of a certificated security if the certificate has been delivered, see Section 8-301, and any necessary indorsement has been supplied. Section 9-203 provides that a security interest can attach, even without a written security agreement, if the secured party has control. Section 9-115(4)(a) provides that control is a permissible method of perfection.

A security interest in a certificated security can also be created by a written security agreement pursuant to Section 9-203, and can be perfected by filing, see subsection (4)(b). (The perfection by filing rule does not apply if the debtor is a broker or securities intermediary.) However, a security interest perfected only by filing is subordinate to a conflicting security interest perfected by control. See subsection (5)(a) and Comment 5. Also, perfection by filing would not give the secured party protection against other types of adverse claims, since the Article 8 adverse claim cut-off rules require control. See Section 8-510.

Section 9-115(6) deals with cases where a secured party has taken possession of an unindorsed security certificate in registered form. It provides that even though the indorsement is lacking, delivery of the certificate to the secured party suffices for attachment and perfection of the security interest in the certificated security. It also provides that such a possessory security interest has priority over a conflicting non-control security interest, such as a security interest perfected by filing. However, without the indorsement the secured party would not get the other protections against adverse claims that flow from obtaining control. See Section 8-510.

3. Security interests in uncertificated securities. The rules on security interests in uncertificated securities apply only where the debtor is the direct holder of an uncertificated security. For example, mutual funds typically do not issue certificates, but the beneficial owners of mutual funds shares commonly are the direct holders of the shares, whose interests are recorded on the books of the issuer. If such an investor grants a security interest in the mutual funds shares, the rules in this section on security interests in uncertificated securities apply. These rules are not germane to situations where a debtor holds securities through a securities intermediary. Security interests in positions held through securities intermediar- ies are governed by the rules on security entitlements and securities accounts, not the rules on uncertificated securities.

A security interest in an uncertificated security can be perfected either by control or by filing. See subsection (4)(a) and (b). (The filing rule does not apply if the debtor is itself a broker or securities intermediary.) Priority disputes among conflicting security interests in an uncertificated security are governed by subsection (5). Under subsection (5)(a), a secured party who obtains control has priority over a secured party who does not have control. Thus, although filing is a permissible method of perfection, a secured party who perfects by filing takes the risk that the debtor has granted or will grant a security interest in the same property to another party who obtains control. See Comment 5.

The requirements for control with respect to uncertificated securities are set out in Section 8-106(c). There are two possibilities. First, a secured party has control if the uncertificated security is transferred from debtor to secured party on the books of the issuer. See Sections 8-106(c)(1) (control by "delivery") and 8-301(b) (defining "delivery" of uncertificated security). So far as the issuer is concerned, the secured party is the registered owner entitled to all rights of ownership, though as between the debtor and secured party the debtor remains the owner and the secured party holds its interest as secured party. Second, a secured party has control over an uncertificated security if the issuer agrees that it will comply with "instructions" originated by the secured party without further consent by the registered owner. See Section 8-106(c)(2). If the debtor, secured party, and issuer agree that the secured party has the right to direct the issuer to dispose of the security without further action by the debtor, the secured party has control even though the debtor remains listed as the registered owner and continues to receive dividends and distributions. Note, though, that there is no statutory requirement that issuers of uncertificated securities offer such arrangements.

4. Security interests in security entitlements and securities accounts. This section establishes a structure for creating security interests in securities and other financial assets that a debtor holds through an account with a securities intermediary. Under Revised Article 8, the interest of a person who holds securities through a securities account with a broker or other securities intermediary is described as a security entitlement. Thus, the Article 9 rules governing the use of that person's investment position as collateral are the rules for security entitlements and securities accounts, not the rules for certificated securities or uncertificated securities.

Attachment of security interests in security entitlements and securities accounts is governed by Section 9-203 and subsections (2) and (3) of this section. Unless the secured party has control, a written security agreement is necessary for attachment. For purposes of description of the collateral in a security agreement, it is not essential that the precise Article 8 terminology be used. See subsection (3). For example, if a debtor who holds 1000 shares of XYZ Co. common stock through a securities account signs a security agreement which describes the collateral as "1000 shares of XYZ Co. common stock," that description is sufficient, even though the debtor's interest would be described under Revised Article 8 as a "security entitlement" to 1000 shares of XYZ Co. common stock.

The Article 8 term security entitlement also covers the interest of a person in a "financial asset," if the person holds that financial asset through a securities account. "Financial asset" is a broader term than "security." See Section 8-102(a)(9). For example, a bankers' acceptance is an Article 3 negotiable instrument and hence an instrument under Section 9-105(1)(i). If a person who holds a bankers' acceptance directly wishes to grant a security interest in it, the Article 9 rules for instruments apply. However, if a person holds a bankers' acceptance through a securities account, the person has a security entitlement to the bankers' acceptance. If the person wishes to grant a security interest in the security entitlement to the bankers' acceptance, the Article 9 rules for investment property apply.

Subsection (1)(f)(iii) provides that the term investment property also includes "securities account." This is intended to facilitate transactions in which a debtor wishes to grant a security interest in all of the investment positions held through a particular account rather than in particular positions carried in the account. Just as a debtor may grant a security interest either in specifically listed items of equipment or in all of the debtor's equipment, so too a debtor who holds securities or other financial assets through a securities account may grant a security interest either in specifically listed security entitlements or in all of the security entitlements held through that account. Referring to the collateral as the securities account is a simple way of describing all of the security entitlements carried in the account. Section 9-115(2) provides that attachment or perfection of a security interest in a securities account is also attachment or perfection of a security interest in all security entitlements carried in the securities account. A security interest in a securities account would also include all other rights of the debtor against the securities intermediary arising out of the securities account. For example, a security interest in a securities account would include credit balances due to the debtor from the securities intermediary, whether or not they are proceeds of a security entitlement.

A security interest in a security entitlement or securities account can be perfected either by control or by filing. See subsections (4)(a) and (4)(b). (The filing rule does not apply if the debtor is itself a broker or securities intermediary.) Priority disputes among conflicting security interests in a security entitlement or securities account are governed by subsection (5). The basic rule of subsection (5)(a) is that a secured party who obtains control has priority over a secured party who does not have control. Thus, although filing is a permissible method of perfection, a secured party who perfects by filing takes the risk that the debtor has granted or will grant a security interest in the same property to another party who obtains control. See Comment 5.

The requirements for control with respect to security entitlements and securities accounts are set out in Sections 8-106(d) and 9-115(1)(e). There are two possibilities. First, Section 8-106(d)(1) provides that a secured party has control over a security entitlement if the secured party becomes the entitlement holder, that is, the position is transferred from debtor to secured party on the books of a securities intermediary. See Examples 1 and 2 in Comment 4 to Section 8-106. Second, Section 8-106(d)(2) provides that a secured party has control over a security entitlement if the securities intermediary agrees that it will comply with entitlement orders originated by the secured party without further consent by the debtor. See Example 3 in Comment 4 to Section 8-106. If the debtor, secured party, and issuer agree that the secured party has the right to direct the securities intermediary to dispose of the collateral without further action by the debtor, the secured party has control even though the debtor remains listed as the entitlement holder and continues to receive dividends and distributions. The secured party can obtain control even though the debtor is also allowed to continue to trade. See Section 8-106(f) and Comment 7 thereto. The three-party control agreement device is based on arrangements that have already developed in the securities business. Even under prior law, some securities brokers developed standard forms of such agreements. Note though that, as is the case with respect to issuers of uncertificated securities, there is no statutory requirement that securities intermediaries offer such control agreement arrangements.

Subsection (1)(e) provides that a secured party has control over a securities account if it has control over all security entitlements carried in the account. Thus, the rules in Section 8-106(d) on control with respect to security entitlements determine whether a secured party has control over a securities account. Control with respect to a securities account is defined in terms of obtaining control over the security entitlements simply for drafting convenience. Of course, an agreement that provides that the securities intermediary will honor instructions from the secured party concerning a securities account described as such is sufficient since such an agreement necessarily implies that the secured party has control over all security entitlements carried in the account.

If a customer borrows from its own securities intermediary, e.g., to purchase securities "on margin" or for other purposes, and grants a security interest to its intermediary, the intermediary has control. See Section 8-106(e). A securities firm could also provide control financing arrangements to its customers through a different legal entity than the securities intermediary itself, e.g., the securities trading, custody, and credit services might be provided by different corporate entities within the financial services firm's "family." So long as the agreement with the customer provides that the entity providing the custodial function (the "securities intermediary") will act on instructions received from entity providing the credit, the credit entity has control.

5. Priority Rules. Subsection (5) specifies the priority rules for conflicting security interests in the same investment property. Subsection (5)(a) states the most important general rule—that a secured party who obtains control has priority over a secured party who does not obtain control. The other priority rules, in subsections (5)(b) through (5)(e), deal with relatively unusual circumstances not covered by the control priority rule. Subsection (5)(f) provides that the general priority rules of Section 9-312 apply to cases not covered by the specific rules in subsection (5). The principal application of this residual rule is that the usual first in time of filing rule applies to conflicting security interests that are perfected* only by filing. Because the control priority rule of subsection (5)(a) provides for the ordinary cases in which persons purchase securities on margin credit from their brokers, there is no need for special rules for purchase money security interests. Accordingly, subsection (5)(f) provides that the purchase money priority rule of Section 9-312(4) does not apply to investment property.

The following examples illustrate the basic priority rules of this section:

Example 1. Debtor borrows from Alpha and grants Alpha a security interest in a variety of collateral, including all of Debtor's investment property. At that time Debtor owns 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock for which Debtor has a certificate. Alpha perfects by filing. Later, Debtor borrows from Beta and grants Beta a security interest in the 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock. Debtor delivers the certificate, properly indorsed, to Beta. Alpha and Beta both have perfected security interests in the XYZ Co. stock. Beta has control, see Section 8-106(b)(1), and hence has priority over Alpha.*

Example 2. Debtor borrows from Alpha and grants Alpha a security interest in a variety of collateral, including all of Debtor's investment property. At that time Debtor owns 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock, held through a securities account with Able & Co. Alpha perfects by filing. Later, Debtor borrows from Beta and grants Beta a security interest in the 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock. Debtor instructs Able to have the 1000 shares transferred through the clearing corporation to Custodian Bank, to be credited to Beta's account with Custodian Bank. Alpha and Beta both have perfected security interests in the XYZ Co. stock. Beta has control, see Section 8-106(d)(1), and hence has priority over Alpha.*

Example 3. Debtor borrows from Alpha and grants Alpha a security interest in a variety of collateral, including all of Debtor's investment property. At that time Debtor owns 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock, which is held through a securities account with Able & Co. Alpha perfects by filing. Later, Debtor borrows from Beta and grants Beta a security interest in the 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock. Debtor, Able, and Beta enter into an agreement under which Debtor will continue to receive dividends and distributions, and will continue to have the right to direct dispositions, but Beta will also have the right to direct dispositions and receive the proceeds. Alpha and Beta both have perfected security interests in the XYZ Co. stock. Beta has control, see Section 8-106(d)(2), and hence has priority over Alpha.*

Example 4. Debtor borrows from Alpha and grants Alpha a security interest in a variety of collateral, including all of Debtor's investment property. At that time Debtor owns 1000 shares of XYZ Co. stock, held through a securities account with Able & Co. Alpha perfects by filing. Debtor's agreement with Able & Co. provides that Able has a security interest in all securities carried in the account as security for any obligations of Debtor to Able. Debtor incurs obligations to Able and later defaults on the obligations to Alpha and Able. Able has control by virtue of the rule of Section 8-106(e) that if a customer grants a security interest to its own intermediary, the intermediary has control. Since Alpha does not have control, Able has priority over Alpha under the general control priority rule of subsection (5)(a).*
